You Can Dine Better At Home

One of the chefs in charge of our kitchens came from the Ritz in Paris.

One prepared rare dishes for the Carleton's guests in London.

Chefs like these create the tomato sauce that's baked with Van Camp's Pork and Beans.

To them is due its zest and flavor, its insidious blend.

But no hotel prepares this dish as we prepare it here.

We have steam-heated ovens, so the baking is done without bursting or crisping.

Our beans come out nut-like, mealy and whole.

And the sauce in our process is baked with the beans. In hotel methods that is impracticable.

Then chefs in hotels rarely get such materials.

Our tomatoes are all vine-ripened. Thus we get that sparkling zest.

The beans we use are picked out by hand, to get plump, fully-ripened beans, all of equal size.

Millions of bushels are used in bean baking which we would refuse in our kitchens.

Van Camp's BAKED WITH TOMATO SAUCE PORK AND BEANS

"The National Dish"

Thus we bring to your table the utmost in baked beans.

Made of the finest materials—baked in modern ovens—prepared by the rarest skill.

Under our methods, we bring it to you with all the oven freshness.

Nowhere in the world are better beans served than right on your own table — when you serve Van Camp's.

What a pity it is, when such beans are available, to serve something half as good.

Three sizes:
10, 15, and 20 cents per can

OUR CHINA FAMINE ORPHANS

DURING the last month we have received from our missionaries in China, representing a number of denominations, most encouraging reports of our Famine Orphan work. With the opening of the new era under the republic, brighter days have dawned for the missionaries and their little charges. They have been wonderfully protected and preserved during these times of trial and danger.

Of the original 2,000 orphans, many have now become self-supporting. Others will soon follow, and thus the problem, which our readers so generously undertook, will gradually reach its own solution. It has been a very precious privilege to many to be engaged in this orphan work and one that has brought much blessing. We are reminded by the letters of the missionaries that there is a considerable number of children unprovided with patrons, and we would cordially invite the co-operation of our readers in their behalf. Any member of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD Family can have an orphan assigned as his or her special protégé, or the reader may send a contribution in aid of the general orphan fund, which, with other similar gifts, will be employed to good advantage in supporting unassigned little ones. Here is an excellent opportunity for churches, Sunday schools, Epworth Leagues, Christian Endeavor Societies, Young People's Unions, Bible classes and other organizations to have a direct personal share in this beautiful work and to come into contact with the missionaries themselves by letter. All contributions should be addressed to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, Bible House, New York.

Four Little Chinese Orphans Who Are Without Support and for Whom Patrons Are Being Sought in America

At the present time, the following missionaries have under their care at the mission stations mentioned, the China orphans who are supported and trained by the generosity of CHRISTIAN HERALD patrons:

Missionary	Station	No. of Orphans
E. Abercrombie	Shanghai	86
Rev. J. C. Garritt	Nanking	62
Rev. G. A. Clayton	Hankow	21
A. Cameron	Changsha	15
C. Kupfer	Kiukiang	7
Rev. J. Judson	Hangchow	15
Rev. James Graham	Tsingkiangpu	47
Dr. Fitch	Shanghai	60
G. H. Malone	Nanking	95
Rev. G. Newell	Foochow	17
Rev. E. F. Knickerbocker	Ningpo	50
J. W. Bovyer	Chinkiang	63
Formerly Miss Ellmers	Antung	44
G. D. Schlosser	Tsingkiangpu	35

The missionaries below have also CHRISTIAN HERALD orphans at their various stations, but the reports showing the present numbers have not yet come to hand.

Mrs. Brewster, Hinghwa; Miss E. Butler, Nanking; Rev. H. Caldwell, Ngucheng; Rev. T. Grafton, Hsuchoufu; Rev. R. Wood, Ichang; Miss Jones, Sinchanghsin; Rev. G. Miner, Foochow (Inter.); Rev. G. Miner, Foochow (Meth.); Rev. E. Johnson, Saratsi; Rev. D. Richardson, Chinkiang; Rev. J. Schraa, Tsaohsien; Miss L. White, Nanking; Rev. C. Jensen, Sianfu.

The grand total of CHRISTIAN HERALD China orphans at the present time aggregates 1,200, the sexes being pretty evenly divided.

Some of the letters forwarded by the missionaries are extremely interesting. Allan Cameron, of the Changsha Mission, Hunan Province, one thousand miles in the interior, writes of the success of the work in that distant region. The children in his care are being taught practical things in addition to Gospel training. Missionary Schlosser of Tsingkiangpu has had in his district a sad experience with sickness (his work being in the heart of a famine belt) and with looting by the soldiers. Missionary Van Dyck of Nanling, Anhui Province, writes that his district has been a center for the refugees and destitute during the floods and the revolution. A large relief work was organized by the missionaries and helped thousands. Preaching has been followed by many conversions. Missionary Mary Stone of Kiukiang tells of busy days in hospital work and Sunday schools and Bible classes, and thanks American patrons for the help they have rendered. Miss Dieterle of the Door of Hope Mission, Shanghai, writes of several beautiful cases of child conversion. Her stories of the little Chinese maid, whose name translated means "True Influence," and of Ah Pao (the "Precious One") are charming and show how the love of God works even in the heart of a child. From the Scandinavian Mission in Shansi (where the missionaries faced great perils during the rebellion) comes a cheering letter of progress and restored safety and happiness. Missionary Bartel of Tsaohsien, in Shantung, reports how God's blessing has followed the work among the hundred orphans supported there by CHRISTIAN HERALD readers and expresses his own and his associates' gratitude for that help. Many of the children are being trained in useful trades in addition to school work. A number have gone out to work as messengers of salvation among their own people. This experience has been duplicated at many other missions, showing that the divine blessing is resting on the orphan work and making it a means of bringing many unto the kingdom who could not be reached otherwise.

A typical letter is that of Missionary S. E. Jones of the China Inland Mission at Sinchanghsien, who writes:

"Shong Seng Dong (a boy) is one of a large family which passed through a variety of misfortunes and became very poor. At first this little boy came to our school as a day pupil; but we had soon to take him in as a boarder and no one could be made responsible for the child's support. In 1909, when we heard of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD fund for destitute children, we sent the names of this boy and his brother and sister for help. Seng Dong is a bright, intelligent little fellow, and we believe he loves the Lord Jesus Christ and hope, after his education is completed, he will prove a capable young man at some trade or other. Many are the openings for young men in China these days, especially for those who know how to read and write English, also typing, etc.

"Shong Hyi Cing (a little girl) had lived with her grandmother, who desired the child to be educated and who spared no sacrifice toward that end. However, the old woman died, and little, homeless and friendless Hyi Cing became a protégée of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD fund. Hyi Cing is a good obedient child, and above the average of her age at her lessons. Just now she is at the Union School, Hangchow, and will remain there till her education is finished, and after that may come back to us to help in the school. Will the patron of this one case please accept special thanks through the medium of your paper? The child is thirteen years, and of fair size for that age.

"Shong Seng O is the younger brother and the youngest surviving child of this unfortunate family. He was kidnapped one day on the streets of Shanghai, and was found by a friend who turned up at the right moment, happening to be on business in that neighborhood. We were very glad to place his name on THE CHRISTIAN HERALD list for destitute children, for apart from this opportunity it is difficult to conjecture what would have become of Seng O. He is at school, and is bright at his lessons, and in his simple childlike manner we believe he loves the Saviour. The Chinese children develop much slower than Western children. Mission work needs patience above every other quality. We trust and pray that Seng O may turn out a good Christian.

"Li Ding Sing and Li Ding Sin are two children who were taken to our school when they scarcely knew where to get the next meal of rice. Their mother was on a sick-bed for about a year, and the father's wages not sufficient to cover one-tenth of the daily expenses. The grandfather, a drunkard, was unable to render any assistance. So, after some thought, we decided to have the children and train them, and later, as the children proved themselves to be worthy of help, we applied to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD Orphan Committee and now they have been with us for some years. If funds be forthcoming, we hope to continue to give them education that will fit them for the future. Ding Sin is a very good, obedient boy, and his little sister is usually called "the little saint," being thus styled for her good behavior."

Contributions to the China Orphan Fund should be addressed to the care of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, Bible House, New York. Every contribution, however small, will be duly acknowledged.

Candles which have been frozen will burn longer than those which have not. If candles are too large for the sockets for which they are intended, hold the ends in hot water for about one-quarter of a minute, then press into the sockets of the candle-holders. If, however, the old method of cutting away the ends is employed, be sure the shavings are kept. They are excellent for cleaning the top of the range. When the stove is warm, sprinkle with candle shavings, and as they melt, rub the stove with a rag. The rag will absorb most of the wax, but enough will remain on the stove to keep it from rusting. Candle ends are good for glue bottles; they will not stick fast, and there will be no trouble in taking them in and out

THE ART OF HOSPITALITY

BY MARGARET E. SANGSTER, JR.

The Successful Hostess

THE party was at its gayest; laughter vied with singing; many brightly hued flowers were in charming masses about the room, and all was happiness, and light, and color; that is, nearly all, for in one corner sat a little girl, a stranger. Nobody knew her, and, well, nobody wanted very much to know her, for she was neither pretty nor very smartly dressed. But the little girl (for she was proud, as every girl is) sat up very straight in her chair and tapped on the floor with her foot in time to the music, as if she were having a good time. But there was a red, red color on her cheeks, and the tears were just back of her eyelids, and there was a big, sore heartache under the simple little dress. And as the stunning, very popular girl who was giving the party walked by with an adoring masculine train, she cast an annoyed look at the little lonely girl, and said in a stage whisper:

"It certainly does worry me to see that girl sitting over there all alone. She should have stayed home if she didn't know any one. Why, the poor child hasn't talked to a soul to-night! You go over and sit down by her, Jimmy."

But the boy addressed laughed.

"Why, Helen, I'm too busy," he exclaimed; "I can't talk with her. She's an awful jay anyhow." And then in the whirl of small talk the little girl was forgotten again.

Now the girl that gave the party was pretty and charming, and, as any of her friends would tell you, "could talk the birds off the trees." And yet she was not a successful hostess, for she should have sacrificed a little bit of her own good time to make the evening just a trifle happier for her guest, even though that same guest was a dowdy, unimportant little stranger in the land. She could have brought her own friends up to the little girl in the beginning of the evening and introduced them; or, better still, she could have seated herself by her shy little friend and shared her own fun with her guest.

One Girl's Way

I once knew a hostess who gave glorious parties, with wonderful music, refreshments and flowers, that transformed her home into Titania's court. But when this girl entertained there was always a long row of bashful boys who sat alone on a window seat, afraid to speak to any girl. This went on for two evenings, but at the third party a halt was called and the girl tried a new plan. She would go up to some blushing, painfully embarrassed boy, and, showing him a book or a picture, would get him away from his mates. Then, after a little pleasant chat, she would leave him reassured and confident and quite equal to conversing with the young girl whom the thoughtful hostess would leave in her own place. So this girl's parties were always very successful, for every one had a marvelous time, even the girl herself; which sounds almost impossible unless you have tried her way. Her good time came to her because she knew that her guests were enjoying themselves.

False Pride

It is much easier to manage an afternoon tea, or sewing party, for there is always the chain that binds a group of girls: little, harmless, inconsequential gossip. Yet there is often some girl who sits alone and feels uncomfortable because she is not as well dressed as the rest, or for some other reason. But this situation can be conquered, for if the hostess will tell some little incident in which her friend has a place, or go over and sit near her, it will help to loosen the tension.

Occasionally we find another type: the girl who comes to a party prepared to make everybody uncomfortable. She will usually pick out one or two victims at the beginning of the evening, and will either hurl sarcasm in their direction, or ignore them. There are other girls who can go to a party and refuse to say a word. This kind should be put in a corner and left alone. For such conduct spoils the nicest gathering and ruffles the temper of the most angelic hostess.

A girl once said to me: "It is a thankless job, this giving of parties. I never enjoy myself, and I am sure that nine-tenths of my guests have a pretty uninteresting time!"

"My dear," I said to her, "it is your own fault. You don't expect to have a good time, and that is probably why you and your friends are bored. Why not try the plan of a lady I know who assures me that when she gives a party she is so sure that she will have a good time that she feels happy before it begins, and by the time all of the guests have assembled, everybody feels glad with her, for happiness is the most contagious disease."

Another acquaintance—a quiet and plain-looking girl—has a wonderful faculty for making people enjoy themselves while they are in her home. She will sit down in front of a sad-eyed girl and have her laughing before an ordinary mortal would have had time to say a word. And she can listen to the most sleepy, unexciting narrative with a smile in her eyes and her homely face all lit up. I once heard a friend talking to her in a very serious vein.

"Mary," said the friend, "you must be an awful hypocrite. You act as if you are interested in stories that would bore me to tears; and, best of all, the uninteresting teller of tales thinks that you are enjoying yourself."

But the girl opened her rather nondescript eyes very wide. "I do enjoy myself," she said, "I do have a lovely time! I put myself in the place of the persons talking and try to see things from their point of view. Why, I am never bored to death!"

And there she struck the secret of the whole thing. For the death of popularity is boredom, and the keynote of success is interest in humanity.

HOUSEHOLD HINTS

To avoid the pale, doughy appearance of bakestuffs, either purchase black tins or put new, bright tins in the oven and let them burn until dark. New, bright tins reflect the heat instead of transmitting it, and are therefore the frequent cause of spoiling good bread, cake and pie.

The old method of bleaching mildewed materials by soaking in cold buttermilk has met with some success, but if the articles to be bleached are boiled in the buttermilk for ten minutes, then well rinsed in plain warm water, and hung out to dry in the sun, the result will be far more satisfactory.

It frequently happens that a school teacher wishes a blackboard drawing to remain in good condition for several weeks. This object is made possible by carefully going over the chalk lines with an inexpensive water-color paint, called Chinese white. While the drawing will not then rub away, it can be washed off with plain water whenever desired.

For years and years manufacturers have been trying to perfect a cooking product that would take the place of butter and lard in so satisfactory a way that the most particular cooks would use it. The purpose seems to have been accomplished. Not only housewives, but hotel chefs, teachers and restaurant cooks are reporting entirely satisfactory results with some of the new products.

DAILY MEDITATION
FOR EVERY DAY IN THE YEAR
BY REV. J. H. JOWETT, D. D.

SUNDAY, March 2. 1 Kings 8: 54-61. "There hath not failed one word of all his good promise." Supposing one word had failed, how then? If one golden promise had turned out to be counterfeit, how then? If the ground had yielded anywhere we should have been fearful and suspicious at every part of the road. If the bell of God's fidelity had been broken anywhere the music would have been destroyed. But not one word has failed. The road has never given way in time of flood. Every bell of heaven is perfectly sound, and the music is full and glorious. "God is faithful, who also will do it."

"God is love," and "love never faileth." The lamp will not die out at the midnight. The fountain will not fail us in the wilderness. The consolations will not be wanting in the hour of our distresses. Love will have "all things ready." "He has promised, and shall he not do it?" All the powers of heaven are pledged to the fulfilment of the smallest word of grace. We can never be deserted! "God cannot deny himself." Every word of his will unburden its treasure at the appointed hour, and I shall be rich with the strength of my God.

MONDAY, March 3. Genesis 19: 1-3, 12-16. "And there came two angels to Sodom at even." And God's angels always come to warn us of the deadliness of sin. Destruction never takes place without warning. There are danger signals all along the way. The angel-presence is never far away. Conscience is one of the Lord's angels. He speaks to us every day. When we turn into the field of trespass he raises his warning voice. When the boat of our life is being steered or is drifting towards perilous rocks, his bell rings out across the deceptive waters. "Thine ears shall hear a voice behind thee saying, This is the way, walk ye in it."

And the angel-presence sometimes uses the lips of wise and experienced friends. He uses their knowledge for our wisdom. Their mistakes become our counselors. Their costly disasters are turned into the guardians of our safety. When experience speaks to us of its findings, and tells us plainly of our perils, and of "the wages of sin," it is the voice of God's angel, and it is our infinite wisdom to heed it.

But, indeed, everything which turns our minds away from carnal and worldly feasts, and points us to "the lily-land of peace" and "the river of his pleasures," is the ambassador and messenger of the most high God. Every sign-post pointing to "heavenly places in Christ Jesus" bears the seal and superscription of God.

TUESDAY, March 4. Genesis 19: 17-29. "It came to pass, when God destroyed the cities of the plain, that God remembered Abraham." Our imagination too often blinds us, and plunges our remembrances into darkness. Our fire is unclean and therefore unjust. It destroys valuable treasure. It blazes against the innocent. But God's indignation is clean and clear. When he destroyed the cities he remembered Abraham. "God is mindful of his own, he remembereth his children." The fires of judgment are not erratic, devouring here and there and everywhere like a prairie fire. The fire obeys his word. Every flame is guided by his holy decree. "There's a kindness in his justice."

And in what way did the Lord remember Abraham? By sending Lot "out of the midst of the overthrow." One man's safety was built out of another man's holiness. "No man liveth to himself." Tens of thousands of men are at this moment surrounded by invisible defenses because of their mothers' prayers. We never know through what channels God's grace is brought to us. We never know in what garden the seeds have been born which have brought such beautiful flowers to our door. One man is faithful, and the blessings fall upon many.

WEDNESDAY, March 5. Genesis 18: 16-22. We cannot sin in secret. Every wrong has its own cry and sounds in the ears of our God. "The voice of thy brother's blood crieth to me from the ground." "The cry of Sodom and Gomorrah is great." Nothing is silent. Everything makes sweet music or harsh discord. Everything has a voice and God hears it! What does he hear from my life? Is it the awful cry of sin, or the harmony of holiness? Does it jar in the heavenly places, or does it blend with all the gladsome sounds of "the isles of the blest"?

God hears the cry of wrong. And we, too, if we shared his nature, would share his hearing. We are deaf and therefore we are heedless. And we are deaf because our hearts are numb in prayerlessness and ingratitude. There is a cry from the Congo and we do not hear it! There is a cry from Armenia! There is a cry from the children of disadvantage scattered throughout our own land! But the disciples of the Lord are "sickly, and not a few sleep."

O Lord, open thou our ears! O Lord, open thou our hearts!

THURSDAY, March 6. Genesis 18: 23-33. "I will not destroy it for ten's sake." Which means that ten righteous men may provide the holy leaven which will eventually save a city. The great Word teaches me the tremendous power of a consecrated life. It teaches me the immeasurable moral energy of a consecrated church. Dr. Arnold of Rugby used to say that if only the Sixth Form were pure and true he had no fears for the school. The school was safe when the Sixth Form was loyal! One fine Christian in a workshop can save it from becoming a Sodom and Gomorrah! One good ventilator can save the atmosphere in a big room from pollution.

It is therefore infinitely wise to have a great confidence in the saving contagion of the individual soul. Let us not "limit the Holy One of Israel." One devoted disciple of Christ in the family may gradually win the entire circle to the life of faith. It is perfectly certain that one soul may be a protective rampart for many souls against the destructive plague of the evil one. A little prayer meeting may send currents of heavenly grace around the world.

FRIDAY, March 7. Psalm 1. "The way of the ungodly shall perish." There is nothing breaks up more speedily than a badly made road. Every season is its enemy and works for its destruction. Fierce heat and intensest cold both strive for its undoing. And "the way of the ungodly" is an appallingly bad road. There is rottenness in its foundations, and there is

They have said all along that it couldn't be done; but here it is—a thoroughly practical Roadster car, at a price that brings it right home to the average man of ordinary means.

You have been waiting for your car until the automobile emerged from the luxury class and took its place among the economical conveniences.

Here is your opportunity.

In placing on the market the METZ "SPECIAL" at the phenomenally low price of $445 we wish particularly to emphasize the fact that this innovation has been brought about solely by systematized and economical manufacturing, in conjunction with what is probably the lowest possible percentage of overhead costs.

The METZ "SPECIAL" is a completely equipped, fully guaranteed car, 22½ horse power, four-cylinder water-cooled motor, high tension ignition system, with Bosch magneto. Standard artillery wheels, best quality clincher tires, extension top, wind shield, five lamps, gas generator, horn, pumps, tools, etc. Will travel 5 to 50 miles per hour, climbs hills as fast as any regular stock car made, and is the most economical car on the market to operate.

Our $495 model provides for a rumble seat, has a larger body, and other features that make it as remarkable an automobile opportunity as the $445.

MR. ARTHINGTON'S GREAT GIFT

THE greatest individual gift for the propagation of the Gospel which the world has ever known has lately been announced. It comes from the estate of Robert Arthington, of Leeds, Yorkshire, England, who died recently and who by his will bequeathed one million pounds sterling for the spread of the Word of God in those heathen lands where it is not now preached or circulated. This amazing bequest will be administered by two large organizations, the London Missionary Society (Congregationalist) and the Church Mission Society (Evangelical), both of England.

One of the few Americans personally acquainted with Mr. Arthington is the Rev. George F. Herrick, who has spent many years in the foreign mission field. Several years ago Mr. Herrick, while in England visited Mr. Arthington at his home in the outlying residential section of Leeds. The Arthington homestead was an old castle-looking building, and the surroundings bore a general air of neglect. The visitor knocked at the door of the rather dilapidated structure, and a man whom he took to be a servant opened in response.

Mr. Herrick said he wished to see Mr. Arthington, and the man, with a smile, said that he was that gentleman and invited the stranger into a rather gloomy room, which seemed sadly uncared for. Mr. Arthington dusted a chair for his guest, and the two sat down and talked.

Mr. Arthington, who had the air of a recluse, said that he had given much thought to the subject of the world's evangelization. He had felt that the Christian world had still a duty to perform in carrying out the "Great Commission" imposed by the Saviour upon his followers. He had considered very carefully his plans for working out his conception of what God wanted him to do with the means of which He had made him a steward.

"We must proclaim the Gospel to all men, whether they hear or whether they forbear," was the emphatic declaration of Mr. Arthington. He went on to say that, in spite of all that missionary societies were doing, there were many tribes and peoples still outside the boundaries of organized Gospel effort. His plan included much more than the mere education of natives of the tribes he wished to benefit; he desired them to become in reality missionaries of the Cross. First, he would make sure that all the unevangelized were reached with the Gospel, and then the development of these neglected people could proceed on spiritual lines.

"I am interested," he said, "in sending the message of life to all the people who have never yet been reached; that is my aim—to direct all energies so that we may proclaim the message to those people." He spoke of Bokhara and other sections in the heart of central Asia, as greatly in need of such evangelization. Nobody had yet gone to help those unenlightened peoples. He felt keenly the responsibility of his own possessions and wished to employ them wisely for the glory of God.

Now that he has passed away, one cannot help thinking of this strange man, who, in order that he might mature his plans, practically lived like a hermit, serving himself with his own hands, and daily asking for divine guidance in his great project to hasten the evangelization of the world. The conditions on which Mr. Arthington leaves his fortune to the two missionary societies are twofold:

First, that the fund is to be expended exclusively for the benefit of the heathen lands now unevangelized, and no other; and Second, that the Gospels of Matthew and Luke and the Acts of the Apostles are to be translated and printed in all the languages necessary to reach those unevangelized races who have not yet had the Gospel, either through missionaries or through the printed page. At the present time the unevangelized sections include Tibet, a fringe of whose borders has just been touched by the Gospel; a large section of western China, where there are millions yet unreached; Turkestan, with multitudes unevangelized; central Arabia, with many tribes awaiting enlightenment; Kurdistan, where very little Gospel work has yet been done; Beluchistan; the tribes of the Sahara; the heathen of central Africa and the unevangelized tribes of Central and South America.

There is a great deal of work to be done before this can be accomplished, but the royal gift of Mr. Arthington will make it a practicable possibility, although it will be a labor of years. Meanwhile, the whole missionary world, as well as God's people at home, will rejoice in his generous gift.

built into it "wood, and hay, and stubble." How can it stand? "The spirit of the Lord breatheth upon it," and it is surely brought to nought. All the forces of holiness are pledged to its destruction, and they shall pick it to pieces, and shall scatter its elements to the winds.

"I am the way!" That road remains sound "in all generations." Changing circumstances cannot affect its stability. It is proof against every tempest, and against the most violent heat. It is a road in which little children can walk in happiness, and in which old people can walk in peace. It is firm in the day of life, and it is absolutely sure in the hour of death. It never yields! "Thou hast set my feet upon a rock and hast established my goings." "This is the way, walk ye in it."

SATURDAY, March 8. Luke 17: 22-32. In a certain very real way the Lord is coming every moment. And the great art of Christian living is to be able to discern him when he arrives. He may appear as the village carpenter: or we may "suppose him to be one of the gardeners": and we may mistake his appearing! He may meet us in some lowly duty, or in some seemingly unpleasant task. He may shine in the cheeriness of some triumph, or whisper to us in a message of good news. "I come again." And if our eyes are open we shall see him coming continually. It is by this perception that the value of our life is measured and weighed.

But he will also come again "suddenly," when the soul will be translated into unknown climes; he will come again in the sable robes of death. Shall we know him! Will our eyes be so keen and true that we shall be able to pierce the dark veil and say, "It is the Lord!"? This has been the joyful experience of countless multitudes. When the summons came their souls went forth, not as victims to encounter death, but as the bride "to meet the bridegroom!" They had intimacy with him in life: they had glorious fellowship with him in death!

The Daily Meditations will appear in each issue through 1913.

A NEW RAID ON THE NATIONAL FORESTS

HON. GIFFORD PINCHOT, President of the National Conservation Association, sounds the alarm over a dangerous movement which is fully explained in his letter below:

"Again I am impelled to ask your strong help through THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. A movement is afoot to break down the whole national forest system by turning the national forests over to the States. I am enclosing two statements regarding it, and a copy of our last report to the members which touches on it in part, with the hope that these papers may be of help in refreshing your mind on the subject.

"Turning the national forests over to the States means turning them over to the interests, as well as making the administration of a great national resource impossible with benefit to the whole people. Anything you can do to make plain the situation will be helpful in the highest sense. We cannot be fully informed in advance as to just when this movement will come to a head in Congress; but there is abundant evidence that, from this time on, the passage of such legislation will be a constant and pressing danger. Bills have been introduced during the present Congress with this end in view. GIFFORD PINCHOT."

In the documents forwarded by Mr. Pinchot it is shown that the national forests contain nearly one-fifth of the standing timber of the United States, protect the headwaters of every important Western river, and for a part of each year support one-half the sheep and nearly one-tenth of the cattle on the Western range. Upon their wise use and the perpetuation of their timber resource largely depends the welfare of manufacturing, mining, farming, trading, and transportation interests, and of the lumber-using and wood-consuming public. With effective water conservation is bound up the welfare of irrigation farming in the arid and semi-arid States. With national forest range control is bound up the welfare not only of the stockmen whose use of open winter range is conditioned upon summer feed for their sheep and cattle in the mountains, but also the welfare of the farmers whose forage and grain crops can often go to market profitably only in the form of beef and mutton.

Our national forests are administered at a present cost to the government of about $5,000,000 gross or $3,000,000 net. The purpose is the protection of both timber and land, as valuable public property; an increased yield of water, wood, and forage; the permanent improvement of the forests, and the increase of all legitimate uses to which they can be put.

The great fight in the near future will be to hold what conservation has already won. This fight will center around the national forests and all they contain, but it is exceedingly likely that it will also involve the attempt to cede not only the national forests but the whole public domain to the Western States. The movement to accomplish this result is organized, alert and active. Its avowed object is to turn the national forests over to the States.

Such a step would involve waste of money and effort, and would impair the usefulness of the forests to the people. The States, so far as they have performed a similar task in the past, the conservation report asserts, have done it in the main incompetently, or "what is much more serious, not with an eye single to the public interest."

The statement furnished by Mr. Pinchot concludes: "So far, the men who stand behind this movement to turn the national forests over to the States are, with rare exceptions, men who have the welfare of the special interests first in mind."

What and Why is the Internal Bath?

By C. Gilbert Percival, M.D.

THOUGH many articles have been written and much has been said recently about the Internal Bath, the fact remains that a great amount of ignorance and misunderstanding of this new system of Physical Hygiene still exists.

And inasmuch as it seems that Internal Bathing is even more essential to perfect health than External Bathing, I believe that everyone should know its origin, its purpose and its action beyond the possibility of a misunderstanding.

Its great popularity started at about the same time as did what are probably the most encouraging signs of recent times—I refer to the appeal for Optimism, Cheerfulness, Efficiency and those attributes which go with them and which, if steadily practiced, will make our race not only the despair of nations competitive to us in business, but establish us as a shining example to the rest of the world in our mode of living.

These new daily "Gospels," as it were, had as their inspiration the ever present unconquerable American Ambition, for it had been proven to the satisfaction of all real students of business that the most successful man is he who is sure of himself—who is optimistic, cheerful, and impresses the world with the fact that he is supremely confident always—for the world of business has every confidence in the man who has confidence in himself.

If our outlook is optimistic, and our confidence strong, it naturally follows that we inject enthusiasm, "ginger," and clear judgment into our work, and have a tremendous advantage over those who are at times more or less depressed, blue, and nervously fearful that their judgment may be wrong — who lack the confidence that comes with the right condition of mind and which counts so much for success.

Now the practice of Optimism and Confidence has made great strides in improving and advancing the general efficiency of the American, and if the mental attitude necessary to its accomplishment were easy to secure, complete success would be ours.

Unfortunately, however, our physical bodies have an influence on our mental attitude, and in this particular instance, because of a physical condition which is universal, these much-to-be-desired aids to success are impossible to consistently enjoy.

In other words our trouble, to a great degree, is physical first and mental afterwards—this physical trouble is simple and very easily corrected. Yet it seriously affects our strength and energy, and if it is allowed to exist too long becomes chronic and then dangerous.

Nature is constantly demanding one thing of us, which, under our present mode of living and eating, it is impossible for us to give—that is, a constant care of our diet, and enough consistent physical work or exercise to eliminate all waste from the system.

If our work is confining, as it is in almost every instance, our systems cannot throw off the waste except according to our activity, and a clogging process immediately sets in.

This waste accumulates in the colon (lower intestine), and is more serious in its effect than you would think, because it is intensely poisonous, and the blood circulating through the colon absorbs these poisons, circulating them through the system and lowering our vitality generally.

That's the reason that biliousness and its kindred complaints make us ill "all over." It is also the reason that this waste, if permitted to remain a little too long, gives the destructive germs, which are always present in the blood, a chance to gain the upper hand, and we are not alone inefficient, but really ill—seriously sometimes, if there is a local weakness.

This accumulated waste has long b recognized as a menace, and Physici Physical Culturists, Dietitians, Os paths and others have been c stantly laboring to perfect a method removing it, and with partial and tem rary success.

It remained, however, for a new, ratic and perfectly natural process to fin and satisfactorily solve the problem how to thoroughly eliminate this wa from the colon without strain or unnatu forcing—to keep it sweet and clean a healthy and keep us correspondi bright and strong—clearing the blood the poisons which made it and us slugg and dull spirited, and making our en organism work and act as Nature intenc it should.

That process is Internal Bathing w warm water—and it now, by the way, l the endorsements of the most enlighter Physicians, Physical Culturists, Ost paths, etc., who have tried it and seen results.

Heretofore it has been our habit, wh we have found, by disagreeable, a sometimes alarming symptoms, that t waste was getting much the better of to repair to the drugshop and obtain rel through drugging.

This is partly effectual, but there a several vital reasons why it should not our practice as compared with Intern Bathing.

Drugs force nature instead of assisti her—Internal Bathing assists Nature a is just as simple and natural as washi one's hands.

Drugs, being taken through the stomac sap the vitality of other functions befc they reach the colon, which is not call for — Internal Bathing washes out t colon and reaches nothing else.

To keep the colon consistently cle drugs must be persisted in, and to effective the doses must be increase Internal Bathing is a consistent treatme and need never be altered in any way be continuously effective.

No less an authority than Profess Alonzo Clark, M.D., of the New Yo College of Physicians and Surgeons, say All of our curative agents are poisons, ar as a consequence every dose diminish the patient's vitality.

It is rather remarkable to find, at wh would seem so comparatively late a da so great an improvement on the o methods of Internal Bathing, as this ne process, for in a crude way it has, course, been practiced for years.

It is probably no more surprising, hov ever, than the tendency on the part of th Medical Profession to depart further an further from the custom of using drug and accomplish the same and better r sults by more natural means: causing le strain on the system and leaving no ev after effects.

Doubtless you, as well as all America men and women, are interested in know ing all that may be learned about keepin up to "concert pitch," and always feelin bright and confident.

This improved system of Internal Bath ing is naturally a rather difficult subjec to cover in detail in the public press, bu there is a Physician who has made thi his life's study and work, who has writte an interesting book on the subject calle "The What, The Why, The Wa of the Internal Bath." This he wi send on request to anyone addressin Charles A. Tyrrell, M.D., at 134 Wes 65th Street, New York, and mention ing that they have read this in TH CHRISTIAN HERALD.

It is surprising how little is known b the average person on this subject, whic has so great an influence on the genera health and spirits.

My personal experience and my ob servation make me very enthusiastic o Internal Bathing, for I have seen its re sults in sickness as in health, and I firml believe that everybody owes it to himself if only for the information available, t read this little book by an authority on the subject.—Advertisement.

To the First Thousand Women who purchase this new B-B Refill Mop through their dealer or through us direct, we will make a most exceptional offer.

The B-B Mop is the only mop manufactured under a United States Patent for a process that precludes all possibility of spontaneous combustion.

A Perfected Dustless Mop and Floor Polisher that never has to be oiled or treated—always ready

The B-B is a dry mop which has been chemically treated so that it absorbs every speck of dust it touches and leaves the floor beautifully polished.

The dust can only be removed by washing the mop in warm water. The mop is perfectly dry and can be used on wall paper or delicate rugs and draperies without injuring them in the least. It will not dull varnish nor injure a wax finish. You do not have to apply oil—the B-B is always ready for instant use and retains its full efficiency until the yarn is actually worn out. Then all you have to do is to unscrew one cap, draw out the old mop and insert a new filler. The holder is made of solid steel and will never wear out nor break. The handle cannot work loose. The ends of holder are rubber, which prevents injury to furniture. This Perfected Mop solves the problem of caring for hardwood floors, whether varnished or waxed. It cleans them perfectly, removing every particle of dust, and leaves a fine polish. Over one million women are daily using B-B Dustless Mops, Dust Cloths, Utility Brushes, Broom Covers and other B-B Dustless Specialties.

THE FATE OF A BAD CITY

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON BY DR. AND MRS. WILBUR F. CRAFTS

THE International Lesson Committee have wisely designated this as the temperance lesson among the Genesis studies because alcohol in modern municipal life is chief among the vices. The most significant thing in the Bible about Sodom is the word of Jesus (Matt. 11: 23) that cities less openly immoral which have rejected his social teachings are more guilty.

Let us consider, first, the story of Lot as an individual warning; and, second, the story of Sodom as a call to cure "the shame of our cities." That Noah and Lot both "erred through wine" when there were as yet no stronger drinks and no adulterations and no barrooms is a loud call to modern church members to "touch not the unclean thing," which made Noah and Lot "unclean" in the sight of their own families and of the whole world.

President Charles W. Eliot of Harvard University at seventy years of age has abandoned his life-long defense of moderate drinking as a gentleman's right, and now proclaims that in the light of modern proof of the disturbing effect on the brain of even a little of the purest wine or beer, it is "inexpedient" for any one to drink at all. It is strange that common sense did not teach that centuries ago to everybody that ever heard or read the story of Noah and Lot. "Wine is a mocker" indeed, or it could never again have fooled great or good men after those early experiments. Wine led righteous men into most unrighteous conduct by its normal and usual effect upon their powers. In the face of such facts, intoxicating liquors are still used by thousands in the United States and by millions in other lands.

The Sunday school army of sixteen millions is the greatest reinforcement in sight for the temperance war, in which the battle of West Virginia has been the only great victory, amid many defeats, for two years past. To our wavering temperance lines it is like Blücher's coming into Waterloo, if all national temperance organizations and church federations will unitedly use this great opportunity to rally churches not alone against saloons but against the drinking usages.

Unquestionably we have depended too much upon mere legislation. Education is the other oar, which, failing to pull strongly, we have been going round and round from "license" to "no license," and from "no license" back to "license," instead of forward to a diminished consumption of liquors. When we get a "no license" or prohibition law we have not done enough educational work in Sunday schools and public schools and out of school to get a good enforcement of the law and an increased number of abstainers, which last is the real goal. The law aims only, as the term "no license" implies, to close barrooms. Moral education should follow to convince every one of the mistake of intemperance. Good generalship should prompt pastors and superintendents to see that this lesson is taught.

* QUARTERLY TEMPERANCE LESSON, March 9, 1913. Destruction of Sodom, Gen. 19: 1-3, 12-29. GOLDEN TEXT: "Come out from among them and be ye separate, saith the Lord, and touch not the unclean thing." II Cor. 6: 17.

Let us now consider the lesson story as it relates to city problems. To a parent, the very first "city problem" should be, Shall I take the risk of rearing my children in a wicked city? That is where Lot made the supreme mistake that made his family a failure, and his own life hardly less. No one would have thought he was entitled to be called righteous if a merciful God, who does not quench the "smoking flax," had not found a little light in the black smoke of his selfishness and sin.

The first reference to Lot in the Bible tells us he was the nephew of Abraham; that, with his uncle, he left his idolatrous country to go to "the land of promise" (Gen. 11: 31, 32; 12: 5). Each had great flocks, and when their shepherds quarreled over the best pasture land, Abraham, who had the senior's and leader's right to the best, magnanimously gave Lot the choice, which he, in an opposite spirit, accepted (Gen. 13: 5-13). Lot chose the section nearest Sodom, no doubt knowing the moral risk to his household of living so near a wicked city. He considered only the financial advantages, among which was the prospect of getting a good price for his milk and butter and cheese from his city neighbors. For such reasons he "pitched his tent at Sodom." He was soon in the city and became so much like his bad neighbors that he did not convert even one of them. One earnest man has often awakened a whole city to better things, but Sodom had no such leader.

For Abraham's sake more than Lot's God revealed his plans to Abraham, who prayed not only that Lot might be saved but also that Sodom might be spared (Gen. 18: 20-33). The most significant thing about that prayer is that God consented to save Sodom if there were ten righteous people in it, and there were not so many. This suggests what has often proved true—that ten earnest, fearless people can reform a wicked city. Indeed, one fearless leader, awakening the consciences of others, has often turned a city from a downward to an upward path.

Then came the flight of Lot and his household from the city to which God brought the fire of it judgment day. Lot's wife, disobediently lingering and looking back, suffered the fate of those found in the ruins of Pompeii, encrusted with the salin matter of the eruption—a picture through the age of those who start to "flee from the wrath to come," but fail to escape because their hearts stay behind.

The supreme teaching of the lesson is the powe of social environment. We should select for our families, if possible, a town or city where evils have been reduced to their lowest terms. And if we must go to some other city, let us be of those who shall ceaselessly strive to better it, to be of the "ten" that can save it. Never was there more encouragement to work for a better municipal life. Sodom would have repented if it had had such encouragements as every city has to-day in the victories that Christian citizenship has won elsewhere.

A shy boy of seventeen left home for college. He boarded a crowded train and found no place except in the smoking car. Three other young fellows, occupying two seats turned together, offered him the remaining place. Learning that he was on his way to their own college, they welcomed him, and offered him a drink from their own bottle by way of friendliness. "No, thank you," he said; but he told me afterward it was not so easy to say. A little later and the cigarettes appeared, and were offered. "No, thank you," he said again; harder still to say it this time. "You don't drink?" inquired one young fellow. "No," said the boy. "And you don't smoke?" inquired the acquaintance loud enough to call everybody's attention to the group. "No. I don't care for smoking," said the country lad. "Well, say, now," inquired the acquaintance, "you say you don't smoke and you don't drink. Do you eat hay?" The shy country fellow tried to keep from embarrassment, but replied that he didn't care for hay. "Well, then," announced the other loud enough to be heard all over the car, "here's a chap that don't smoke and don't drink and don't eat hay. I tell you, my friend," he concluded, "you're company for neither man nor beast." And with that he turned his back on the lad and puffed his cigarette.

When he told this he said nobody knew how hard it seemed to him to think he would have to face this sort of thing if he were to stand true to his principles throughout college life. But he did stand true, though standing true meant standing alone many a time and facing those hardest of things—ridicule and loneliness. A hero he was, nothing less.

FOR THE SAKE OF THE CHILDREN.—At the Denver International Christian Endeavor Convention, a tipsy fellow said to a young man wearing the convention badge: "What are you fellows trying to do? You are hot on temperance, I hear. Do you think you could make a temperance man of me?" Looking him over, the delegate replied: "No, we probably couldn't do much with you, but we are after your boy." The toper replied seriously: "Well, I guess you have the right of it. If some one had been after me when I was a boy, I should be a better man to-day."

THE CITIES OF THE PLAIN

From the picture by Edward Armitage, R.A.

"And Abraham gat up early in the morning to the place where he stood before the Lord, and he looked toward Sodom and Gomorrah, and toward all the land of the plain, and beheld, and, lo, the smoke of the country went up as the smoke of a furnace."—Gen. 19: 27, 28.

OUR SUNDAY SCHOOL SUPERINTENDENTS' ROUND TABLE

—"BEING A READER of the Sunday school page in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD and superintendent of a country Sunday school, I am very much interested in your work. I would thank you to write me where I can get or have sent to me a catalogue of books for teachers, as I see given in the Superintendents' Round Table in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD of January 8. I would like to get some of these books in our Sunday school library."—George D. M., Tennessee.

THIS is a wise superintendent trying to improve the quality of his Sunday school teachers. They should certainly learn as well as public school teachers do. Their methods should be as attractive, as interesting, and as stimulating to thought as are the methods of public school teachers. "They should even better because they have a better book to teach," as says the President of Columbia College, New York City. We recommend this superintendent and all other superintendents to send to the International Sunday School Association, Mallers' Building, Chicago, for a copy of Teacher Training Leaflet No. 1, which contains a list of books for teachers, which should all, or in part, be placed in every Sunday school library. These books will open the way for a teachers' training class, which should be a part of every Sunday school.

—"CAN YOU HELP me in some way in my effort to prepare a talk on the quarter's lessons?"—M. T.

If you desire to prepare a talk for teachers to help them in giving the Review, divide your talk into two parts: 1, Reasons for a review; 2, Practical plans for conducting a review. As for the reasons: a teacher cannot be sure that anything has been learned until it has been reviewed. Pupils must be able to talk about what they have learned, therefore there should be a review at the close of each lesson every Sunday: that will be the best preparation for a Quarterly Review. The weekly review will keep up the continuous line of Bible study, and also insure intelligent study of the lesson. The Quarterly Review emphasizes and lays upon the scholars the importance of remembering what they are taught. As to methods: A favorite and simple way to review a quarter's lessons is to draw a shelf of books on the blackboard, one for each lesson, with the subject of the lesson written on the back of each book as a title. Let us see what we found in Vol. I. The story of Creation. There were seven chapters in the book. What was each one about? In which chapter did we find pictures of the sun, moon and stars? In which one birds and fishes? In which one, the sky? etc. To draw each book in large size as spread open, making a few sketchy drawings or even pinning on pictures cut from the large picture roll, would add much to the interest. In reviewing older scholars, or adult classes, assignments might be made one or even two weeks ahead, for short sketches to be written of the different lessons, to be read as a part of the Review, or better still, to be given as short talks by the members. When there is a general review for the whole school it will be found a good plan to have each lesson assigned to one class, whose members will be expected to make it interesting to all in the school.

Let the Golden Texts of the quarter be recited by a line of individuals in turn, and repeated by the school in unison.

Let superintendents help to make the Round Table interesting by sending questions to W. F. Crafts, 206 Pennsylvania Avenue, S. E., Washington, D. C.

GLOBE-CIRCLING WITH MRS. CATT

MRS. CARRIE CHAPMAN CATT is the first round-the-world woman suffrage missionary. She is the first world's evangelist of woman's political equality. During her globe-encircling tour of 1911-12, as president of the World's Woman Suffrage Alliance (in which twenty-eight countries are now represented), Mrs. Catt has visited three continents and has planted the nuclei of Women's Enfranchisement Groups in a dozen nations. One of these new national organizations of suffragists was formed in the Holy Land, where Mrs. Catt saw quaintly garbed farmers in the fields, plowing sometimes with camels, sometimes with donkeys, and always with an archaic, single-handed plow; modern Davids with picturesque coats, tending their flocks; and present-day Rebekahs, graceful and lithe, with water jars on their heads, but with their faces much tattooed, hair unkempt, and garments distressingly dirty. It was in Jerusalem that the National Woman Suffrage Society was organized, which means the seeking of enlarged opportunity and higher standards of living for women throughout the Holy Land.

In Egypt Mrs. Catt found customs prevalent regarding women which could scarcely be more destructive of those qualities that lead to progress or more certain to bring a race to a standstill. As a rule there is no family life among the masses, and superstitions of the grossest kind are entertained. The wives are not permitted to eat at the same table with their husbands, and occupy a pitiful position as chattels bought and paid for, being in constant dread of the disgrace of divorce, which may be arbitrarily imposed. Among the more intelligent women the movement for political equality has been eagerly received, and it is expected that the new Suffrage Association of Egypt will become a strong and influential group.

It was a great surprise to Mrs. Catt on her arrival in Rangoon, the metropolis of Burma, to find that women in Burma have had the municipal vote for years. Parsee, Hindu, Mohammedan, Chinese and Buddhist women are alike on the electors' rolls and actually vote. The Burmese women have been in complete enjoyment of the right to control their own property from time immemorial; men and women are equal under the law; and here, as in many other of Great Britain's overseas dominions, the result is greater domestic happiness.

Mrs. Carrie Chapman Catt

President World's Woman Suffrage Alliance

Mrs. Catt was in South Africa three months, during which the suffrage message was presented to forty different assemblies, closing with a delegated convention of suffragists (the first in South Africa), at which a Union Suffrage Association was formed. In the Transvaal, the Orange Free State, and Cape Colony, women already have municipal suffrage, and Mrs. Catt found many sympathizing American missionaries during her four-thousand mile journey in South Africa, doing their utmost to educate, civilize, and uplift the black people. Five weeks were spent in the Philippines, visiting Cebu, Iloilo, the Island of Luzon, and the city of Manila, which Mrs. Catt declared could teach New York how to be sanitary, the big native markets being faultlessly clean and every bit of food properly protected.

En route to Ceylon and India, suffrage meetings were held on shipboard. In India they found that the question of woman suffrage had developed from a mere theory to a living thought, and that suffrage clubs are constantly increasing in size and importance. In several parts of India, in Bombay and elsewhere, the women vote in municipal elections. The native women of Java share the small amount of political power vested in the men.

In China Mrs. Catt found that the recognition of women under the new republic was not what she had understood it to be. Enfranchisement of women upon the same terms as men has not been granted by the leaders in the Chinese republic, as generally reported. The women revolutionists aided the men to overthrow the Manchu dynasty with the understanding that they were also working for their own political freedom, which was promised them. The promise has not been kept. Seeing that without the vote they will get no appropriation for girls' schools and change of the laws affecting women, which condemn a woman to slavery from birth to death, they have started a new and aggressive campaign for the ballot. The new National Suffrage Association of China also aims to secure equal educational advantages for girls and to establish industrial training schools for girls and women.

TOPICS OF INTEREST AT HOME AND ABROAD

—Turkey seems to put as much strenuous interest into politics at Vienna, Paris or London, to say nothing of Washington. When Prince Tewfik Kamura, Premier and Minister of Foreign Affairs, and his cabinet resigned, because the Diet refused to withdraw a note of lack of confidence in the government, although requested to do so by the emperor himself, he was placed in the stocks. Several newspaper offices were attacked, and in the rioting that took place in various parts of the city a number of persons were killed and many injured.

—A report reached London from Lisbon that officers have been received from Mozambique, Portuguese East Africa, saying that the Barotse native chief Lagosa recently raided the Rhodesia district, massacring a large number of European settlers. The governor immediately dispatched a punitive expedition of 1,000 men. After a march of nearly 400 miles the expedition came upon the chief and his band, and routed them after five hours' fighting, killing 200 and wounding 300. The Portuguese loss was very slight and twenty-two wounded. The chief is supposed to have committed suicide as it was stated he would be spared his life if he surrendered.

—Miss Grace Hibben, eldest daughter of the former President, who married Dr. Alfred H. Thomas J. Hibben, Jr., professor of philosophy in Wells College, Aurora, N. Y. The ceremony took place in Princeton in the home of Dr. John G. Hibben, president of the university, who officiated at the ceremony. Dr. Hibben is a Presbyterian clergyman. The bride was a very clever and versatile one, combining the versatility of the cosmopolitan. Previous Princeton weddings in the family interest and two sisters, married in Princeton but half as many previous to the ceremony. Mrs. Cleveland, with her daughters Marion and Esther and her youngest son Francis, was in waiting. The bride, a great favorite with all, received a bouquet of white Killarney roses. She presented a fair picture of feminine loveliness as she passed into the drawing-room on the arm of her daughter Esther. Besides the immediate relatives of the contracting parties there were present Mrs. Hibben, wife of Princeton's president, and her daughter, Miss Elizabeth Hibben, and Dean Andrew West of the Princeton Graduate School. After the ceremony a very pretty wedding breakfast was served. In addition to Killarney roses the decorations consisted of bunches of pale yellow narcissus and daffodils and palms. A reception was held which was attended by many of the Princeton professors. Mr. and Mrs. Preston, it is believed, will make a long sojourn in the South, spending the remainder of the winter in Florida. Mrs. Preston was born Frances Folsom at Buffalo, N. Y., July 21, 1864. Her father, a well-known lawyer, was a partner of Grover Cleveland in the law firm of Folsom & Cleveland. Miss Folsom, besides being endowed with rare beauty, also possessed high mental gifts. She graduated from Wells College in 1885 with distinction. She was married to President Cleveland in the White House, June 2, 1886, the wedding being a most brilliant social event.

—Dr. Manuel E. Araujo, president of the republic of Salvador, who was wounded by the bullets of an assassin on February 4, died on February 5. President Araujo was attacked and shot by several men, one of whom, a Guatemalan named Virgilio Mulatillo, was arrested. Mulatillo, in a confession, declared that the plot to assassinate President Araujo had been concocted in Guatemala City. Presidential power in Salvador has been vested in Don Carlos Melendez, the first designate, according to a message to the State Department from the American Minister at San Salvador. Dr. Araujo, who was vice-president of Salvador before he came to the president's chair two years ago, was the unanimous choice of all the political parties. He was a little more than fifty years old, and enjoyed the distinction of never having engaged in a revolution in his country. He was one of the richest men in Central America and essentially a man of peace. He was graduated from the National University of Salvador and finished his medical education in Germany. He had invented several scientific instruments, receiving several honorary degrees from universities in the United States and in Europe in connection therewith.

—For eight years persons of all classes of society in all parts of the world have received letters from Spain inviting them to participate in unearthing a mythical treasure hidden away by a mythical bankrupt prisoner languishing in a mythical cell in Madrid; and the repeated warnings published in the newspapers at the instance of the Spanish police authorities seem to have had little effect in reducing the income of the swindlers who "ran the game." At last, however, the gang has been located, and several of its members captured. Telegrams to a bogus address played an important part in the swindle, and one of the gang was arrested in the act of receiving such messages in an obscure street in Madrid.

—The annual report of the commandant of the Revenue Cutter Service shows up the value of these vessels in a way that will doubtless surprise those unacquainted with their work. The records containing figures show: 260 distressed vessels assisted during the year; 2,212 persons rescued from peril, in many cases apparently imminent death, and 106 persons saved from drowning. The value of vessels, cargoes and derelicts saved was $10,711,748; and 45 derelicts and other obstructions to navigation were removed or destroyed. This work has been done by 25 cruising cutters and 18 harbor vessels and launches. Two mutinies were quelled—one on a Haitian gunboat in the harbor of Charleston, S. C., and the other on a Uruguayan bark in Mobile Bay. The service has also proved an efficient deterrent of smuggling enterprises.

Watch your baking and roasting through the glass door!

NO more guesswork or "bad luck" with the BOSS Glass Door Oven. No more "wondering" if "those things" are done. No more wasted steps running to the oven to open the door. No more lost heat—no jarring and chilling of foods from opening and closing the oven door.

Turn the BOSS at any angle; watch the progress of your baking or roasting every minute; never touch the oven until you know the food is done.

Glass Door Guaranteed The glass door is guaranteed not to "steam up" nor break from heat in every genuine BOSS Oven (stamped "BOSS"). The asbestos lining keeps all the heat where it belongs—in the oven. You can bake or roast with the BOSS on the warmest days in perfect comfort, without heating up your kitchen.

Pays for Itself Yes, the BOSS actually pays for itself in bakings and in fuel saved. Perfect cakes and pies, well-done roasts, beautifully brown crusty loaves are easily secured in this oven, where they are never chilled nor jarred.

And the same asbestos lining which keeps the heat in the oven brings it to a baking temperature in two minutes, gets your bakings done in shorter time and cuts down your use of fuel one-fourth.

THE OTHER MAN

BY DAVID DE FOREST BURRELL

THE Man of the House stood before the fireplace. He was about to bank the glowing remnant of the back-log for the night, and he held the fire-shovel in his hand. As he bent over to thrust it into the gray ashes, he heard the clock on the landing strike. He straightened up, listening. One—two—three; he counted up to twelve. Then, silence throughout the house, broken a minute later by the lively chime of a cheery little French clock somewhere upstairs, hurrying as if to make up the lost minute. Silence again. Then, in the street outside, the purring rush of a motor car that seemed to typify the years; then the deep, reverberating strokes of the great clock in the church tower at the corner.

"Another year of my life begun—the thirty-fourth," said the Man of the House to himself, and was about to stoop and cover up the fire, when, as if in answer to his unspoken words, a voice strangely familiar said briskly, "Yes; and another year of your life ended—your thirty-third."

The speaker stood quite near, before the dying fire. The Man of the House, scanning him with startled eyes, found himself puzzled. The Stranger was thin and pale and hungry-looking, yet so like some one he knew—even his voice stirred old memories.

"Who are you?" asked the Man of the House abruptly.

"I?" asked the Stranger, as if surprised at the question. "Don't you know me?"

"Don't know you at all, sir, to be quite frank with you," was the blunt answer of the Man of the House. He put down the fire-shovel and turned to face the Stranger.

"Oh yes, surely—a little!" the latter exclaimed. "Surely you know me a little! We are acquaintances—I won't say friends, although I believe we started out as friends. Surely you must recognize me!"

The Man of the House felt ashamed, detecting the hurt tone in the other's voice. "You do seem familiar, somehow," he confessed, in an apologetic voice. "And yet—I must say—I can't quite—"

"Ah," said the other, relieved. "I knew you could not have forgotten everything about me. This is my birthday, too, you know, and we have lived so near each other all these years—so very near each other—I was quite sure you would not fail me altogether; although, to be honest, I have been for some years greatly pained to receive such scant notice from you. Why, sometimes weeks—sometimes months—have gone by without your giving me a thought, apparently. It has been a great sorrow to me. You and I might have been so much to each other. I have tried and tried and tried again to make you understand that. I have taken every opportunity, but somehow you haven't understood. There was the day when you were graduated at New Haven—you remember? You came out of the chapel with your sheepskin in your hand, and your father met you at the door, and—you surely haven't forgotten? You saw tears on his cheeks, and he squeezed your hand so tight, with a 'God bless you, boy!'—I knew you would recall that! I was with you, very close to you, just then; but that night, when you had seen your father off on the New York train, you stopped in somewhere on your way up to your room, and you left me outside—"

The Man of the House, with flushed face and lowered eyes, said never a word.

"There were other chances that came my way," the Other went on in his quiet, penetrating voice. "There was the day when you were married. Yes, for quite a while there I thought you and I had resumed our childhood's intimacy; but it did not last! And there was the day when the papers were suddenly full of the Messina earthquake, and I saw you reading an appeal for help for the survivors. I spoke to you then, and for the moment you looked at me with something in your eyes quite like the gleam of glad recognition; but then you caught a glimpse of the trade reports on the next page; and again I was forgotten. There were several such occasions. You remember the time when the baby died?"

The Man of the House started as if a coal from the fire before him had burned his flesh. The Other continued:

"I thought you might remember me at that time and fall back on our old friendship. I could have helped you a bit, I think. Indeed, you did seem to have me in mind for a day or two. I saw it in your face. But when that wire came—about the new electric power company?—the day after the funeral, you forgot me at once."

The Man of the House spoke hoarsely. "Who are you, my friend, that you pry into my affairs so impudently?"

"One moment, one moment," said the other easily, with his thin hand raised in deprecation. "And then when your wife was so sick, a little while after the baby's death—that was another opportunity, I thought. I tried again to force myself on your attention—not rudely, of course. When the doctor told you that the medicine she needed was a bit of comforting—'medicine for heartbreak,' he called it, you remember? I spoke to you then. You may recall it now. You answered me quite as if you recognized me clearly after all those busy years. But then the legislature held up your power company's franchise that very day; and the instant the phone rang I knew you had forgotten my very existence."

"Man, man! who are you?" cried the stricken voice of the Man of the House; "and what do you do this for?"

The Other said, "I thought this another opportunity to call myself to your attention. I used to be of help to you, when you were in kilts and in school, and, I have fondly hoped, occasionally in those first years in the old office down on West Street. When I saw you standing here thinking of the ending of the year, I made up my mind to make one last effort to gain your recognition. You and I could do such wonderful things together. And you really do not seem to be hitting it off so very happily without me. I can be the making of you."

He spoke eagerly, with a great longing in his voice. The Man of the House studied him with troubled eyes.

"You are vaguely familiar," he confessed at last. "I seem to have known you—somewhere—some time. I don't just recall it. Tell me—who are you?"

The Other looked him through and through. "I can't help you at all" he said, "unless you know me. Don't you know me at all?"

The Man of the House was strangely moved as he answered, "I seem to—a little. You look something like—like me, and yet— Tell me your name! You haven't told me your name!"

"I am your Soul."

The Man of the House looked dazed, then smiled uncertainly. "Oh, yes," he said; "of course! My soul! You see, it is so long—"

"I know," said the Other. "You need not say a word. It has seemed longer to me than to you. I told you how it pained me to be forgotten. And yet I could have been of so great service to you! Why, my dear man, you have no idea of the great things I could do for you if you and I were better friends!"

"Standard" GUARANTEED PLUMBING FIXTURES

THE home builder knows that when "Standard" Plumbing fixtures are installed in his bathroom, they represent the highest sanitary experience and skill—that better equipment could not be bought. They make the bathroom modern and beautiful and assure a healthful home. "Standard" fixtures should be specified always in preference to all others because of their unquestioned superiority.

Genuine "Standard" fixtures for the Home and for Schools, Office Buildings, Public Institutions, etc., are identified by the Green and Gold Label, with the exception of one brand of baths bearing the Red and Black Label, which, while of the first quality of manufacture, have a slightly thinner enameling, and thus meet the requirements of those who demand "Standard" quality at less expense. All "Standard" fixtures, with care, will last a lifetime. And no fixture is genuine unless it bears the guarantee label. In order to avoid substitution of inferior fixtures, specify "Standard" goods in writing (not verbally) and make sure that you get them

You Can Have This Full-Size Package of TINOL, the Easy Metalware Mender, Absolutely Free!

We want you to know TINOL—the easy Metalware Mender—to know how you can mend everything of metal in your home without trouble or expense.

We want you to see for yourself how easy it is to heat the broken article, apply TINOL and make your punctured pot, pan, boiler or broken articles of metalware, such as Jewelry, Hat Pins, etc., just as good as new.

This full-size package, enough for twelve mendings, without one cent of cost!

HERE'S HOW TO GET IT!

Send Postal to-day for our certificate—we'll send it to you immediately. Take it to your nearest hardware dealer, who will hand you, without charge, a full-size package of TINOL, which retails ordinarily at 10c.

You are not asking a favor of the dealer, because we pay him ten cents for every certificate he redeems for readers of The Christian Herald. He may not have TINOL, but he'll get it for you if you ask him.

After you have tried it, and found out how easy it is to be your own "repair-smith," you'll find plenty of things around the house that you can repair in a few moments, and make them as good as new.

There is nothing on sale anywhere exactly like TINOL—TINOL is a solder with the "flux" in the center of the stick, that runs out as the TINOL melts. You need no tools, you need no technical knowledge, and you'll save time and expense on the many different metal articles that need mending around your home.

Send for your Certificate to-day—you'll have it just as soon as the mail can bring it to you.

Is Your Money Doing Its Best?

THOUSANDS of those who save fail to take advantage of investment openings because they do not realize what may be done with small amounts of money. They imagine that Bonds and other securities are only for the well-to-do.

This is no longer true.

Moreover, persons of limited means are the very ones who should begin to invest their savings safely and profitably. They particularly should demand good security and the largest interest return consistent with safety. In this way only can they materially improve their financial position.

Have you $100, or more, which is not doing its best for you? Is it earning 6%, and is it safe?

You can invest $100, $200, $500, $1000, or more, in A-R-E 6's, the 6% Gold Bonds of the American Real Estate Company, receiving your interest every six months and your principal in ten years.

The Bonds are based on the ownership of millions of dollars' worth of New York real estate. For a quarter of a century they have paid 6% interest and matured principal at par, returning over $10,000,000 to investors.

A-R-E 6's may also be purchased by instalments, earning 6% compound interest, and maturing $1,000 or more in 10, 15 or 20 years, carrying liberal surrender privileges.

Our printed matter and map of New York City showing the location of our properties will be sent at your request.

The Man of the House did not seem to be deeply affected by his Soul's enthusiasm, but looked at him with a rather cool, speculative eye. "Could you, now?" he said, in a mildly interested tone. "Why haven't we been better acquainted?"

"It's your fault, I'm sorry to say," replied the Other, regretfully. "I have not missed a chance of bringing myself to your notice; but—you have been a very busy man."

"But why do you—pardon me—bother me now?"

"To see if we can't reach an understanding," returned the Other. "We seem to be at odds all the time; and I am sure that if we got acquainted again things would go more smoothly for both of us. The things I want you don't want. The things I try to do you counteract. Really, we ought to be on better terms."

"Then," said the Man of the House, "I take it I have interfered with your hopes?"

There was a tinge of sarcasm in his voice, as if he reckoned the hopes referred to as of small moment. But the Other nodded vigorously.

"That's just it!" he exclaimed. "That you have! I—I did not disturb you to-night merely to make complaint, you know; and yet, to be frank, I think you have treated me abominably! For one thing, I am lonely. You see, I cannot meet other souls except through your introduction; so I have been alone all these years. I am naturally of a social, genial disposition: I love men! but you have really given me no chance to meet them. I can't tell you how long it is since I exchanged thoughts with another soul! Sometimes I have been drawn to others—just hungry to know them; but you have come between us every time.

"And then, I am almost famished. You see, the only food I get I must get through you; and you have tried to feed me on all sorts of things—Sunday newspapers, and best sellers, and cheap magazines, and conversation without a single food unit, as the doctors would say, in whole days of it; and stock reports, too! Imagine me trying to keep my health and strength on such food! There's your friend Bigton, now: his soul simply revels in the very things I love—good music, beautiful paintings, a whole library full of books—to say nothing of things and intimacies infinitely dearer than all these. And look at me! What chance have I? You think I am anemic, don't you? but, my friend, it is you who have made me so! I have lived on husks all these years!

"I am soft and flabby, too—what there is of me. You see, I get no exercise to speak of. It takes struggle and conflict and ceaseless endeavor to develop sturdiness in a man's soul; and you—well, to put it mildly, you have not been in the habit of calling on me for heroic effort. And then, that sort of spiritual development which can be attained only through the practice of neighborly kindness, of self-sacrifice, you—pardon me if I hurt—you have not given me the opportunity of possessing.

"I am—again, pardon me—not very clean. I cannot help it; it is your fault! So many little details of business, not very savory, you know; so many harsh and bitter judgments passed on others; even the bare determination to get ahead, to get your own way; they have all left their stains on me. You forgot that your thoughts and actions might affect me? Ah, they do, inevitably! And I—I who would be pure, spotless, like God—I who long to dwell with God in his holy heaven—I must be unclean!"

The Man of the House had not uttered a word for some time. Now he said, slowly, "I thought I was doing pretty well in life; but you make me suspect that, somehow, I have not quite made good!"

"Yes," said the Other; I had observed your satisfaction with the way things were going. But you were laboring under a misapprehension. Life is much more than business success. Have you forgotten?—'What shall it profit a man if he shall gain the whole world and forfeit his life?' As a matter of fact your only success in life is to be won by a hearty partnership between you and me. You thought you were in business for yourself; but you were not. You, one of a partnership, were trying to go it alone. That never works out! It is I who must do the greater part of our joint work through time and eternity; but you have been making me unfit for my task!"

"'Eternity' sounds as if you were talking religion at me," remarked the Man of the House, with a bit of his old sneer. "But tell me, for just what purpose were you given me as a partner—as you phrase it?"

"You put it wrong end foremost," answered his Soul. "You are given me as my partner to help me serve our Maker."

The man smiled, not a very pleasant smile. "But I seem to have somehow taken things in my own hands?"

"That is precisely what I have been pointing out to you," said his Soul. "You have hit the mark!"

"And you propose that I turn the control of the firm over to you; is that it?"

The other nodded vigorously. "Yes, yes! exactly! Don't you see? That is the way things were intended by our Maker. I am merely asking for my divine right. Incidentally, as I have pointed out, what I ask is to your profit. You have bungled; but I would not bungle. You have failed, wretchedly failed; but I would not fail."

"How do you know?" the Man of the House broke in, nettled at such frank criticism.

"Simply because I would not go it alone, as you have done, but under the personal direction of God. I could not fail. I propose to have God as—to carry out the figure—the Silent Partner in this concern."

"A triumvirate?" The Man spoke with his old sneer, and yet to the quick ear of the Other it seemed assumed.

"Right again!" he said. "You, and I, and God. That is the only successful partnership I have ever known; and it works to the profit of all concerned."

"But what am I to do?" The Man's voice was troubled. He spoke, for the first time, without any assumption of superiority, with perfect frankness.

"Just tell me I may take charge," his Soul responded. "I am helpless; and I shall be what you see me, or more pitiable still, until you say that."

The fire had fallen low. The coals were turning gray. The Man of the House picked up the fire-shovel again and balanced it in his hand, as if the weight of it were the most important fact to be learned in life. Suddenly he put it down again with a clang, and turned full-face to his Soul. His voice, as he spoke, rang clear.

"I'm not much of a sentimentalist," he said; "but I guess you win. You're in control, now—for good. I'm ready for orders."

A Case You Can Help

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD has received within the last few days information concerning an aged and infirm preacher, who is no longer physically fit for service, and who has, besides, the care of an invalid wife. These two are absolutely without income and they are now so far advanced in years and infirmity that neither is capable of working. The husband faithfully served in the Christian ministry for half a century and has laid up nothing! Their great concern, in these closing days of their pilgrimage here, is how to procure food and clothing. We believe there are in the great CHRISTIAN HERALD family some who would be glad to assist these aged Christians in a quiet and unostentatious way. To any who may feel led to do this service "In His Name," we will, on receipt of a postal, send the address of the old couple, with further particulars. Address all inquiries "Old Minister," care of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, Bible House, New York City.

TO EVERY Hardware Dealer, the Irwin stamp looks good on a bit, because he knows that give his customers absolute satisfaction. He has found his reputation for quality goods has been helped by the Irwin, and that "kicks" are an unknown experience.

The reasons for this universal satisfaction are:

The Irwin is the only solid-centre-stem bit made in all sizes and styles for every purpose---6,500 sizes and styles, so that the bit-buyer is sure to find exactly what is needed.

It is made of one piece of flawless, extra high-grade crucible auger bit steel and tempered by the secret Irwin process. It will not bend or break where twist and shank unite, and will cut clean, fast and true into the hardest wood, even lignum-vitae.

The IRWIN [illegible]t Reg. U.S. Pat. Off[illegible]

HE can't afford to take chances. When he sees the Irwin stamp, he's sure.

He knows an Irwin bit is made of one-piece, flawless, extra high-grade, crucible auger-bit steel and tempered by the secret Irwin Process. He knows it will not bend or break where twist and shank unite—the weak spot in common bits.

He knows the Irwin is the only solid-center-stem bit made in all sizes and styles, for every purpose — 6,500 different sizes and styles to cover every requirement.

He appreciates the fact that the Irwin hand-filed, sharp edge will bore true into the hardest wood known, even lignum-vitae.

He has learned that his work with an Irwin will be rapid, true and sure.

That his knowledge and workmanship will be backed up to the limit of efficiency when he has Irwins in his kit.

His experience and knowledge is your best bit-buying guide.

Your dealer ought to carry them. If he doesn't, write us about it.

The IRWIN [illegible]t Reg. U.S. Pat. Of[illegible]

THE whole bit looks right when he sees the Irwin stamp. He has learned from Irwin users that "Irwin" means quality in service, because of quality in manufacture.

He knows every Irwin Bit is guaranteed; price refunded if not satisfactory.

And these are the reasons for universal satisfaction:

The only solid-center-stem augur bit made in all sizes and styles for every purpose—6,500 to choose from so you are sure to find just exactly what is best suited to your purpose in the Irwin line.

A bit that will not break when boring into the side or end of the hardest wood—that will not tear the softest wood.

A bit that will not choke because made with but one crimp.

A bit of uniform strength, made of one piece of flawless, extra high-grade crucible auger-bit steel, and tempered by the secret Irwin Process. The Irwin will not bend, but cuts clean, rapid and true for an indefinite period.

If you can't get an Irwin at your dealer's, write us.

The I[illegible]WIN Bit Reg. U.S. [illegible]t. Office

WHEN he sees the Irwin stamp of sure quality, he is satisfied. That is the bit he wants.

He wants the Irwin because he has to have a bit which will cut sure and true into the hardest wood, or knots; which will not clog; which will not tear the softest wood.

He is a mechanic and knows that the hand-filed sharp edges of the Irwin will never fail.

He knows that the

being of uniform strength made of one piece of flawless extra high-grade crucible auger-bit steel, and tempered by the secret Irwin Process, will never bend or break where twist and shank unite.

He cannot afford to experiment. Neither can you. If your dealer hasn't Irwin Auger Bits, write us direct.

The Irwin is bound to satisfy you. It is the only solid-centre-stem bit made in all sizes and styles, for every purpose—6,500 styles and sizes so you are sure to find exactly what you need in the Irwin line. If not satisfactory, money is refunded.

UNCLE SAM'S BABY BUREAU

brotherhood of man is perhaps not so much a human instinct as the sisterhood of mothers. In our purely experimental work in Washington, the mothers gladly told us what we wanted to know, even without the assurance that no names ever appear in our reports, and that as soon as the agent has finished her visits she tears off the little perforated slip containing all the names and addresses which in any way identify the facts presented on the schedule with any particular baby.

Perhaps a natural question arises here as to what will be the first field selected for this work, for we cannot cover a very big area with only two special agents and a fund for all their expenses of not very much more than $2,000. We should, of course, like to feel that as we are a national bureau we could go to any part of the country with equal ease, but unfortunately we cannot. Our method of investigation, the only practicable method, requires birth registration, and in 1910 the New England States and Pennsylvania and Michigan were the only States having good birth registration laws sufficiently well enforced to enable us to base our study on their records. Only two cities outside those States had good records: they were New York City and Washington, D. C. Our investigation will, therefore, have to be conducted in some one small city in one of the States named.

Now this brings us to the greatest work which the Children's Bureau is undertaking. It is joining the Census Bureau, the American Medical Association, the American Public Health Association, the American Society for the Study and Prevention of Infant Mortality and other societies in a campaign to secure adequate registration of births in every State in the Union.

Possibly a campaign for birth registration sounds like a pretty dull, prosaic thing to be spoken of as the greatest work that the bureau is undertaking. It may at first thought suggest little beyond mere public records and mere dry statistics, yet these very public records and these very dry statistics are to serve as the basis for the work in reducing infant mortality.

Through good vital statistics, the sanitarian and the social worker are able to learn how many babies are born in the area in which they are working and how many babies die. By comparing the figures for this area with the figures for other areas, they are able to tell not only whether their conditions are better or worse than in other places, but by studying the detailed figures for causes of death and by a little confirmatory investigation they can tell why this is the case. The figures may reveal a bad milk supply, poor housing conditions, or extreme poverty. Once the case has been correctly diagnosed, the selection of the remedy is fairly simple, though it may take many years to overcome the old condition. Vital statistics show us where to work and how.

The public records do more than enable the sanitarians and social workers to get statistics to correct general conditions; they enable them to help individual babies where it is evident that through poverty or ignorance the child is not going to receive the care which will enable it to come through the first year a strong, healthy, robust infant, an asset to its family and to the community. The births should be recorded as promptly as possible after their occurrence. The health officer can then examine these records, and where the records show that the families have not been able to secure proper assistance or to surround the baby with reasonable safeguards, he can send a doctor, a visiting nurse or a friendly visitor. Not all communities now have visiting nurses or friendly visitors, but this is merely because the need for them has not been made apparent. The movement in favor of them is spreading rapidly. These nurses and visitors show the mother how to do the little things necessary to preserve the baby's health—simple little things, but in too many instances entirely unknown to the mother. Perhaps one of the greatest things that they do is to wash the newly born baby's eyes with a very simple wash, but by doing it they prevent that ophthalmia neonatorum which was responsible for one-fourth of all the blindness among the children in seventeen schools for the blind. The preservation of eyesight alone would probably be a sufficient argument in favor of birth registration even if there were not many other ways in which the child could be helped by it.

It is out of the question to attempt to mention all the ways in which such a record may prove of value, but some deserve special consideration because of their importance. Perhaps no two measures for the welfare of children have met with more general popular support than the laws prohibiting the employment of young children and the laws compelling parents to send their children to school.

IMPORTANT ANNOUNCEMENT

A NEW Domestic

The Combination Domestic Vacuum and Brush Cleaner
Easy to Use—Easy to Carry About

WE have perfected and are now placing on sale through our thousands of dealers and agents, the Domestic Combination Cleaner—which is the famous Domestic Vacuum Cleaner with a Revolving Brush Attachment.

With this cleaner you have the powerful suction of the unrivalled Domestic Vacuum Cleaner, which draws every particle of dust, dirt, microbe, moths, etc., from the texture of your carpet and from the floor beneath—with the same easy operation you have a Revolving Brush attachment which gathers up all threads, ravelings, hair, lint, pins, etc., in fact it is so thorough that it will actually sweep up such articles as nails small pieces of wood, etc.

The Brush Attachment is a part of the Domestic Combination Vacuum Cleaner and can be instantly raised or lowered and put in or out of use by simply touching the foot to a small lever. When the brush is in use it in no way lessens the efficiency of the Vacuum Cleaner, and the Brush Attachment need be used only when threads, ravelings or heavy surface dirt are to be taken up.

The Domestic Combination Cleaner is the only Vacuum Cleaner that permits the brush and vacuum cleaning device to operate successfully at one time.

The Domestic is the original sweeper type vacuum cleaner and the only one with Full Ball Bearings and the Ball Bearing Roller Nozzle Support which prevents the nozzle from dragging and wearing the carpets.

It is absolutely unnecessary to take up carpets for spring or fall housecleaning where the Domestic Vacuum Cleaner is used.

The Domestic is the only Vacuum Cleaner with an attachment for Hose and Nozzle to be used in cleaning upholstered furniture, portieres, mattresses, pillows, etc.

See the Revolving Brush

This bottom view of Cleaner shows revolving brush attachment at upper end—the vacuum opening or nozzle extends across lower end.

The only hand cleaner on which the brush and vacuum cleaning device operate successfully at the same time.

The small device in the center of lower end is the ball bearing roller which supports the nozzle, preventing it from dragging and wearing the carpets as others do.

The Right Paint for White Houses

WHEN architecture or surroundings dictate a white exterior, it is unwise to seek individuality by any scheme of harmonizing or contrasting colors. The charm of many homes lies in the simplicity and good taste of a white exterior in pleasing contrast with grass and foliage.

When white is your choice you would not allow your painter to tint it with black or blue or yellow, and you should not permit any white paint to be used which already has a tinge of foreign color. Often paint that by itself, seems white, will be found several shades darker when compared side by side with a clear, pure white.

CARTER
The White

is guaranteed strictly pure and has all the good qualities that have made white lead the most widely used white pigment. But more than this, it is so white that it has established a new standard of whiteness for white paint, given new beauty to delicate tints and added life and brilliancy to colors mixed with it.

For use as white paint it is thinned with pure linseed oil. To produce any shade or tint desired, tinting colors are added. It is always mixed fresh to your order by the painter, exactly to suit the surface to be painted. For either white or colors, pure Carter White Lead and linseed oil paint gives the maximum of service at the minimum of cost, and never cracks or scales.

If you have any painting that should be done this Spring write for Pure Paint—a brief textbook, a can size painting with harmonious color schemes for modern houses. Free on request.

If white paint is likely to be used, it is well to send for a sample tube of Carter with which you may compare Carter with any other paint you might consider using. A postcard will do.

"Recognized Leader Among Typewriters"

Consider all that is meant by these words

Leadership means superiority of product, a superiority which produces leadership and is proved by leadership.

It means more than that. It means everything associated with the word FIRST.

The Remington Typewriter is first in history, first in prestige, first in quality, first in recent improvements, first in size and completeness of organization, first in distribution, and first in service to the customer.

The word FIRST in every department of leadership applies only to the

The public has been anxious to protect the period of childhood from the encroachment of the working years, and, in so far as possible, to make sure that the period shall be devoted to developing a sound mind in a sound body; yet the laws in many States have not provided for the most effective instrument to be used in enforcing those laws; namely, birth registration. Ages below which children shall not work have been established and ages between which children shall attend school have been prescribed; but too frequently the State has provided no way to know what the child's age is, and finds itself dependent in enforcing its own laws on the statement of the very ones who are attempting to deny to the child the protection and training the State would insure. Every State should have a registration law, and, after reasonable time, require the presentation of a certified copy of the birth certificate showing the child to be of a legal working age before that child could be employed. Truant officers could consult the records in doubtful cases, and thereby enforce the law. Thus both of these two great measures would be furthered by birth registration.

Some of the other ways in which such records are useful were summarized by the late Frank W. Reilly, of Chicago, somewhat as follows:

"There is hardly a relation in life from the cradle to the grave in which a record may not prove to be of the greatest value. For example, in the matter of descent; in the relations of guardians and wards; in the disabilities of minors; in the administration of estates; the settlement of insurance and pensions; the requirements of foreign countries in matters of residence, marriage, and legacies; in marriage in our own country; in voting and in jury and militia service; in the right to admission and practice in the professions and many public offices; in the enforcement of laws relating to education and to child labor, as well as to various matters in the criminal code—the irresponsibility of children under ten for crime or misdemeanor, etc. As the country becomes more densely settled and the struggle for existence sharper, many of these matters, which have hitherto been of minor significance, will take on a deeper meaning and acquire greater importance."

Registration laws have to be passed by State governments, for the National Government has not power to go into the States and establish registration offices. The present condition of the birth registration laws in the different States is shown in the accompanying map. It should perhaps be said in connection with it that although some of the States are shown as having adequate laws, no State in the Union has really perfect enforcement, and every little while we hear of very defective work in some of the States which pride themselves on their laws. Frequently some short-sighted official fails to live up to his responsibilities and neglects to require the registration of all births, thereby causing the community to lose those benefits which flow from birth registration, quietly but none the less certainly.

The question will perhaps arise as to how the bureau is to work to secure registration. In the first place it is issuing a pamphlet for wide general distribution setting forth the necessity for registration. Then it is replying to those who ask for suggestions as to ways of co-operating in work for children that they may try to get registration in their States by interesting their churches, clubs and societies in the problem and have them take it up with their local authorities. Often a single individual can do a great deal in stimulating local interest by looking up records of his children and his friends' children, to make sure that their births are recorded. Unfortunately, in too many instances the child's birth will not be recorded and the child will have no official record of the day of his birth and the names of his parents.

The bureau is also co-operating with the various societies and bureaus which have drawn up a model law for establishing birth registration, and it hopes to see the essential features of this law adopted, so that ultimately every child born in this country will have the date of its birth and the names of its parents preserved in the archives of the State. This would be a great achievement for the Children's Bureau, because it would be a great step in behalf of the children of the country.

AMONG THE WORKERS

—MISS HELEN GRAY, of New Orleans, a correspondent of this paper, writes to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD that the Industrial School for Mountain Girls of Mineral Bluff, Ga., is sadly in need of blankets, quilts and cotton material. This school, which has been in operation for three years, takes young girls out of poverty-stricken homes and gives them the benefit of an industrial education.

—THE SOUTH BALTIMORE Business Men's Association, Baltimore, Md., in presenting a flag to public school No. 70 of their city, introduced a novel feature. At a given signal, the flag was unfurled by Miss Lillian F. Ohrecht, one of the former pupils of the school, and as it unfurled it scattered over the crowd two thousand smaller flags. At the same moment, 150 homing pigeons were let loose, with tiny American flags attached to their legs, making a very beautiful and inspiring sight.

—NEWS of a successful evangelistic campaign comes from a correspondent in Kingstree, S. C. The preliminary work was carried on by four business men of Charleston, who, instead of spending their two weeks' vacations in recreation, devoted their time to preaching in this community. Their work so inspired the Christian workers of the town that the movement spread rapidly and many were converted, uniting with the various churches of the locality. The four gentlemen from Charleston were converted not many years ago and are setting a noble example of zeal in soul-winning.

—THE BOARD OF TRUSTEES of the American University at Washington was recently reorganized owing to the death of Dr. D. H. Carroll, long its president. The new officers are: President, Hon. A. B. Browne, of Washington, D. C.; vice-president, Judge B. F. Leighton; secretary, Dr. C. W. Baldwin; treasurer, Charles C. Glover, president of the Riggs National Bank. Two new trustees were elected. Bishop W. F. McDowell was present as adviser to the board. Not only Methodists, but Protestants of all denominations are interested in the creation of this great university at the nation's capital. Already two magnificent and costly marble buildings have been erected; a third is secured by a probated bequest, and a fourth promised by a friend. More than 1,500 students have already applied for admission.

—REV. SAMUEL LEVERMORE, of London, England, was enthusiastically received in Boston a few weeks ago when he began an American lecture tour. After delivering a long series of lectures and short addresses there he went to New York where for two weeks he conducted the noonday services at John Street Methodist Episcopal Church and the Fulton Street Prayer Meeting. Mr. Levermore is one of the Protestant apostles to France and has just returned from a seven-thousand-mile trip by wagon through that country. Only a few months ago, while in the Catholic stronghold of Lourdes, France, he was rescued by the police from a mob that momentarily threatened his life. As his work is almost entirely foreign, he speaks with equal facility in English, French and Italian. Mr. Levermore has not completed his itinerary, and any one interested in his work may address him in care of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD.

A NOVICE ON SKI

refractory ski, I fancied that I could show them who was master—on the easier slopes at least.

The detailed history of my enlightenment would take too long in the telling; suffice it that my tracks much resembled a Marconi message in their conglomeration of full stops and dashes, that in my embraces I was at least perfectly impartial, and that I introduced myself with much éclat to everybody and everything en route, including a strange party of ski-ers practicing on the lower slopes, trees in such variety and number that I gave up count after the aforesaid furze bush, and last but not least, a frozen dump heap.

Yet late in the afternoon, when the light was waning and the first flakes of a fresh snowfall were floating gently down, I found myself standing at the top of a steep ice-road, whereon was much traffic, tobogganers chiefly, and a few inhabitants of the sleepy little village yonder taking a belated stroll. Twenty minutes' walk below me, with lights already glimmering through the dusk, lay the hotel. So the final drift was still presumably before me, and also, had I only known it, were the worst of the day's adventures.

The others of the party had long ago caught me up and passed me; they were now politely waiting for me at the bottom of the run. Somehow I wished they wouldn't. I said as much to the Cheery-person that evening, in an ice-coffee interval of the entertainment.

"We shouldn't have, I'm sure, if we had had an idea of what a sensation you were going to make. As it was, we nearly cut half way through, when the old fellow in the blue spectacles began to get excited, but the whole flock of us couldn't; and besides, we wanted to see the finish." He smiled grimly. The finish had been the wall at the bottom.

But again I am digressing, and must return to the top of the hill; there I stood for some minutes, shifting nervously from ski to ski, and hoping that the casual knot of onlookers would take it that it was necessary to polish the planks thus before starting, and charitably overlook the fact that it was a preliminary probably suggested by a state of blue funk.

I started before I was ready; on the whole perhaps that was a good thing, for else I have my doubts whether I should ever have started at all. The ski of course went off of their own accord when in an unwary moment I leaned forward, and before I knew where I was we were fast overtaking a tobogganer ahead. Shouting was of no avail; before he could look round I had overtaken him, and was sitting, apologizing profusely, on the tail of his toboggan. He had meanwhile taken up a position in the center of the roadway, was grasping his hat, and looked as if he might be collecting things to say. I thought I had better be moving on. A lamp-post loomed up on the horizon then, to the exclusion of everything else. I clutched at it frantically, and it supported me for a few seconds, before gently letting me slip down into a sitting position. A passer-by giggled audibly, aggressively, I thought.

An old gentleman in blue goggles was the next victim. I was as much surprised and upset as he was himself—but my explanations were cut short in the middle by my ski gliding on again. Already they seemed to have fixed on a portly cow in the distance, which was being driven down to market by a still portlier peasant woman. The planks seemed bent on "annihilation by force of impact." I objected, intimating that I would far prefer the hedge, or even that uncompromising looking milestone a little further down. "You wait," crackled the ski, rubbing against some bits of stick—"everything comes to him who waits."

And it did. First the cow. We took her broadside-on, right enough, myself sitting down breathless from the bump, and being slid, still in a sitting position, under the cow and onwards. This to the accompaniment of a small burst of cheering from the more juvenile part of the population. The hedge on one side of the road and the milestone on the other followed each other in such quick succession that I had hardly time to regain my feet and breath between them, or recover from the jar of both, before I was hurtled full speed ahead on to the wayside chapel of St. Bartholomew. There as I endeavored to set the golden spiky halo straight on the carven head again, I had a blurred vision of a collection of white sweaters somewhere in front of me—blurred because of the falling snowflakes and the rapidity with which the indefatigable ski set off once more.

The next moment I had come into contact with the fencing of the hotel grounds. There was a note of finality about that wall. The Cheery-person himself unstrapped my ski.

"But I have not discovered the last drift yet," I demurred.

"You seem to have discovered pretty well everything else, though," he answered shortly; "let's get in before the crowd collects."

"I think you have done about enough for one day," put in the Mildly Sympathetic One, collecting oddments such as broken ski-points, woolley cap, and strap buckles as she spoke.

"What about tea?" said the Cheery-person.

"Yes, tea would be refreshing," I admitted; "but where did you say you were going to-morrow?"

For in spite of all things the ski microbe had claimed another victim.

CALLED HIGHER

Dr Homer Eaton, general publishing agent of the Methodist Book Concern, passed away suddenly at his home in Madison, N. J., on Sunday evening, February 9. Dr Eaton had been slightly indisposed for about two weeks, but a fatal termination of his illness was entirely unexpected. A special funeral service was held in the chapel of the Methodist Book Concern on February 13.

Mrs. T. R. Blair, of Kilbourne, Ill., passed away November 14, 1912, at the age of 74 years. She was a faithful member of Mt. Zion Baptist Church.

James Knowles, of Shippingport, Pa., passed to his reward October 28, 1912, at the age of 82 years. He was a faithful member of the Presbyterian Church.

Mrs. Margaret Vanasdale Miner, of Girard, Ill., passed away December 21, 1911, at the age of 83 years. She was a faithful Christian, interested in every good work.

Mrs. Frances E. Nichols, of Newport, O., passed to her reward January 3, 1913, in her 69th year. She was a Christian of beautiful life and character, who lived to serve those she loved.

Mrs. Lydia E. Phelps (69) died at her home, Erie, Pa., October 8, 1912. She was a faithful Christian all her life, and greatly beloved by all who knew her.

Mrs. Kezie McAfee, 76 years of age, died at the home of her niece at Topeka, Kan., October 21, 1912. She was a life-long member of the Presbyterian Church.

D. W. C. Dumbauld, one of the best known citizens of Champion, Pa., passed away October 20, 1912. He was a member of the United Evangelical Church for forty years.

Thomas Holcombe, of Pennington, N. J., was called higher December 17, 1912, in his 91st year. Mrs. Thomas Holcombe passed to the latter land May 18, 1908. They were both faithful followers of their Master.

On January 2, 1913, the Rev. Randall Pease went "beyond the touch of hands" and began his work for the new year in "his Father's house." He had been pastor of the Presbyterian Church at Hamden, N. Y., for the last four years, during which time he earned the confidence and highest respect of his parishioners, who considered him a man who lived near to God.

Insurance Economy

Non-agency savings Health-conservation

WHAT was sought for at the time of the Hughes Insurance Investigation in 1905, has become an established fact.

Anyone now desiring sound insurance-protection can walk into the office of the Postal Life, or write a letter to it and deal direct, thus becoming his own agent, and saving for himself the agents' commissions each year.

The non-agency method has been followed in England for more than a century.

As a matter of fact, it is agency-expense that has burdened and weakened more than one American company.

The Postal Life has, indeed, absorbed two such companies and by so doing has saved their policyholders from serious loss.

MORE than 1,500 people were accepted last year for insurance in the Postal—without agents.

The first year Postal policyholders receive a guaranteed commission dividend corresponding to what other companies pay their agents, less the moderate advertising charge.

In subsequent years policyholders can deduct the entire agents' renewal commission of 7½% and an office-expense saving of 2% making up the

Guaranteed in the Policy

And, in addition, the Postal pays, every year after the first, contingent dividends that are earned by the policy.

THE Postal's Annual Statement for 1912 shows that the Company in less than seven years has built up through non-agency methods, and through re-insurance, a policyholding body representing $50,000,000 of insurance in force backed by legal reserves amounting to $10,000,000.

It receives business from every State and from foreign countries. It is an interstate and international institution.

The Company's Health Bureau also performs an important public service through the distribution of helpful printed matter on health-preservation. Policyholders may also have one free medical examination each year, if desired, so as to detect incipient disease in time to check or cure it, thus reducing the cost of mortality.

. R. S., Seattle, Wash. Please explain Thess. 2: 13. I believe I do partly un- rstand, but not fully, how "God hath om the beginning chosen you to salva- on." Was not Saul a sample of God's own ving power, and not perhaps less wicked an others?

he passage in question, the Greek word is at ordinarily used for "elected," imply- s eternal selection, but might be read for himself," implying adoption. While er of grace and forgiveness is open to all ill accept in faith and true repentance, ist regard salvation as the free gift of d not ours by any merit or service of n. Thus, when we find the evidence that his own will chooses some for special , this act is not inconsistent with the e of free grace, but is rather a mani- on of God's sovereign prerogative.

. D. When God in his wisdom gave man o see, a tongue to speak, a brain to think ason to discriminate and guide him in his ent, he meant these faculties to be of . It would be a strange father who not permit his child to learn the use of nds or feet, or his other faculties, and by y we are justified in concluding that God wisdom endowed us with capacity and that we should do such things as were l for our existence here, even to toiling r daily bread. He gives us the fertile soil, e must do the plowing and the planting. in God does not imply that we should o him to do for us what he has made us e of doing for ourselves. When we do art, then we can reach out the hand of and grasp his leading hand, which will us through in all we cannot do for our-a vacuum, that is, truly empty space, all would fall at the same rate because they not be impeded by other materials nor ted to friction. In such case it would no difference in the time occupied nor in nal velocity obtained whether the body ght or heavy. But when air (oxygen and en combined) fills the space traversed by lling body there is a certain amount of nce to the passage of the body. If the presents a broad surface to the air and is lf thin and light, its fall may be delayed nitely. In a vacuum, however, a feather leaden bullet fall at the same rate of and with the same velocity.

)., Buffalo, Ala. Christianity was planted rth Britain about the beginning of the century, and it is claimed that the early ies, particularly those of the Culdees, were relatical and Presbyterian in form and ter. But it was long afterward, in the nth century, that the Presbyterian Church, sense in which we know it to-day, was ed. What was known as the "First ant" was signed on December 3, 1557, by , estate-holders and others, and from this g modern Presbyterianism. In 1560, a sion of faith was adopted, agreeing with nfession of the Reformed churches on the nent. The new church appointed minis- n various towns and organized congrega- on the Presbyterian model. It should be , however, that the Reformed churches on ontinent (which were the outgrowth of eformation) had the Preshyterian prin- in operation at an earlier date.

st Seeker, Baldwin City, Kan. When a ild, and during a revival, I went into the urch, but in the light of later years I feel at I was not converted. Can a person be nverted and not have the witness of the pirit that he is born again? Is it right r one to go into the church or remain in nder such circumstances? During a recent evival I went to the altar, but did not find hat I am seeking. I am willing to sur- ender everything, but I have not the bless- ng. Perhaps I am one who has been be- eving with the head instead of the heart. s is another case of an earnest soul doing thing hut the one thing that is necessnry. a great day it would be for the church all those who are in any way connected with church life, when the words of that simple hymn were mastered and accepted:

"Trusting Jesus—that is all!"

The fact that you are anxious and troubled shows that you are not trusting. You do not need to go back into the past to see if you made some blunder there. If there is sin in the past that needs to be made right, the Holy Spirit will tell you that plainly. But the time of salvation is now. The time to believe is now. Revival services are good; the altar is a good place to get help. But anywhere, at any time, you can begin to trust Jesus to forgive your sins and to cleanse your heart. The moment you actually trust him, that moment you will have peace.

P. W., Omaha, Neb. 1. Conditions in Corinth in the time of Paul were such that he thought it proper to warn the women of the Christian congregations against being led away by the froward and unseemly example of a certain class of Corinthian women, who were continually urging themselves to the front of affairs. What was then applicable in Corinth is not necessarily so here and now, and could not be, unless conditions were similar. 2. Cardinal Hugo de Sancto Caro, about the year 1250 A.D., divided the Bible into chapters. Rabbi Mordecai Nathan divided the Hebrew Bible into verses about 1430, and Robert Stephens made verse divisions in the New Testament in 1550. These divisions have been generally followed in subsequent revisions. 3. There are none of the original manuscripts of the New Testament books now in existence, the oldest extant being about the third century. 4. All nature compels the recognition of a Creator, and there is an apprehension of the Supreme Being even in the minds of the most savage tribes. 5. Theological authorities today look with disfavor on the claims of the "gift of tongues." They hold that the gift, which was specially manifested in the apostolic age, has not, as far as authentic records demonstrate, been continued, although some claim otherwise. It is safe to assert that whenever God has a message, he will make it intelligible to those for whom it is intended; and if it be not intelligible then it should be regarded as extremely doubtful.

P. W. L., Emerson, Manitoba. 1. What causes the different seasons? 2. Why is December 21 our shortest day? Why is January cold in Canada and hot in Australia?

Your three questions admit of one answer—the peculiar movement of the earth in its orbit round the sun causes the phenomena of which you inquire. To explain: In going around the sun the axis of the earth is not perpendicular to the plane of the ecliptic, but is slanted at an angle of 66½ degrees on one side and 23½ degrees on the other, with the result that different parts of the earth at times are more exposed to the sun than others. In other words, the sun appears to move to the northward and to the southward during the year. On March 20, the vernal equinox occurs; the sun is then right above the equator and the dividing line between light and shade passes through both poles, causing equal day and night over the earth. He then appears to move northward, rising higher and higher until June 21, the longest day. He then retraces his course, and moves southward, and on September 22 is again directly over the equator, causing the autumnal equinox. He continues southward until December 21, when it is the longest day in the southern hemisphere and the shortest in the northern. Of course the cold and the heat depend upon the coming and going of the sun, hence, while it is cold in Canada it is hot in Australia.

R. P., Kennebec, Me. Please tell me who are the Non-conformists, and why so called.

The Non-conformists are the people of England who refuse to join the established church there. The term particularly was applied to the clergymen who were ejected from their livings by the Act of Uniformity, passed under the Second Charles in 1662. There were about 2,000 of them. This act required that every clergyman should be ordained by a bishop, should assent to everything in the Book of Common Prayer, take the oath of Canonical Obedience, abjure the Solemn League and Covenant, and swear allegiance to the king. The Presbyterians, Independents and others refused, and for so doing were subjected to much persecution. On the accession of William III all was changed by the Toleration Act; there was no more persecution, and finally in the beginning of the eighteenth century every ban was removed. The Non-conformists then became known as "Dissenters." Both terms explain themselves.

T. P., Wheeling, Mo. Is there a way to know that we have obtained salvation? If so, please tell us how.

There are two kinds of "assurance," as taught by the creeds, and both of them are matters of ordinary, everyday experience by many Christians. There are certain clear statements in the Bible as to the kind of person a Christian is. He must bear certain signs and marks and do certain things. He must love God and his neighbor; he must love the church; he must be earnest and patient and bear the various "fruits of the Spirit." Now a person can tell whether he is doing those things, whether his soul has these marks or not. Added to this test, however, is the direct "witness of the Spirit," the Spirit himself bearing witness with our spirit that we are the children of God" (Rom. 8: 16; II Cor. 1: 22; Eph. 1: 13). This is the voice of God, assuring us that we are his. It is important to remember that we should not wait for assurance, but must persistently and with determination believe God's word. Any one who is in doubt whether he is a child of God or not should insist immediately upon beginning to trust him. We become Christians by believing that Christ really does forgive our sins and receive us, remembering that he said: "Him that cometh unto me I will in no wise cast out" (John 6: 37). As we continue to trust him we shall find ourselves manifesting the fruits of the Spirit, and God will whisper to us that we are his.

Regarding Advertising

ADVERTISING has changed greatly since the first issue of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD was printed. Through the persistent efforts of men in the advertising profession, the greater part of present-day advertising has become news. No responsible editor of a newspaper deliberately plans to print inaccurate news, and no sensible merchant attempts to deceive the people whom he wants to interest in his business. Whenever any of our subscribers is defrauded by an advertiser in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD we will make good the claim, provided that the subscriber, who must be of record, has mentioned THE CHRISTIAN HERALD in writing to the advertiser, and provided the claim is made to us within two months of the date of the appearance of the advertisement. ANSWERED PRAYERS

ONE of the first things I look for in your paper is the Answered Prayer column. Why do you leave out most of the wording of the letters? They influence many people as nothing else would." There is not room to print the letters in full. From the number of names and initials printed you may get some idea how much space would be required if the contents of every letter were published. Then, too, many letters simply state a desire to make acknowledgment of answers to prayer without making a statement as to what the prayers were. Ordinarily, those letters are selected which relate some particular incident that shows in a striking way God's goodness in answering prayer. But, after all, it is the great body of testimony that counts. These hundreds of people declaring solemnly that God has heard and answered their prayers ought to convince doubters that prayer is a practical matter and that it is well worth while from every standpoint to "carry everything to God in prayer."

A Reader from Sullivan, Ill., writes: "I wish to say that the answers to prayer in your paper are the most helpful of any part of the paper to me. I have had prayers answered many times, especially one this winter, and oh, I am praying so hard for something now that would bring happiness to myself and a number of others."

"I wish to acknowledge," writes M. D. from Springfield, Mass., "my devout thankfulness to Almighty God for sending recovery from a recent illness and complete restoration to health." An "Old Subscriber" writes from Santa Monica, Calif.: "I wish to thank God for watching over me in answer to prayer while I was in the hospital undergoing two operations."

Mrs. J. E. B., of Dove, Mo., writes: "Yes, I do believe in answered prayer. God has so graciously answered many prayers for me. I was in great trouble. It seemed as though my sorrow was more than I could bear. I prayed earnestly day and night. God lifted the burden, took away my sorrow. All glory and praise to his holy name!" E. D. B. writes: "I want to express my gratitude to God for sparing my husband's life. He was very sick; we prayed earnestly that God would spare his life, and our prayer was answered."

Miss B. W. B. writes from Conneautville, Pa.: "I asked the Lord to bring back to us that which was our own. My prayers were heard and answered. Surely God's Word is true. He says he will fight our battles for us and he promises to take care of his own; and if we live right and trust in him 'he will give us the desires of our hearts.' I worked along the line of these promises and rested on them, and my prayers were answered. Surely I am thankful."

Acknowledgments of answers to prayer have also been received from:

THE YOUNG PEOPLE'S MEETINGS

NOTES ON THE CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR, EPWORTH LEAGUE AND BAPTIST YOUNG PEOPLE'S UNION TOPICS

The Nature of the Kingdom*

JESUS kept insisting that he had come to establish a real kingdom. He found it very hard to make people understand what his kingdom was like. They thought that a kingdom meant horses and soldiers, state officers, opportunities for ambition, an open treasury and a throne. But Jesus, in his simple and beautiful life, much of the time without even a home, much less a palace, with never any crown except the crown of thorns at the end, with no soldiers and no horses and no treasury, was constantly talking about the kingdom, of which he was the Head.

From the parables of Jesus and from the whole spirit of the New Testament we learn that the kingdom of Jesus is a kingdom that relates to the heart rather than to the body. Not money nor birth nor locality can give us the right to belong to this kingdom. Not physical power nor wealth nor ambition can win us high rank in the kingdom.

The rich people in Christ's kingdom are those who love the most and who love so strongly that they are led to do deeds of kindness. The subjects who are closest to the King himself are those who love him most. He once took dinner with a great and rich man, and while he was dining there a sinful woman crept in to kiss and anoint his feet. He told his host that because much had been forgiven to this humble soul she had learned how to love abundantly and he placed the stamp of his kingly approval on her exhibition of affection.

The Scripture references call our attention to certain parables by which Jesus tried to illustrate the nature of his kingdom. One parable, which is not included in the list, gives almost the clearest idea of all; that is the parable of the Goodly Pearl (Matt. 13: 45-46). A place in Christ's kingdom is the one "pearl of great price" for which a man may wisely sacrifice every other thing in life. The kingdom of heaven is also like yeast, which permeates and sweetens the whole loaf (Matt. 13: 33). It is like the mustard seed, very small in its beginnings but mighty in its development (Matt. 13: 31-32). The kingdom of heaven develops gradually, steadily, according to fixed rules, as the blade of wheat grows from the seed in the ground until it produces the ripe head (Mark 4: 26-29). The kingdom of heaven exists side by side with the kingdom of the world, just as wheat and tares may grow in the same field (Matt. 13: 24-30), or as good and bad fishes are found in the same net when it is drawn from the sea (Matt. 13: 47-50). In the parable of the Wheat and Tares (Matt. 13: 24-30) Jesus insists that it is not the plan of his kingdom to exterminate those who will not join it. The method of the inquisition and the stake is not the method of our king. His kingdom wins its way by persuasion, by reason, by love.

The parable of the Sower of the Seed (Luke 8: 4-18) shows how different kinds of souls receive the announcement of the offers of the kingdom. Hearts that have been hardened by contact with the world do not welcome it. Hearts that are shallow welcome it and begin to live according to it, but when the tasks and trials of the kingdom face them they give up. Souls that are tangled up with many interests of this life do not give the truths of the kingdom a fair chance; although they may seem to receive it their lives are fruitless. Souls that are honest and willing hear the word, receive it, obey it, and bring forth fruit.

* THE NATURE OF THE KINGDOM. Epworth League Topic for Sunday, March 9, 1913. (Luke 8: 4-18; Matt. 13: 24-30; Mark 4: 26-29; Matt. 13: 31-33, 34, 47-50.)

Obeying Conscience*

EVERY human being has many interesting and many troublesome as well as many happy experiences with that mysterious thing called conscience. Conscience is a very difficult thing to define. Some teachers have held that it is the direct and personal voice of God in the human soul, but this can hardly be so, because if it were, conscience would lead all sincere people to do the same things. As a matter of fact, the most conscientious people are constantly differing as to what their duty is. There were great Christians among both officers and men during the Civil War, and those in the ranks of the South were just as sure that they were fighting on God's side as the men of the North. In small matters as well as in great this same fact is illustrated: that the best people frequently differ about questions of duty.

Conscience can probably best be defined as that function of the soul which determines and declares whether or not the will has made the best possible decision in matters of right and wrong in the light of all the information at hand. The right or wrong of a man's act is based upon what he knows. If he does the wrong thing, thinking that it is right, his conscience has nothing to say. Enlightenment must come through further observation, through study of the Scriptures, and through the direct and personal counsel of the Holy Spirit. This is how it happens that an act which a Christian might perform at one time without troubling his conscience will bring him condemnation at a later time. He has learned more, and the new standard of knowledge requires a new standard of action.

Our Scripture reference, I John 3: 18-24, urges us in the first place to be sincere and practical in our exercise of Christian love. John declares that a clear conscience gives us the assurance that we are in God's favor. He states also the rights of a clear conscience: "If our heart condemn us not, then have we confidence toward God. And whatsoever we ask we receive of him, because we keep his commandments and do those things that are pleasing in his sight." He then states what are the conditions of a clear conscience. If we believe on the name of God's Son and love one another as he commanded us, our conscience will be clear. He states finally the rewards of a clear conscience. The reward is that we dwell in God and he dwells in us.

Nothing in all the world is so important as to keep our consciences clear. St. Paul was a very busy man, doing many difficult things, all of them important and urgent, and yet he implied that he made it his chief concern to keep his conscience void of offense (Acts 24: 16). No possible earthly gain can compensate the loss of a clear conscience. Many a man has found to his unbearable sorrow that the money or position he has won at the cost of a clear conscience is worse than worthless. How many times do young people find that in choosing a certain pleasure against the advice of conscience the thing which they thought would bring them delight brings instead a sharp distress! It is always a poor bargain.

Conscience always must have right of way. It must be kept sensitive and every fresh bit of information we receive, every new power of will we gain, must be thrown whole-heartedly into the task of obeying conscience and following its leadings toward happiness and success.

Like Bubbles in a Bowl of Milk

Here's an idea which is being used in a million homes, we think.

Instead of bread or crackers, Puffed Grains are served in milk.

Note what the users gain.

The grains are much crisper than crackers.

They are four times as porous as bread.

They are whole-grain foods, not merely the flour.

The taste is like toasted nuts.

Puffed Grains are light and airy. They float on milk. Yet a touch of the teeth will crush them into almond-flavored granules.

And these exploded grains are twice as digestible as the best other cereal food.

In the Morning

For breakfast serve with cream and sugar, or mix the grains with fruit.

For dinner serve as wafers in your soup. Or scatter them over a dish of ice cream, to give you a nut-like blend.

But for suppers or luncheons, or a bedtime dish, serve in bowls of milk.

You will say that these thin, crisp, toasted wafers are the most enticing foods you know.

Puffed Wheat, 10c
Puffed Rice, 15c
Except in Extreme West

Prof. Anderson's Foods

These are the foods which experts know as Prof. Anderson's foods.

They are made by steam explosion—by being shot from guns. The millions of granules inside of each grain are literally blasted to pieces.

That's what makes them so porous. That is why they digest. And the nut-like taste results from applying 550 degrees of heat.

Puffed Grains, as every expert knows, are the best-cooked foods in existence.

And 250,000,000 dishes last year were consumed by the people who love them.

Tell your grocer to send a package of each. Then try out these ways of serving.

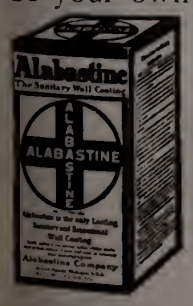
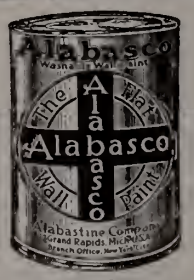
Alabastine

The Beautiful Wall Tint

Alabastine tinting will beautify every room in your home and give the walls a perfect finish. Alabastine tints have never been equalled though there have been many imitators. Do not confuse Alabastine and kalsomine. The colors in cheap cotton fabrics are not to be compared with the soft tones of rich velvets. The colors of Alabastine are so vastly superior to all kalsomine colors, do not—if you love beauty, if you care for the looks of your walls—do not let them be made common by kalsomine. Get the Alabastine Book—examine the beautiful tints and be your own judge. Wall paper has been barred from schools because it breeds disease and spreads contagion. It is dangerous in the home. Alabastine is absolutely sanitary. Moreover it gives you individual color schemes and stencil patterns. Alabastine is the easiest material to put on the walls, keeps in condition longest and pound for pound goes furthest, therefore it is the most economical to use. Comes in full 5-lb. packages ready for use. No expensive oil required or hot water muss. Simply mix with cold water and put on with a regular 7 or 8 inch wall brush.





Liquid Form

Alabasco

The Flat Wall Paint

It is not practical for the housewife to wash her ceilings and upper walls, but it is practical, and not at all expensive, to use Alabasco, our washable paint, in places exposed to finger marks and wear—below the chair rail in dining rooms and halls, along the stairway, in bathroom and nursery—also for kitchens and cupboards. Then these places can readily be washed with soap and water when soiled. This keeps the decorating above and below fresh and clean. Alabasco, like Alabastine, comes in a wide variety of beautiful tints and does not chip, peel or rub off when properly applied. Write today for The Alabastine Book which explains our Free Color Plans and Stencil Offer. Vitalized Rubber calls a halt on "Short Mileage!"

At last science gives you more rubber shod mileage.

Diamond (No Clinch) Tires

made of VITALIZED RUBBER —a scientific combination of pure rubber and a toughening compound.

You get Vitalized Rubber in Diamond Tires—NOW

A tire made of pure rubber only would fail to give the necessary mileage because it would not be tough enough to withstand road usage. And a tire containing too little pure rubber would not have the necessary staying qualities.

Our chemists have discovered how to scientifically toughen pure rubber by a new process. The result is additional mileage for you. The pure rubber we use comes direct from the trees of the tropics—it is fresh and contains all the vitality of youth—it is elastic and easy riding. Then we toughen this pure rubber so as to give it the necessary vitalizing, wearing, more mileage quality.

This scientific secret process has been vainly sought after for years by tire makers. After 15 years of successful tire making we have solved the problem—and you enjoy the benefit of our really wonderful discovery—in "Diamond" Vitalized Rubber Tires.

Add to this the Diamond proven principles of proper construction —nothing inferior in rubber, fabric or workmanship—and you have as perfect a tire as money can buy.

Here is a combination of easy riding and more mileage advantages you can't get in any other tire today—Vitalized Rubber, Perfect 3-Point Rim Contact, No-Pinch Safety Flap, for inner tube protection, and if you wish, the now famous Safety (Squeegee) Tread—made to fit all types of rims.

So this time specify Diamond Vitalized Rubber Tires—You can get them in all sizes and types at any of the 25,000 Diamond Dealers always at your Service

A perfect 3-Point Rim Contact Tire at last

Diamond 3-Point Rim Contact Tires hold with a vise-like grip absolutely preventing the tire from breaking above the rim, insuring no rim skid—no rim trouble at all.

Our engineers have mastered the principles of Rim Contact construction, and you can get the Diamond (No-Clinch) Tire, with a perfect 3-Point Rim Contact—an important advantage that has been heretofore overlooked.

No-Pinch Safety Flap absolutely protects the inner tube

The No-Pinch Safety Flap that comes in every Diamond (No-Clinch) Tire will reduce your inner tube bills—because it forms a substantial wall separation between the inner tube and the rim, making it impossible for the inner tube to be pinched or cut under the rim, or injured by rim rust.

This No-Pinch Safety Flap is made of the best grade of fabric, and is finished with a "Feather Edge" as a further protection against inner tube cutting.

There is no rubber in this flap to adhere or vulcanize, so that the inner tube can be quickly and easily removed at all times—another big Diamond advantage.

Diamond Safety (Squeegee) Tread for Automobiles, Motorcycles, and Bicycles.

The guarantee on Diamond Tires becomes null and void when used in connection with any substitute for air, fitted to rims not bearing one of these inspection stamps or having had its serial number removed in whole or part

"Keep a thing seven years and you will find a use for it."

Doubtless you have in your attic a trunkful of odds and ends such as trimmings and draperies whose places have been usurped by newer things. Yet many of these pieces if restored to their original brightness would suggest the use which the proverb promises.

Try Ivory Soap. You will be surprised at the way it brings back the old time charm to laces, silks, tapestries, velvets, beaded ornaments, etc. And the beauty about it is that it can be used safely on the most delicate and highly prized articles which ordinarily you never would think of washing with soap and water.

Just remember that you can use Ivory Soap on anything that water itself will not harm and you will find the attic trunk a veritable treasure chest.

A SCENE AT MOSUL, ONE OF THE ANCIENT CITIES ON THE BANKS OF THE TIGRIS RIVER

AROUND THE WALLS OF OLD NINEVEH

BY PROFESSOR EDGAR J. BANKS

ON HORSEBACK along the summit of the walls of the old city of Nineveh; that has been my work to-day. It is a journey of but three hours or of eight miles, yet there are so many things of interest to see, so many old ruins to examine, that a full day is scarcely long enough to make the complete circuit as one should. The Book of Jonah calls Nineveh a great city of three days' journey. Had Jonah stopped to admire the palaces along the walls, or to study the strange sights which must have met his eyes, he might have found the three days too short.

In its day, Nineveh was the greatest city in the world, and now its ruins are as imposing as the city was great. Sixty-five years ago Layard discovered the palaces of its kings and carried their treasures away to England. Since then visitors to the ruins have been few, and only during the present wave of reform in Turkey have the Arabs begun to use the ruins as a quarry. Now they are searching them for marble, which they may convert to lime, or for other stones for building material. Occasionally they are bringing to light treasures of great value. The old city walls are being torn down that their stones may be used for other purposes. Nineveh and its surroundings of to-day present a new picture to the traveler.

The ruins of Nineveh stand on the left shore of the Tigris about five hundred miles from its mouth. Directly opposite the ruins is Mosul, the second largest city in Mesopotamia. Many of its seventy thousand people are Chaldeans, now Christians, the descendants of the people of old Nineveh. In form and face they resemble the figures sculptured upon the Assyrian bas reliefs of marble; their language, excepting in written form, differs little from that of the Assyrian kings. Their houses, their dress, their customs are similar to those of their ancestors. Only the palaces of the kings were far more imposing than any these modern Assyrians have built. Stand in one of the crowded narrow streets of Mosul, eliminate from the crowd the Turks and half the Arabs, scatter about a few helmeted soldiers with short tunics, and you have a pretty good picture of a street in ancient Nineveh.

Now a large new arched bridge, aided by a short bridge of boats, connects Mosul with Nineveh. Let us stand at its western end. Below is a kelek, or goat-skin raft, laden with freight and passengers, ready for a ten days' trip down the river to Bagdad. Above the bridge, on the rocks projecting from the water, and along the banks, a hundred women are beating the dirt from their clothes and spreading them in the ancient fashion on the shore to dry. Large troops of camels come straggling along and wade knee deep into the water to drink. Farther along are the booths of the venders of watermelons, which are larger even than the prize pumpkin at an American agricultural fair. The grapes and melons of Assyria are unsurpassed.

Beyond the bridge and gardens and irrigating trenches, now fully a mile away, are the old walls of Nineveh. In ancient times the river used to flow along at their base, but the course of the Tigris is always changing. Imagine a ridge of dirt, with steep sides like the roof of a house, from thirty to forty feet high, so sharp along the top that there is scarcely room for a narrow path, and you have a picture of the walls of Nineveh. In company with Dr. Stanley, an English medical missionary of Mosul, I made their complete circuit on horseback. In shape the city was a somewhat irregular quadrangle, with its longer sides running north and south. The northern portion of the city was wide; the southern was very narrow. A river, now called the Khasr, divided it into two parts; it still waters the gardens along its shores. Below the Khasr we mounted the western wall and rode southward. From the summit the entire south wall is visible. In places along its outer base the Arabs were busily digging trenches to the center to find the old foundation stones.

Arabs Destroying a Marble Monument at Nineveh

It has long been supposed that the walls of Nineveh were of mud bricks, but these modern excavators have shown that the foundations were of massive blocks of white limestone. Only the outer and inner courses were of well cut stones, while the stones between were in the rough. The height of the

NEW YORK'S FAREWELL TO MR. BRYCE

The Guest Table and Some of Those Present at the Luncheon Given by the New York Federal Council of Churches in Honor of Rt. Hon. James Bryce

OF THE many impressive functions held in honor of Ambassador Bryce on the occasion of his leaving the United States, none was of greater interest to CHRISTIAN HERALD readers than the farewell luncheon given him at the Hotel Astor on February 17 by the Clerical Conference of the New York Federation of Churches. The gathering was most remarkable in the wide divergence of the religious faiths represented. Yet the men present were bound together by an earnest moral purpose, by faith in the one true God, and by the desire to honor the noble Christian man who has won so large a place in the affections of the American people.

Bishop Greer, who presided, called the affair a "Love Feast." Seated at the speakers' table were Ambassador Bryce, former Ambassador Choate, Bishop Greer of the Protestant Episcopal Church, Bishop Wilson of the Methodist Episcopal Church, Dr. J. H. Jowett, Rabbi Stephen S. Wise, Dr. Josiah Strong, Monsignor McCarty, Dr. S. Edward Young, president of the conference, and others. In delightfully well-chosen words, Bishop Greer introduced Bishop Wilson, who made a most impressive address to the retiring ambassador.

Ambassador Bryce was deeply moved as he rose to reply. He modestly disclaimed the right to such high praise as had been given him by the two bishops, and throughout his speech gave evidence of that spirit of humility and lack of pretense which are the marks of the truly great. He referred to the progress made in developing the spirit of unity among religious workers and to the growing insistence of the claims of practical duty. He spoke with special earnestness of the particular problems facing a great city like New York, and referred in detail to the problem of the immigrant.

"There is nothing," he declared, "more urgent for all patriotic American citizens in all the great cities of the country than to endeavor to help all the new immigrants and make good citizens out of them, not only by instructing them in the new duties and responsibilities to which they come in this country, but also by extending human sympathy to them and endeavoring to permeate them with American traditions and American ideals. The temptations that beset the children of the new immigrants are more numerous and more severe than they have had in the countries from which they came just because they are taken out of an established society and thrown into a new society which is unfamiliar to them. There is a vast sphere of work open here to those who desire to render service to the generations to come."

Probably the most dramatic moment of the hour was that in which the ambassador, referring to the duty of all ministers of religion "to stimulate, vivify and intensify spiritual life among the people," approached the name of Christ. Out of deference to the Jews present, one of whom was to speak, little or nothing distinctly Christian had been said by the speakers. The gathering was an expression by representatives of the religious forces of the city of their esteem for a great statesman. But Ambassador Bryce became so earnest in his appeal that the naming of the great Name was inevitable. He urged the teaching of the messages of the Hebrew prophets and the New Testament. He repeated the phrase, and said that the spirit of both were the same. He went on, with still greater intensity: "The message which was stated and exemplified in the life and words and deeds of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ." It was a beautiful and tremendous tribute by one of the world's greatest men to the world's one Redeemer. And even Rabbi Wise seemed to bow his head in acquiescence.

Mr. Choate, Rabbi Wise and Dr. Jowett followed with brief addresses.

AROUND THE WALLS OF OLD NINEVEH

foundation wall varied, but in places it was fully ten feet. Above the foundations the walls were continued with large sun-dried bricks to a great height. In time, after the city was deserted, the edges of the mud walls crumbled away, and falling, concealed the stone foundations beneath. As they crumbled still more, there was left but a little ridge along the center of the top, and even the ridge has been worn away, becoming lower century by century, so that the original height of the walls may no longer be known, yet in places they still reach forty feet above their base.

Just what the ancient gates were like, none can now say, for the excavator has not yet uncovered them. Only at the gate in the northern wall have the Arabs dug away the fallen dirt, revealing a great marble slab engraved with the figure of a winged bull. The gateways of Nineveh, therefore, were faced with slabs of sculptured marble; probably they were arched above and gorgeously decorated. When we leave the walls to go down into the city, we can hardly believe that we are on the site of the ancient Assyrian capital. There are hundreds of acres of barley growing in its season; hundreds of camels are grazing over the waste places. Here and there are small black tents of the Arabs who have settled within the walls. Along the shores of the Khasr are patches of melons and vineyards, and one prosperous Arab has built an imposing summer home. The greater part of the surface of Nineveh differs not at all from the surrounding plain.

The site of Nineveh is almost perfectly level. Here and there are slight elevations which might be taken for natural hills. Few brick or pottery fragments appear on the surface. But adjoining the western wall are two huge mounds concealing the palaces of the greatest kings of Assyria. The lower or southern mound is the smaller, and perhaps of greater interest, for it is occupied by a mosque and a village of considerable size. Its name is Nebi Yunus, or the Prophet Jonah, for in the mosque is the tomb in which Jonah is said to have been buried. The age of the tomb is uncertain, yet probably it dates from long after the Hebrew prophet's time. However, the place is now sacred, so sacred that pilgrims visit it from afar.

I rode up the steep, narrow streets of the village to the mosque, and to the amazement of the natives I dismounted and entered the mosque yard. A crowd of excited men quickly surrounded me. To a priest I explained that I had come to see the grave of Jonah, and with a motion of the hand I made it understood that he would be rewarded. Removing my shoes, I followed the priest through a dark passageway. There he pointed to a wall and said that the tomb was just beyond. I wished to enter the prayer-room from which the tomb itself might be seen, but the place was considered far too sacred for my profane feet. However, the few Christians who have been permitted to see the tomb may look only through a small window into a dark chamber in which a cloth-covered mound is scarcely discernible. It is said that no Moslem, even, will enter the inner shrine.

If we follow the wall from Nebi Yunus to the north half a mile, and over the Khasr by a new stone bridge, we come to Kouyunjik, the largest mound of Nineveh. Covering about a hundred acres, it rises in places to the height of one hundred and fifty feet. Its sides are so steep that one may ride to the summit only up the winding paths made by the grazing camels. Here, in 1845, Layard found the palaces of Sennacherib and Esarhaddon, and thousands of clay tablets of the Nineveh library. Here, still later, George Smith discovered parts of the Babylonian story of the Deluge, and since then Rassam and King have excavated with success.

After all this labor, you might suppose that the mound has been thoroughly excavated; but only a part of the surface has been scratched. It would take a thousand men a hundred years to thoroughly excavate the entire city. The surface is of hard clay. If you linger long among the ruins, you will see the head of an Arab peeking cautiously at you from behind some hill. He is an illicit antiquity-digger. If you convince him that you are friendly and will not betray him to the police, he will show you what he has found. One of these illicit diggers led me to a little hollow where two of his companions were working and some donkeys were standing by. Scarcely beneath the surface they had discovered a great marble bull deity, such a monument as those which grace the Assyrian galleries of the British Museum. It bore a long inscription in large cuneiform characters. With hammers and bars and drills the Arabs had broken the monument to pieces. I photographed two of the inscribed fragments, but they were then quickly broken up and loaded onto the donkeys. Should you follow the donkeys to the eastern wall, just where the Khasr enters the city, there you will find a kiln. Into it the marble fragments are thrown and converted to lime.

Nineveh is passing away. Its walls are a quarry; its marble sculptures form the lime. Even the ruins of this once great city are passing away.

MADERO SLAIN ON HIS WAY TO PRISON

INAUGURATION OF HUERTA AS THE NEW PRESIDENT OF MEXICO RAPIDLY FOLLOWED BY MYSTERIOUS SLAUGHTER OF MADERO AND SUAREZ, FORMER PRESIDENT AND VICE-PRESIDENT

MEXICO'S revolution has culminated in a frightful tragedy. Ex-President Francisco I. Madero and ex-Vice-President José Pino Suarez were shot to death on Sunday morning, February 23, under circumstances that indicate a deliberate assassination plot. The slim pretext that the shooting occurred during an attempted "rescue" by Madero's partisans has been put forth by the government, but finds few believers.

After being defeated and deposed from the presidency, Madero, it was announced by the new administration, was to be sent out of the country into exile. Provisional President Huerta and some members of the Diaz faction were so bitter against Madero that the latter's friends feared that some pretext would be sought to execute him. It had first been promised that he would be tried and sent into exile, but on various pretexts the new régime changed its program. Fearing treachery, Madero's friends made a strong appeal for his life and his wife pleaded personally with President Huerta. Our government in Washington, through Hon. Henry Lane Wilson, our ambassador in Mexico, on February 21 received assurances that the deposed president would not be put to death. What these assurances were worth can now be estimated in the light of events twenty-four hours later. Soon after midnight Saturday, February 22, Madero and Suarez, under orders from President Huerta, were taken from the palace prison hurriedly, placed in an automobile, and, accompanied by an armed escort, were driven to the military penitentiary, Huerta's explanation being that this was a measure of precaution for the prisoners' safety. On the same day, but many hours afterward, the foreign diplomats in Mexico City were called together by the order of the president and Minister de la Barra. Then, with many expressions of regret, they were told of the death of Madero and Suarez, as the result of an attempted "rescue" while on the way to prison. They were stunned at the news, although they had already forebodings of such a tragedy. Minister de la Barra explained that their "rescue" had been attempted soon after midnight, an attack being made by Maderists on the three automobiles containing Madero, Suarez and the government guards. Soon the assailants were reinforced by a larger party. Shooting lasted twenty minutes, and when the attacking party was finally beaten off, the dead bodies of Madero and Suarez were found. The ex-president had only one wound—a bullet had entered at the back of the head and emerged at the forehead—but Pino Suarez had many wounds. The two had attempted flight, but under the "ley de fuga"—which justifies the killing of an escaping prisoner—they had been shot down. Several other persons were wounded and the automobiles badly riddled by bullets.

Although the new administration in Mexico City has issued a statement deploring the tragedy and expressing its purpose of bringing the perpetrators to justice, the foreign diplomatic delegation has little confidence in the government's attitude. There are many circumstances connected with the death of Madero that point to deliberate assassination. That it will render the seat of the present government doubly insecure is almost certain, for a large proportion of the Mexican people themselves regard the deaths of Madero and Suarez as murder, plotted beforehand and now clumsily covered up by official excuses. In the United States the news of the killing of Madero was regarded as a typical outcome of the conditions that have prevailed in the Central American republics for years past. We have now ten thousand troops conveniently near the Mexican border and ready for eventualities.

THE LAST WEEK OF THE REVOLUTION

An armistice between the revolutionary troops under General Diaz and the federal forces commanded by General Huerta for Madero lasted only for a few hours on the morning of February 16. Before noon of that day the artillery duel was resumed in the heart of the City of Mexico. Both sides were confident of their ability to win. Despatches from outside the city told of the movements of the various bodies of troops which had aligned themselves with the two leaders, though a few were still counted as uncertain. General Aureliano Blanquet was reported hurrying to the capital to lend his support to the federal forces. Upon his arrival he was greeted by General Huerta and for a short time it seemed as if the federal side had received in this reinforcement such additional strength that they would finally dislodge General Diaz from his stronghold in the arsenal.

The seventeenth of February was another day of heavy artillery fire. The position of the foreigners in the city is becoming more and more precarious every hour, and the military attachés of the various embassies were called upon to exercise the greatest care and give repeated warning to their fellow countrymen against careless exposure to danger.

The despatches of the 18th were a great surprise even to those who had heard the uncertain and rather mixed reports that some unexpected move was to be made. General Madero was, that morning, no longer president of his country, but a prisoner of his own troops in the national palace. Madero's downfall was directly traceable to the feeling among the federal troops that their lives were being needlessly sacrificed for the aggrandizement of a man whom the country no longer cared to support. The troops, when ordered to advance upon the arsenal, turned in open insurrection, and though it is reported that their officers went to the utmost extremes to make them fight, they refused to do so.

The same attitude was assumed, though not in such belligerent fashion, by the two leading generals, Huerta and Blanquet. They, after consultation, decided that the time had come when Francisco Madero must be compelled to resign for the good of the country. The generals entered the national palace and at the very muzzles of their pistols made Madero a prisoner and compelled his resignation. Gustavo Madero, the brother of the former President, who held the portfolio of minister of finance, was arrested with a group of Madero's cabinet officers and most enthusiastic supporters just as he was finishing dinner at the Central Restaurant. The prisoners were turned over to General Diaz and on the following morning Gustavo Madero was executed in the open square of the arsenal.

Victoriano Huerta, the New President of Mexico

After the sudden blow which put him in command of the situation, General Huerta spoke to a great crowd that gathered before the national palace. He said "The killing of brother by brother is over. The people should embrace one another and live in peace. They need peace so that they may develop their land and industries." He made plain his own position, assuring the crowd that he had taken the presidency with no desire to serve any personal ends and would hand over the direction of the government to the duly elected choice of the people. This assurance that he would make no attempt to retain the presidency against the will of the people was repeated to a deputation from the diplomatic corps. The populace was wildly elated by the termination of the great battle which had kept them in peril for more than nine days. The news spread rapidly, and soon the bells of the cathedral were ringing and the streets were filled with people cheering for Diaz, Huerta, Blanquet and Mondragon.

It was expected that the deposed president would be immediately deported, but he was detained for some time pending investigations which the Mexican congress wished to make.

It is generally believed that the action of Madero's generals was hurried by the accidental discovery among his documents of a memorandum of "those who ought to die." This slip of paper bore twenty-two names of Mexico's most famous and prominent men. Among them were Francisco de la Barra, J. Flores Magen, Manuel Calero, Alberto Garcia Granados and Dr. Vasquez Gomez. So great has been the fear of some of these men that they would be assassinated at the instigation of the Maderos that they had been practically in hiding for several days. Señor de la Barra remained at the British legation making no pretenses to any other reason than that he feared for his life if he ventured out. General Huerta, in an official statement, says that two attempts were made against his life, both of which he attributes to the Maderos.

There was at first great fear lest the personal ambitions of Huerta and Diaz should clash and bring on another civil struggle. This fear was quieted, however, when Diaz stated that his full support was for Huerta as provisional president. In a statement to the editor of one of the big New York dailies, General Diaz said: "I am confident that the situation is the beginning of peace and progress for the republic. . . . The lives and properties of citizens and foreigners will be fully guaranteed. To this end General Huerta, the head of the executive government, will devote himself effectively, and the general-in-chief of the army will co-operate with him."

On February 19 the shutters commenced to come down from business buildings that had not been opened for ten days and the streets were beginning to assume their normal appearance. Hundreds of American residents and other foreigners returned from the zone of safety around the United States embassy to their homes in various parts of the city. Many found that their residences had been wrecked by exploding shells and scarcely a house had escaped being hit by rifle bullets. On account of the havoc wrought by the artillery fire several of the industrial concerns were unable to resume operations until repairs had been made.

Some of the reports from the towns nearer the Texas border have produced considerable uneasiness, as it is believed that the rebellious elements of the northern States would prefer Señor de la Barra as provisional president, and that they will remain in arms in an attempt to have their way in the matter.

One of the latest reports from the interior makes it quite plain that the revolution throughout the republic is still far from ended. It was stated that Emilio Vasquez Gomez would persist in his efforts to secure for himself the post of provisional president, and though it is, in some quarters, taken for granted that Zapata will continue to keep his thousands of semi-brigand troops in the South there is no certainty as to what his next move will be. The officials in most of the State capitals, however, have assured the newly established government of their loyalty, and little difficulty in the continuation of the affairs of the civil government in these quarters is anticipated.

It has been impossible, so far, to gain any accurate information as to the fatalities connected with this nine-day revolution. The Diaz adherents acknowledge about one hundred killed and a hundred and fifty wounded, while in the opposing forces there were upwards of four hundred deaths and five hundred serious wounds acknowledged. These numbers, it is believed, far understate the facts, as the number of non-combatants killed and wounded was very large and accurate details are lacking.

The State Department at Washington has been watching the situation very closely, and, in fear lest further fighting take place and the lives and property of American citizens be imperiled, directed the Secretary of the Navy to order what was termed a practice expeditionary force to embark and sail for Cuba, so that they might be near the scene of trouble if their services were needed.

In the afternoon of February 21 General Felix Diaz was given a remarkable demonstr tion of popular approval. He rode to the palace at the head of his troops and received a great ovation. At the palace he was received by President Huerta and the two leaders exchanged felicitations. At four o'clock of the same day President Huerta and his cabinet took the oath of office in the palace. The ceremony took place in a chamber immediatetly above that in which the deposed president and vice-president were held as prisoners.

DELIVERANCE IN TEMPTATION

A SERMON

By

TEXT: "Lead us not into temptation, but deliver us from evil." Matt. 6: 13

THE Lord's Prayer begins with this introduction: "Our Father, which art in heaven." And this is all-embracing, all-comprehending, for those who honestly say it. Then: "Hallowed be thy name," the most sacred name, never to be used lightly, irreverently, profanely. How sadly this is forgotten by tens of thousands, who constantly blaspheme the hallowed name! "Thy kingdom come" means that we are to help in bringing in the kingdom and extending the kingdom. "Thy will be done on earth as it is done in heaven." That means by us who are here, as by those who are there above. They do his will as far as they understand that will. We are bound to do his will as far as we can or do understand it. "Give us this day our needed bread"—the only petition for things temporal in the whole prayer. It is truly significant and very impressive, for we cannot pray for the morrow. That is not ours; we may never see it. It is ours to live well to-day and the morrow will not disappoint us. "Forgive us our debts as we forgive our debtors." That does not permit us to ask that our Father be as good as we are; but it does ask that we be imbued with the forgiving spirit before we can hope to be forgiven.

And now, "Lead us not into temptation, but deliver us from evil." This has been much misunderstood, misinterpreted and wrongly defined. Men have said that such a prayer could never have been taught us by the Master, for it is so opposed to his interpretation of the Father's love. They think there must be some mistake somewhere. Some well-meaning people have openly rebelled against it and refused to repeat it publicly or privately. They have asked: "Why should our Father, who loves us, is so interested in us and cares for us as a tender shepherd, ever be asked not to lead us into temptation? Surely he would not do that! Surely he would lead us into the safest places, free from dangers of any and all kinds, where the voice of temptation is never heard."

God's Leadership

Thus we reason; but unfortunately for our reason, our experiences teach us quite another lesson. Experience often contradicts reason. The words are here; they are a part of this prayer. We must take them as they are; understand them if we can, and if not we must patiently wait for more light or fuller revelation. Our Father is both a leader and a guide. These are quite different. The leader directs us, goes before us, it may be in the way we know quite well. A leader of an army may lead over ways well known, and yet he leads for inspiration, for example, for enthusiasm, or to arouse courage. He does not carry. He leads where the test is made and it is best his soldiers follow, though it may be where they would not choose to go. They might say, "Oh, lead us not this way" and follow still. Every teacher, reformer, pastor, parent is a leader, often in the paths of trial and experience. The word that is here translated "lead us" is one of subtle and wonderful meaning. It is eisphero, and means not only to guide and direct, but to carry, to bear in the arms. Then it is not the one who goes before us as a leader, but the one who takes us in his arms and carries us, shields us, protects us, and assumes all the responsibility. This is very well for children; it is not best for older boys and girls or for men and women. We know that responsibility is a good thing. Our heavenly Father knows that it is a good thing that we learn to struggle and to battle and to conquer. We are then taught to pray that we are to meet and take the responsibilities of life; that we are not to be carried as a babe is carried in the arms of a parent, but we are to confidently trust our divine Guide and go bravely forward.

A guide is one who takes us in the way we do not know, or where the way is dark, or dangerous, or intricate—the path up the mountain or down in the valley, or through the windings of the cave. You may be blind and need the guide to go safely, or you may be ignorant and need the guide.

You may become confused and so not know the way. I, one day some years ago, heard the voice of a child, a little girl, on the street. She was calling my name in terror, for she was lost, and running up to me she cried, "Take me home! Take me home!" At first I said: "Little girl, I do not know you. I am afraid I cannot take you home." Oh, yes, you can; yes, you can; you know where I live. My name is Florence Moore." Then she clung tightly to me, saying all the time, "You will take me home, won't you?" With her confidence and hope there was mingled just a little of fear and anxiety. That is the way with all of us. Our faith is often a very weak faith and our confidence is often mixed with feverish anxiety. Now let us remember that the petition is, bring us not, or carry us not into temptation. If we are to face temptation, let us face it, conquer it, and be made stronger by it. This could not be if we were wholly protected from it and its subtle power. It is the negative statement of the petition, "Lead us, lead us where we shall be safe! Lead us where we may through thy grace conquer. Lead us where it is best for us. Lead us toward home."

How Shall We Be Proved?

Now, the word "temptation" must have more than a passing notice. It is a word of much meaning. It means experiment or trial, or an attempt or proving. Surely we are not to pray that we shall never be tried, never have the privilege of making new and exciting attempts, never advance by experiment, never know what the test of manhood is. We must know these things. They are for our good. We must know the trial of our fidelity. How shall we know the worth of fidelity if it is not tested? How shall we know whether or not we are faithful if we are never entrusted with great concerns or with great responsibilities? How shall our integrity be proved, if that integrity is never brought face to face with the one who would lead us from our integrity? How shall virtue be tested if the siren voice of the temptress is never heard and if her blandishments are never known? How shall we know whether we are generous or not, if there be no appeals to our generosity? There are voices that call away. There are false promises of success. There are thousands of influences brought to bear upon the human heart, and the heart would never grow strong to resist them were it not allowed to put forth some mighty effort in the fight against wrong, or were it carried along in the fight passively and quietly.

But temptation means even more, for it may mean a mental state in which we are enticed to sin, a sin of omission or of commission. Temptation may come when you are sorely afflicted and you may question God's love and care, or your own experience. It may come in mystery, in things you cannot understand, and in the hours of ignorance you are tempted and the foundations of your faith are shaken. So it is in the hours of weakness or suffering or adversity. God does not shield us from these things and we may not pray that he do so, that he bear us up and let us not feel them. But we may pray that his grace come to us and that thus we win in the fight!

To Fail at the Testing-Time

In the third place, this petition recognizes the weakness of the human heart and its needs. How weak we are at our best! How prone to neglect duty! How easily led from the straight path! How soon discouraged! How self-will comes up and asserts itself! How easily we yield when we should be firm! How easily we say yes when we should say no! How often the opportunity comes to each of us, and we fail in courage, or tact, or grace, or love, to improve it! How about those with whom we associated the past week? Did we try to help them? How about those who have been in our homes, friends or strangers? How about those we call friends who are not Christian men and women? Have they seen our light burning? Have they felt the warmth and inspiration of our lives? Have they read us as living epistles of Jesus Christ? Have they recognized us as ambassadors of the King? Or have they felt after being with us for a while that our Christianity is not a very vital thing after all, not very practical? Very often we are thrown into the society of those who are carelessly drifting. These know that we make a profession of faith in Christ. They have a right to expect us to prove that faith. We fail at the testing-time, and their confidence in our fidelity is shaken, and the power of our influence over them is vitiated. We do not speak the word in season. We do not invite them to the house of worship. Were we to do so they might hear the winning word of life and to their great joy accept it. Why are these things so? Is it because we are timid or half-hearted? Do we not too easily conform to the world? We dread being discourteous. Let us not forget that it is always a mark of courtesy to invite men and women to better things. It is always courtesy to invite your guest to the house of worship. We have not prayed, "Lead us not into temptation"; and so we do not see our opportunities, and they pass unimproved.

If we pray this prayer, we shall feel our weakness and seek the strength that never fails, and with the temptation He will provide a way of escape. Thousands are failing because they do not pray this prayer. They grow ever weaker rather than stronger. Is one in the habit of turning in the ways of temptation through drink? Let him pray this prayer! In the ways of the impure life? Let him pray this prayer! In the ways of dishonesty, doubt or despair? Let him pray this prayer. This would help them grow strong for any and every trying experience. These may prove that He is able to bring them off more than conquerors.

If we will but yield to God so perfectly that all our character and all our conduct is controlled by the divine will, we shall be gladly submissive to whatever may come in the changeful events of life. If we never heard what it means to yield to the divine will, we shall become the hopeless victims of crowding temptations.

We must not be surprised if the same kinds of temptation come again and again. We may think we have conquered; that we are free and the conflict is over for good. Then suddenly, when we are least prepared, in the moment of our weakness, they assail the soul more fiercely than ever. Satan does not give up his efforts after one defeat. He is persistent and tireless.

God's Power to Deliver Us

We are in danger of forgetting the last of this petition: "Deliver us from evil." That word now calls for our attention. What does deliver mean? It means to draw to one's self, protect, free, cause to escape. When we pray: "Lead us not into temptation," we mean, "Deliver us from evil, draw us to thyself, set us free, help us escape." How illuminating this is! Are we not sometimes very much like the children, tired, very tired; weak, very weak; helpless, very helpless, and the cry goes up, Take us in your arms. Press us to your heart. Let us find strength there, rest there. Let us find there all we need. Let us find there a reviving of faith and hope, the coming again of the full sweet life. We want more light; give it to us, O our Father! We must have it. We want more love; must have it. Give it to us, our Father! We must have more life, the life we get from very close association with thee, and this is the reason we pray, "Deliver us from evil." And when we sing the beautiful petition: "Draw me nearer, nearer, nearer, blessed Lord," what are we doing more than putting in poetic langunge the words of this part of the Lord's prayer?

But the word does not mean to draw to one's self alone. It means to protect. Do we need protection? Are there any dangers for us, any perils for us, any pitfalls for us, any allurements for us, any hidden rocks for us in the sea of life? Are we so self-sufficient that we need no protection? Our hearts answer when we lisp the petition, "Deliver us from evil." But what is evil? Some translate this "the evil one." We prefer to say, evil, all evil. But are we sure we know what evil is? Poneros is the word, and it means so much, so very much!

HOW ITALY FOUGHT THE PAPACY

AS A POLITICAL POWER, AND THUS WON THE BATTLE FOR FREE CONSCIENCE

BY REV. ALEXANDER ROBERTSON, D.D., VENICE

TOLERATION in religious matters is of the very essence of Protestantism, because it is of the very essence of that Biblical Christianity to which it was a return at the Reformation, and of which it is the embodiment and expression. The Protestant allows no authority to come between his conscience and his God. He says with Luther, "It is neither safe nor honest to do anything against conscience. Here I stand and cannot do otherwise." But the position he claims for himself he concedes to others. He recognizes the right of every one to believe what he likes and to worship God as he chooses. And what holds true of Protestants as individuals holds true of Protestants gathered together in communities and nations. Hence in the United States of America all forms of religion, all churches, stand on an equal footing in the eyes of the law. For all there is a fair field and no favor.

Now, I live in Italy, and, as the world knows, the Roman Catholic Church is the established and endowed church of the country. The state pays the parish priests, the bishops and archbishops (so long as they behave themselves, for sometimes it withdraws their stipends, when they continue at their posts, but have no existence in the sight of the law), and it undertakes to pay the Pope. The Pope is assigned $645,000 (which was the amount of his civil list in 1870), which payment, however, he refuses to accept, and so it returns to the Italian exchequer. And not only is the Roman Catholic Church the established and endowed church of the land, but in Rome, the capital, that church has its headquarters. In the enormous palace of the Vatican lives the Pope, Pius X, surrounded by the numerous officials of his household, and by the chief dignitaries of the church.

How Italy Shook Off Rome's Power

And yet, notwithstanding all this, here in Italy, as in America, religion is free. Any one can believe what he likes and worship God as he chooses, and make known by all legitimate moral means the tenets of his faith, which is an essential part of true religious liberty. The Bible, the charter of liberty, civil as well as religious, is freely circulated in the land. Rome has got a splendid mayor, Signor Nathan, a Jew (this fact itself is a proof of the religious liberty that obtains). On September 20, 1911, at the anniversary celebration of the taking of Rome by the Italian troops, before the breach in the wall at Porta Pia, which marked the downfall of the temporal power of the Pope, the mayor thus addressed Rome's assembled thousands: "Alongside the Catholic Church rise churches of other forms of worship, of other faiths. In the wide embrace of the city all are welcomed, orthodox and unorthodox, all religions, in order that religion, the revealer of morality, may be perpetuated, may be elevated, and lift man toward his Creator, satisfying his faith, which pants to penetrate into His mysteries. And this was the grand battle, the grand victory of September 20. Territories may be conquered and lost again, but the field of faith, the reign of free conscience, once conquered, is conquered forever." Free conscience then now reigns in Italy, and, please God, will reign forever.

Now, I am perfectly well aware that under this Protestant principle of "free conscience," of absolute "toleration in religious matters," there is one church in the United States, and one church only, that creates trouble—trouble in the family, trouble in the school, trouble in the city, trouble in the nation—and that is the Roman Catholic Church. Its doing so, I need not say, is not peculiar to America, for it creates trouble wherever it has a free hand. In this respect it is a storm-center everywhere, a huge disturber of the peace, a great international nuisance. And why is this? Because it is more than a religion, it is a political organization, it is an ecclesiastical despotism. The Roman Catholic Church has this duplex character; it is partly religious, it is partly political. But the political side of its nature is its chief side. The religious side is secondary, is subordinate. Its political nature is its soul, its religious nature is its body. Religion only serves to cloak, to conceal its true political nature. And the pity is that in the United States, as in England, it succeeds in so doing. It does not succeed in doing it in Italy, as I shall by and by show. Of course, Italy being the headquarters of the church, the movements of its heart and soul are more open to observation. Indeed, we are in possession of the X-rays here, so we can look at the innermost recesses of the church's being! And what we see everywhere is politics.

The Vatican a Political Organization

When William Arthur, the author of The Tongue of Fire, was in Rome gathering materials for his other book, The Pope, the Kings, and the People, he used to say in company, "I began the study of this subject as a religious question, but—" Here a resident diplomatist broke in, "But you will find it all politics, and the further you get into it the more purely political you will find it." Yes, in essence it is all politics. There is not a newspaper correspondent in Rome who does not know that religion is a subject foreign to the Vatican. Religious considerations never in the slightest degree determine or even modify the policy of the Vatican. In America, although in a more concealed way than in Italy, the Roman Catholic Church is a political organization. And as such it is a rival to the state. As such it is in opposition to the state. As such it seeks always and everywhere to override the state. It not only trespasses upon ground which belongs to the civil authority, but it attempts to supplant the civil authority in its own domain. In the coronation service of the Pope occur these words: "Take thou the tiara adorned with the triple crown, and know that thou art the father of princes and of kings, and art the governor of the world." That is the monstrous position claimed for the head of the church, and which his priestly officials everywhere seek to realize in fact. Hence it is not only a political organization but a political conspiracy and an ecclesiastical despotism. Claiming divine sanction, it exercises spiritual terrorism, so as to control a man's life from the cradle to the grave. It interferes with marriages (in America it has become a matrimonial bureau), it interferes in the schools, in the council chamber, at the polls with the electors, in times of sickness, in the drafting of wills, at the deathbed, and even beyond, tormenting and taking money from the living in the interests of the dead. The operations of the Roman Catholic Church render it a despotic political organization, incompatible with the liberty of the individual, with the peace of the family, with the tranquillity and progress of the state, with the majesty of the law, and with the sovereignty of the civil authority.

The True Way to Check Rome's Political Ambitions

The question then is, What is to be done? How is this evil to be met and remedied? There is only one thing to do, or, rather, one course to be pursued, and that is the course pursued by Italy and to a greater or less extent by every Roman Catholic country. And that is (1) to clearly recognize the fact that the Roman Catholic Church is not only a religion but a political organization, an ecclesiastical despotism; (2) whilst allowing it, as a religion, absolute liberty, the same freedom to conduct its worship and to propagate its doctrines and dogmas that is accorded to every other religion, to deal with it as a political organization; (3) to deal with it as a political organization, as you would deal with any other rival, or revolutionary political organization or conspiracy in the state, pass laws to shut it out of every sphere where it seeks to interfere with the civil rights and liberties of the people, and, if necessary, do what is done in Italy: tie it down by penal statutes. I know that the very mention of "penal statutes" is apt to arouse antipathy in the minds of liberty-loving people, and to seem contrary to the principle of universal religious toleration, which we all maintain. But there is no question of religion in the matter.

It is true we are dealing with a church, but we are dealing with it solely as a political conspiracy in the heart of the state, an imperium in imperio, and as such it is not only lawful to put it down, to crush it out of existence, but it is the duty of every patriot in every land, in the name of justice and liberty and progress and happiness, in the name of everything that we as men and women hold dear in life, to do so. As I have said, here in Italy we are at the fountain-head of the Roman Catholic Church, here in Italy we have the lion's den in our midst, and yet, as I have said, religious freedom prevails, the sacred rights of conscience are inviolable in the case of every one. And how is this secured? It is secured by the government, backed by public opinion, recognizing the church as a political conspiracy and doing what I have said ought to be done everywhere: shutting it out of all spheres where it encroaches on the civil rights of the people, and tying its officials down by penal statutes. In Italy no false sentimentality exists in regard to religious liberty.

How to Nullify the "Ne Temere" Decree

The Pope, the priest and the church have cried out against these measures of the state; they have appealed to Christendom to help them even. The state and the people say, "They cry; what do they cry? Let them cry." Now let me tell what these measures are: (1) Marriage. I have spoken of the interference of this church in the matter of marriage. This is an old story and a new one. It is an old story. Before 1870, when the Pope still ruled in Rome, Count Frenfanelli Cilo, one of his noble guards, married a wealthy American lady, whereupon he was chased out of Rome, and only permitted to return when his wife turned a Catholic. Prince Emanuel Ruspoli was similarly treated, and his brother Prince Paolo, who married Miss York, a Protestant, remained in exile till the fall of the temporal power. Marriage is a new story, too, owing to the Ne Temere decree. This infamous decree, which is causing no end of domestic trouble in the United States, as well as in Canada, England, Ireland, and in other lands, separating husbands and wives, breaking up happy homes, ruining children, causing a vast amount of cruelty and immorality, has had no authority and no influence, and caused no trouble in Italy. Well, how is this? Because in Italy marriage by law is a civil contract, only legal when performed by the mayor of the place in which the couple who desire to be married reside, or by his assessor, and it must be performed in the city chambers. A priest cannot marry a couple in Italy, the Pope himself cannot marry a couple. If he did, they would be registered as living in concubinage; their children, if they had any, would be registered illegitimate, and, if the parents left any real property at their death, the children could not inherit it; it would go to the next of kin. But what the priest can do is to give what is called the church's benediction. The couple can go to a church and have a religious ceremony. But that is not marriage. It is of no value whatever in the sight of law.

Romish Traps for American Girls

I do earnestly wish that parents who come to Italy, and especially who go to Rome, with marriageable daughters would realize the fact I have just stated. No priest can marry, no religious service is of any account as a marriage contact. If a girl marries in Italy only religiously, she is not married, and her supposed husband can desert her and she has no remedy. She is considered by law to have been living in concubinage with him, and so desertion only terminates an evil relationship. Let American girls realize this, for in Rome schemes are too often set on foot to entrap them. Some hotels and not a few

* The Rev. Dr. Robertson, of Venice, Italy, has for many years been regarded as an authority on matters connected with the Roman Catholic Church, and has written much on the subject. His famous book, The Roman Catholic Church in Italy, was endorsed by King Victor Emmanuel III and the Italian premier, Signor Zanardelli. Other books by Dr. Robertson, notably Fra Paolo Sarpi and The Bible of St. Mark, have had a wide popularity.

FOR THE VICTIMS OF THE WAR

THIS WEEK $4,000 MORE GOES TO AID THE NEEDY AND RELIEVE THE SUFFERING.
A TOTAL OF $18,250 NOW FORWARDED. OUR LATEST LETTER FROM THE FRONT

FROM the office of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD a remittance of $4,000—the accumulated contributions of our readers—is being forwarded to Pastor Furnajieff, the chairman of the CHRISTIAN HERALD Relief Committee in Sofia. This makes the total amount that we have transferred to the scene of suffering on behalf of warm-hearted Americans $18,250.

The members of the committee who are acting as distributors are still in the field dealing at close quarters with the needs and sufferings of the destitute people. In response to a suggestion sent from America, the Sofia Committee forwarded, late in January, 1,000 francs to Rev. W. P. Clark at Monastir, Macedonia, to relieve the needy for whom he appealed to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD by cable. Mr. Clark is one of the American Board missionaries, and has been most active in the relief work. Mr. Clark's letter, dated from Monastir on February 1, is in part as follows:

"Your kind letter of January 6 I received day before yesterday. The same day I received a check for 1,000 francs from your relief committee at Sofia. I am very grateful indeed for this aid, and want to heartily thank you and your readers for it. I began relief measures on the third of January by giving thirty-six loaves of bread, allowing half a loaf to a person; as more money has come in, I have increased the distribution till now I am giving 433 loaves a day and hope, with your help, and the promises I have received, to be able to give about five hundred per day. I hope that I will be able to continue this distribution till about the last of March, though there will, undoubtedly, be need after that time. Aid is also being given by the British, the Austrian, and the French consuls. The Macedonian Relief Fund of London has a special representative here, Miss McQueen, who is distributing aid, and who has also the city hospital at her disposal. Yet, with all these centers of distribution, there are still five thousand or more of the refugees who are not being reached, though greatly needing help. I am hoping that I can increase my giving—at present I am reaching almost nine hundred—and continue it as long as the need is as pressing as at the present time. I have every day to say 'I cannot' to needy and deserving cases. If you find that you can send me a further grant I shall be most grateful. Those among whom I am now working and distributing relief are almost all Turkish refugees, and in most cases their homes have been pillaged and burned."

TOPICS OF INTEREST AT HOME AND ABROAD

—MR. W. P. HAGG, of Crozer Seminary, Chester, Pa., writes: "Many of the widely circulated reports concerning a paper read by Dr. Evans, president of Crozer Seminary, before the Presbyterian Ministers' Conference of Philadelphia, and entitled 'The Deification of Jesus of Nazareth,' cannot but give an erroneous impression of the real facts in the case. Permit me to say that our president does not deny the divinity of Christ. The following statement, made in class but a few weeks ago, is more convincing to me of the truth of this than any argument he might propose: 'I should as leave be accused of striking my mother as be charged with denying the divinity of Christ.' THE CHRISTIAN HERALD stands for truth; consequently, as a member of its great family, I venture to write you what I know to be the truth in this case." We gladly give space, in justice to President Evans, to this statement, which is a direct contradiction of the statement widely circulated in the newspapers.

—THE FUND BEING raised in London for the benefit of the dependents and relatives of the Antarctic hero, Captain Scott, and his gallant comrades, as well as to erect a monument to perpetuate their fame, is growing, but not as quickly as could be wished by those who admire bravery and respect the sacrifices which brave men make to benefit science and reflect glory upon their country. The British are slow in matters of this kind, yet they are sure, and the fund will likely reach large dimensions before it is closed. The King and Queen have set a good example, contributing £2,000 and £1,000, respectively. The queen mother, Alexandra, has also given £1,000, and the same amount came from Lord Curzon. King George knew Captain Scott intimately, and was a great admirer of his "pluck" and determination. He has publicly expressed his sorrow and his sympathy both to the nation and the relatives of the unfortunate explorer. Auguste Rodin, the famous French sculptor whose pupil Mrs. R. F. Scott was before her marriage, has received the high approval of J. Austen Chamberlain's suggestion that she should design the national memorial to her husband. M. Rodin told Mrs. Scott showed brilliant promise. He was convinced that no one would be disappointed if the record the commission.

A CONTEMPLATED RAILWAY strike, which would have tied up almost all railroads east of Chicago and north of the Ohio River, and in fact paralyzed the travel and traffic of the whole northeast of the country, has happily been averted. As far back as last May the Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen and Enginemen presented demands on the railroad management for increased wages and improved working conditions. The management offered to arbitrate on the condition that the controversy should be placed before a board of seven members, but the employees insisted on arbitrators as provided by the Erdman Act, which allows each side only one representative, both of these to mutually select a third party. The managers strongly protested against the provisions of the Erdman Act, but the men firmly stood their ground and would accept no other conditions. The management remained stubborn and unyielding; finally the patience of the firemen and enginemen reached the breaking-point and a strike of some 35,000 men, which would have crippled all and ruined some of the fifty-four Eastern railroads, was imminent, when very reluctantly on February 18 the management consented to arbitrate in accordance with the Erdman Act. A representative for each side was chosen, who were to select a third man. The proceedings of the arbitration will be held in New York City, and it is anticipated that within a month decision will be rendered. It is expected that it will be in favor of the men.

—A PAMPHLET FOR the times is "The Truths of Protestantism," being an address delivered recently by Professor William Dallmann, of the Concordia Seminary, St. Louis, Mo. There is no better authority on religious history than Dr. Dallmann, and in this address he covers, in compact form, essential truths, historical and theological, which should be known to every Protestant in America, and which are especially timely, in view of the present attempt of the Roman hierarchy to "make America Catholic." The pamphlet can be procured by writing to the Concordia Publishing House, St. Louis, Mo.

—ON SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 15, five thousand Bibles were placed in the hotels of Washington, D. C., by the "Gideons," formerly known as the Christian Commercial Travelers of America. The occasion was celebrated by a ceremony at the parish house of the Episcopal Church, Rev. Dr. R. H. McKim, the rector, presiding. The Bibles were distributed from motor trucks to seventy hotels, a committee of young men from the Men's Bible Classes and Y. M. C. A. assisting. The Bibles weighed 10,000 pounds. Mr. W. E. Henderson, national secretary of the Gideons, who was in charge of the Bible campaign, raised the necessary funds, one generous donor of Wichita, Kan., contributing $1,500, and others from $500 down. The Gideons have now 16,000 members. In past years, they have distributed many thousands of Bibles; in San Francisco, 25,000; Chicago, 5,000; Boston, 6,000, and large numbers in Los Angeles, Omaha, Denver, Minneapolis, St. Paul, Duluth, Memphis, Atlanta, Cleveland and Savannah. They have been the means of bringing many wayward souls back to the right path, and more than once of staying the hand of the intending suicide.

ON FEBRUARY 19 an attempt was made in the House of Representatives to pass the Burnett-Dillingham Immigration Bill over ex-President Taft's veto, but it was defeated by a small majority. As a result the bill will be shelved, and there will be no more legislation in regard to immigration during the session. The Senate had approved the measure by a vote of 58 to 18, but Mr. Taft vetoed it and his veto was sustained in the House, owing no doubt to that clause in the bill which called for the exclusion of illiterates, those who cannot read their native language. This aroused the indignation of some of the legislators whose ancestors could have been included in this class. One representative stated his mother came to the country illiterate, and that he never could be induced to support a bill excluding the class from which he sprang. Had the measure passed, the traditional policy of the nation would have been reversed, and immigration, which has been regarded as a good in the past and a great factor in helping to build up the industry and power of the country, would have been turned into an evil to be restricted according to law.

—THE EARNESTNESS OF THE suffragettes and their devotion to the cause of woman's emancipation, as they express it, can be doubted no longer in view of the recent march made by the New York wing of the equal rights army from that city to Washington in order to show the new President on his inauguration day that they were terribly earnest in their demands that the laws of the land acknowledge their claims and set them upon as high a pedestal as man. The leaders of the Washington march were the same who had led an expedition to Albany over the rough roads of New York State under the cutting winds and through the slush and snow of December. Despite the difficulties encountered, they succeeded on that march, and this inspired them to further efforts and more ambitious publicity. They made up their minds to make the national capital their goal with the object of attracting all the attention possible on the most important day that the city witnesses in a span of four years. Bravely they set out from New York on Lincoln's birthday. Trumpets blared, banners waved, the ubiquitous small boy yelled, the unthinking crowd laughed as off went the marchers. A few sympathizers of the masculine sex accompanied them, but some were uncharitable enough to say that the object of these was not sympathy at all but plain curiosity and a love of adventure. Newark was the first stop. It received the suffragettes with open arms, and they basked in its smiles for several hours; speeches were delivered, suffrage literature disseminated and, on the whole, a good impression made. The brave band plodded on over the Jersey roads that at times tried their grit to the last limit. By the third day the ranks were diminished, but what of that? The decimation only incited the remainder to put on a greater spurt. At Princeton the students gave them a rousing reception. At Trenton everybody but the then governor turned out to review them. In Philadelphia the University of Pennsylvania boys cheered themselves hoarse. And so it was in other places. The rest of the route brought them through Wilmington and Baltimore. Many speeches were made on the way, and an active propaganda carried on to enlist outsiders in the cause. At times the courage and strength of the marchers were tested to their limits, but they struggled on until they had the satisfaction of seeing the dome of the capitol and calling halt to the wearisome journey.

THE ROOTS OF PA

A STORY BY ANNIE HAMILTON DONNELL

Complete in this Issue

"I'LL HAVE to tell the girls," Ellen Knox sighed. She had sighed before, and told the girls before. These particular little lines in her gentle face had first shown their faint tracings a year ago, for Ellen Knox had seen this coming.

"When Jessica Kidder's pa gave in, I knew our pa wouldn't." Her use of the first-person pronoun was significant; it was plain on which side ma stood. "Seems just as if Rufus Kidder rooted Seaber down firmer than ever, right there on the other side o' the fence. Seaber's grown there now. But he's a good father, Seaber is." It was thus all her sighings and musings concluded—with loyalty to Seaber.

A year ago Rufus Kidder had, after much holding back, let his Jessica enter the woman's college a few miles away. She was now completing her first joyous year. It was Jessica who had kept the Knox girls in a fervor of ambition and longing. And now here was Marcella Knox on the eve of graduating from the Starboro High School!

"Head of her class," groaned the gentle mother. "Seems wicked to waste the head of a class! Marcella's smarter than what Jessica was."

The girls came breezing in from school. It was Esther Bell who asked the fateful question, and it was like quiet Marcella to let her do it. Marcella's intense gaze flew to ma and waited the answer.

"What'd he say, ma? You asked him again, didn't you?"

"Yes—yes, I asked him, Essie Bell." But it was not at Essie Bell the mother was looking. Suddenly, in spite of her, her eyes were full of tears. "Your pa said 'No.'"

All three girls started as though the gentle voice had struck them, but it was Esther Bell who flared out into indignant flame.

"Not regular 'No,' ma?—not over'n'done with?"

"Over'n'done with. I told him just how we felt, an' said all I could. Now you girls get out o' your school dresses an' go pick me some strawberries. They're ripening in the early field, an' I'm going to make you a shortcake for supper." It was all she could think of to do for them. Ma's shortcake cure had been efficacious many a time. But now—

She turned to get her kneading-board with lacking faith.

Marcella came back into the pantry. Her own eyes were tearless; it was in a secret, hidden little room within her that Marcella cried out her disappointments.

"Your pa's a good man, Marcella," hurried in ma, to get ahead.

"He's cruel," muttered the girl, but almost instantly repented. "Mother, maybe he'll come round in a year—in time for Essie Bell. She's got a year to hope in. It's me—it's I that's lost! I guess it's no use to hammer on me any more. We might as well give me up—no, don't say he's a good man! Don't say it till I get out of the room! Just say 'dear child' to comfort me, mother."

"Dear child!" ma cried tenderly. "Dear child, your pa's a—" Marcella had fled.

"He's a good father," Ellen Knox said slowly, "an' he loves those girls within an inch o' their lives. If they were boys he'd send 'em to college. He had little Roger a-going before he was six years old." She drew a long, difficult breath and turned again to her mixing-bowl. Little Roger had never gone to college.

Seaber Knox had deep-rooted convictions. One of exceptional depth was the conviction that a college education was of no possible use to a woman creature. What earthly use was it? Let some one go ahead and convince him! He had the good-natured attitude of squaring his shoulders and daring the world's feeble little arguments. "Doesn't help 'em make bread, does it? Or get the washin' out any earlier Monday mornin's?" he demanded; "or help bring up the children the Lord passels out to 'em—or help 'em be good an' healthy an' downright woman-happy? Well, that's what I say! An' I say something more—that all that learnin' just unfits instead o' fits 'em for the common every-day o' life. Educates 'em right t'other way—away from it. Takes the common sense out of 'em. I'm not goin' to have my three little girls wastin' good time fillin' up with a lot o' useless mind-truck. Rufus Kidder can do as he thinks best with his girl."

So here was the end—the tip end—at least for Marcella. She went slowly up to her room and changed her dress. As slowly, her feet dragging to the funeral march of her hopes, she picked the berries for ma's loving little cure-all. She dragged to bed and to town next morning for the Saturday shopping and marketing. It was a very busy time on the big farm, and only the girls could be spared. Marcella and Esther Bell went together, little Love obstinately declining what had heretofore been the weekly treat.

"I don't blame her," Essie Bell said gloomily. "She doesn't want to go past the college buildings, an' I don't either! I'm going to shut my eyes! Marcelle, I don't know but it'll be worse for Love than us—she's the ambitiousest little thing!"

"Yes, but she's only ten. She's got eight years to hope. Even pa—" But the sad voice got no further, for in her heart Marcella knew that Love's little case was hopeless. Even the loosening action of eight years would not change the roots of pa.

At home Ellen Knox went about her work with a sorrowing soul. The gloom of some sad and hopeless crisis seemed to have settled over her gentle and happy life. She sighed instead of singing as she worked. The men were starting in this morning mowing the early field. There was an extra man and she must not forget to put extra potatoes into the pot and an extra place at the table. Four hearty men would come up-fields when she blew her horn at noon, and she must be ready for them. She was glad she had sent Love away out of the hot kitchen—but where could the child be, to be keeping so still? Ma missed the clear little Saturday songs she was used to hearing. Love was terribly disappointed, too. Think of a ten-year-old child taking it to heart so because she couldn't go to college! The mother's eyes lighted with soft pride.

"They're all smart—that's what makes it so much harder. If they were stupid or even plain average, they wouldn't care. If their father could see—" Their father was a good man. She went on with her task, resolutely shutting the door to the little room of her mind where her three beloved little disappointments huddled for the warmth of ma's sympathy. She might have been able to keep the door closed if a trio of happy college girls had not gone swinging by her window and down the country road. Three of them—they might have been her trio of college girls! She was accustomed to see bevies of them ajaunt out here in the free country spaces on their holidays, but to-day—to-day she did not want to see them. She even had the impulse to twitch down the window-shade. Then she found herself wishing they would go down near the early field, so pa could see how happy they looked.

It was an hour later, as Ellen Knox was beginning to prepare the dinner for her hungry men, that hurried footsteps sounded in the kitchen. Coming from the cellar with her pan of potatoes, she was horrified to see a trail of blood through the back hallway and leading kitchenward. Ellen Knox was forty-seven years old, but her long-ago child fright at sight of blood had never left her; she felt suddenly sick and faint now.

The kitchen seemed full of people and of blood. Some one was talking cheerily—some one else was moaning. Ellen Knox staggered into the room with gripping dread of what she should see, but she saw nothing at all.

"Quick, Jean, catch her! It's the mother! She's fainted!" It was the cheery voice, with the least possible tremor in it. Another cheery voice answered.

THE LONELY HEART

By Margaret E. Sangster, Jr.

I SIT and dream by the window,
And I see far o'er the foam
The patient, loving mother,
In the tiny cottage home.
Ah! why did I leave my country,
In a foreign land to roam?

The glare and dust of the city
Rise up from the noisy street;
But I know she is cool and happy,
Mid scenes that are calm and sweet.
And I know that her love is with me,
A guide to my faltering feet.

But my needle must start its clicking,
And I take my work in my hand,
With a sigh for the grass and flowers
Of a quiet country land.
And I pray to the God above me,
For I know he will understand.

OUR EDITORIAL FORUM

PRESIDENT OTTO KOENIG | MANAGING EDITOR GEO. H. SANDISON | SECRETARY THEODORE WATERS

A Distinguished Guest

AMBASSADOR JAMES BRYCE is easily one of the foremost citizens of the world to-day. His high abilities as a statesman and his profound logical grasp of the great problems of history have been universally acknowledged. His is a mind so broad and tolerant, and so generous withal, that it seems to embrace all nationalities and all sorts and conditions of men, and to make allowance for the widest diversities of thought and opinion. It was therefore a fitting compliment which the leading clergymen of New York, of all denominations, paid to this distinguished man when they entertained him at a farewell luncheon on the eve of his retirement as British ambassador at Washington. There were present representatives of the various Protestant denominations and also of the Roman Church, and all united in deserved tribute to the guest of honor.

Yet those present could not have forgotten that, in his capacity as historian, Ambassador Bryce in his Holy Roman Empire has placed on record an estimate of the Papacy which can never be effaced. He has torn aside the veil of spiritual pretension and has shown Rome in her true character. He turned the clear light of a great mind upon her fantastic doctrines, her dogmas, her assertion of power and infallibility, and her claim of spiritual and temporal domination. He has shown how the Roman Church crystallized into a political power, a breeder of wars, and a fomenter of widespread international dissensions. Yet, amid these exposures, which he was impelled to make as a fair and impartial student of history, he did not omit to acknowledge what good things its nobler spirits were the means of accomplishing. These stand out as oases that mark the more strongly the desolation of the general picture.

Ambassador Bryce has reached the age when, in most cases, men's grander activities begin to slacken—the "time to take in sail," as the end of the voyage approaches. Were it not so, we might hope that his pen might yet be inspired to record his impressions of religious and political conditions in this republic during his ambassadorial career; for it is not supposable that an observer of his caliber could have been blind to the persistent plottings of the Papacy in America during these years, nor to the undeniable progress it has made in its great plan to "make America Catholic." He has seen how its cardinals have multiplied and claimed recognition due to "princes of the blood"; how the church has increased amazingly in wealth and numbers; how it is now filling influential offices in State and nation; and how it has organized secret armed societies with hundreds of thousands of members. He has seen the nation's Executive, followed by his cabinet, attend mass; he has seen the Romanist marriage law declared in the Ne Temere decree to be the only legitimate means of union, the civil law being spurned and condemned and the stamp of illegitimacy placed on every non-Catholic household in America. He has seen priests multiply here until we have now almost as many as there are lamas in Tibet, while monasteries and convents have sprung up like mushrooms and are held free from national and State inspection. And he has seen the nation's capital being transformed into a Catholic stronghold and filled with buildings devoted to the work of the Roman Church. All of these mark progress in the great crusade to capture this republic.

Ambassador Bryce may yet write such a book—we sincerely hope he will. It would be a volume well worth the while of every American to study. But whether he does or does not write it, these are the facts, which we as Americans would do well to remember.

Good and Bad Immigration

VETOED by the President and killed in the House of Representatives, the Burnett Immigration Bill, establishing an educational test for all who come here as future citizens, may now be regarded as a dead issue. Literacy is not and never could be a true test of eligibility to citizenship. Those who favored the bill on the plea of patriotic necessity were in conflict with the best traditions of the nation, which has wisely kept the door open to the sturdy, honest, simple type of immigrant, whose stout limbs and willingness to labor have done good service in the upbuilding of the country. This is especially true of the West, where the hearty sons and daughters of the old world have done practically all of the rough pioneer work. Brawn and sinew, strong arms and clean blood, have proved infinitely more valuable to us than any class of immigrants chosen on account of their education could possibly have done.

Mr. Nagel, Secretary of Commerce and Labor, easily punctured the arguments of those who favored the educational test by showing that it would prove a mistaken remedy for evils that were largely imaginary—evils which are referable, not to the uneducated and unskilled, but rather to the educated class of immigrants. Our anarchistic agitators, dynamiters, "Black Hand" brotherhoods and other criminal disturbers of the peace don't belong to the uneducated class. Yet the Burnett bill would welcome these "undesirables," while it would close the door in the face of the good immigrant, the humble though unskilled worker. Educated rascality is the worst rascality. If the line of exclusion is to be drawn at all, it should take character into account rather than intellectual accomplishments. It cannot be forgotten that many of the foremost men in our republic sprang from lowly stock, which had little or no educational advantages. To-day, in every State, men who have come up from the lower ranks of life are pushing to the front in statesmanship and in business; yet in many instances an educational test might have shut out their parents as too unskilled and ignorant to be admitted. In passing the Burnett bill, the Senate showed that that body is as much out of touch with national sentiment as it was on the arbitration treaties and other important measures. It took the narrow, un-American view of the immigration question, and the action of the House is a proper rebuke to senatorial prejudice that will meet with general approval.

Getting Acquainted

BY KNOWING many sorts of persons, we cut a larger piece out of life than if we stay well sheltered in our own environment of family and education and play only with our own kind of people. Some of the knowledge and realization flowing out of this diversity is quite terrible, and much of it saddening. So many individual lives are laid bare to us, each with its brave effort and its partial failure, that ever the way will be one of anxious striving, a desire, almost a yearning, to lessen injustice and ease suffering, accompanied every step of the road by dissatisfaction with any of the means at hand to work this happy consummation. Through all the initiation, all we gain is a sympathetic approximation of the wonderful struggling life tossing and heaving around us like waves of the restless sea. We must never let ourselves believe that we are fully conscious of the bitterness of poverty, the deadening of overwork, the wasting away of fine powers and radiant dreams through endless routine overcrowding. Realization is only for personal experience. No amount of fellow-feeling and anxious caring ever tear away those films between us and the reality with which the day laborer faces dangerous accident and unrelenting bitter hard work, nor teach us the mingled sadness, gaiety and recklessness with which the girl-child, alone in the city lodging-house and the department store, faces the romance and ecstasy of life.

Why Not an Evangelistic Federation?

FOLLOWING on the line of Dr. Chapman's recent letter on Evangelism, published in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, which has stirred up widespread discussion of the whole question of evangelistic methods, Dr. W. E. Biederwolf has come forward with a proposition that seems to be eminently practical. He advocates an evangelistic national federation, which would in time command the entire field of action. He writes:

> To this body ought to be delegated the work of submitting approved plans of evangelistic operation, of establishing a standard, of dealing with the question of equipment, remuneration and other essential features of the evangelistic problem. It could eliminate to some degree the objectionable and encourage and sanely foster the evangelistic gift and temperament wherever it is found and so bring evangelism to the accredited platform which God meant it to occupy when he ordained this sacred office and placed upon it the seal of his approval.

This well-meant and timely suggestion should not pass unheeded. Why not have, during the coming summer, an evangelistic convention at some central point, at which the necessary steps could be taken for a union that would embrace in its membership every efficient and capable worker, would establish a proper standard of efficiency and lay down such conservative methods as, faithfully followed, would remove all cause of criticism by eliminating those sensational and extravagant tactics that have excited antagonism in recent years? It is safe to assume that the combined, consecrated common sense of such an organization would operate to the advantage of the workers themselves, and to the satisfaction of pastors of all denominations.

The day of raw, resounding, untrained "hit or miss" evangelism has gone. People reasonably doubt whether an evangelist who has apparently no plan in his own work can be the best expositor of the Plan of Salvation. There is and will continue to be abundant room for the evangelist. While he must be a true "live coal from the altar," he must present the Gospel message, not in mere incoherent and illiterate strenuosity, but in a Christlike spirit and with a dignity and reverence befitting the greatest of all themes. Such is the kind of evangelist that is needed to-day, and this kind alone, as Dr. Biederwolf remarks, can "command the respect and unrestrained praise of the best and sanest judgment of the church in general."

Pollyanna in Book Form

IT WOULD be hard to find a more popular young lady in the United States just now than Pollyanna. People are writing to us by the score to say how much they like her and how much good she is doing. "Pollyanna is certainly the best serial yet," writes one reader. Another writes: "While looking for one of the questions the other evening I forgot what I was looking for—I got so interested in Pollyanna." Still another says: "I am lending the paper and telling the story of Pollyanna wherever I go, and many sick and discouraged people are learning to play the game."

But we are forgetting the real purpose of this editorial, which is to announce that Pollyanna is soon to appear in book form. Can you think of any better news than that? You may look back now over the sweet story; you will want to read it through again and refer to it many times; you will want to hand it to friends who are in need of or who will enjoy its cheering message. And now you needn't mind if some of the back papers are lost and some chapters missing. You may have a visit from Pollyanna, in a new dress, and she will become a permanent member of your household.

A special offer outlining the terms on which you may secure a copy of Pollyanna in book form will be published in next week's issue of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD.

Crete Ceded to Greece

FROM Athens there comes a despatch announcing that the island of Crete has been handed over to Greece by the European nations; that the flags of Turkey and the protecting powers have been hauled down and been replaced by the Greek standard at Canea. The British cruiser Yarmouth landed at Suda Bay a detachment of bluejackets and marines, who hauled down the flags of Great Britain, Russia, France and Italy, which have flown since 1898, as well as that of Turkey, and the flag of the Greeks was unfurled in the midst of the greatest popular enthusiasm. Crete has occupied an important place in history. Greek tradition refers to the "hundred-cities" and to an advanced civilization which culminated in the bronze age, 1500-1300 B.C. Crete took no part in the struggle of the Greeks against the Persians 500-480 B.C. It fell under the yoke of Rome in 68 B.C. It was conquered by the Saracens in 823 A.D. Quarrels between the Latin and Greek churches left the island a prey to the Turkish conquest in 1645. It took a siege of almost a quarter of a century for the Turks to win the island. For nearly two hundred and fifty years the island of Crete was under the yoke of Turkey. In these long years the Cretans never faltered in their war upon the Moslem, their one national and religious aim being union with Greece. Its inhabitants are Greeks of the purest stock. They have arisen time and again against the domination of the Turk. In 1897, Greece went to war with Turkey to realize the dream of Hellenic union. Though vanquished in the struggle the ambition was partly realized, for the European Powers drove out the Turkish troops and established a protectorate over the island. Since then it has been governed by a prince of the Hellenic royal house, and later by a lesser Greek official. While the Sultan remained the nominal suzerain, the administration of the island was entirely Greek. The Cretans paid no tribute to Turkey, Greek was the official language, the gendarmerie was officered by Greeks, and the postage stamps were those used by Greece. Since the abolition of Turkish rule there has been great national prosperity and there has been peace between the Christians and the few Moslems left. When the Balkan League declared war on Turkey the Cretans saw that their time had come for complete union with Greece, which has just been effected by giving the island into the hand of Greece, and officially hoisting the flag of Greece over the citadel. Paul established the Christian Church in Crete, but had rather rough material to work upon. Not like the splendid inhabitants of the island now. Crete at that time had a number of bands of pirates and robbers and lawless characters, who are described in rather severe language by the apostle. In his letter to Titus he says:

For this cause left I thee in Crete, that thou shouldest set in order the things that are wanting, and ordain elders in every city, as I had appointed thee. (Titus 1: 5.)

Horses Voted a Vacation

THE city of Philadelphia has provided that all the horses owned by it shall have a vacation of one week during the year. It is not a matter of sympathy alone for the burden-bearing beast so loyal to man, but it is also a measure of economy as well, as no horse can do as much work without the week's rest in the year as he can with it. It is the same drive, the same street, the same hill, the same scenes without a change, that help to wear a horse out, as the same conditions of monotony will tire a man out. The farmhorse that is turned out into the field to rest on Sunday has a look of contentment and gratitude in his face, and though his teeth may show the marks of age, and his joints be stiff, yet the fact that the harness is off his back and he has one day for rest and play makes him act like a colt. He will walk around and crop the grass, and then he will play and romp with his fellows, and he is likely to get up a race with his mate if he have one. If not, he will race with himself, with his own shadow, so happy is he on the one day of rest a merciful heavenly Father has provided for him and for men. It is one of the most dangerous, the most suicidal things that individuals and society can do to neglect the one day of rest and worship in seven, and the necessary vacation besides during the year. The wheels are supplanting the horse, but society must never forget the debt of gratitude to the beast that can never be repaid but should be remembered in the kind of a vacation Philadelphia voted to its horses. Christ recognized the need of a vacation for overweary workers when he said:

Come ye yourselves apart into a desert place, and rest awhile. (Mark 6: 31.)

Three Children Skaters Drowned

THE ice-crop has brought with it its usual harvest of death, as the hot weather has its long list of bathers drowned. Nearly every paper during the cold spell had accounts of men, women and children running into airholes and breaking through the thin ice and drowning. The other day Frank Cavashensky, six years old, and two brothers, Chester and Joseph Grozack, the former six, the latter seven, were skating on thin ice on the Naugatuck River, Conn., when they broke through and were all drowned. Mr. and Mrs. Grozack, parents of two of the boys, saw their peril and went to their rescue, but the ice gave way with them and they were barely saved themselves by the prompt and heroic action of two men near by. The bodies of the precious children were recovered by a company of citizens who set themselves to the task. With all the bad pictures of life that are held up, with all the shocking stories of selfishness and ill treatment of offspring, it is beautiful to see the undying love of a father and mother that counted their own lives as nothing when their dear ones were in peril, which action is a good picture of the parental devotion of the average American home. The sorrow of these dear parents at the loss of their sons was voiced by the prophet and echoed in the Gospel.

Rachel weeping for her children, and would not be comforted because they are not. (Matt. 2: 18.)

Rear Admiral Vindicated

WHEN Admiral Wilkes, after exploring the South Pacific and Antarctic Oceans between 1838 and 1842, returned and reported that he had discovered Adélie Land in January, 1840, scientists attacked his assertions, declaring that the land he maintained he had discovered could not really exist. He was court-martialed on the charge of fabrication. At a banquet given in New York City the other night Sir Ernest Shackleton made a speech in which he said that the recent reports from London of the discoveries by the present expedition in the same regions by Dr. Douglas Mawson substantiated Sir Ernest's own discoveries in 1908 and 1909, when he procured good and sufficient proof that Admiral Wilkes adhered strictly to the truth in his reports seventy years ago. "The Mawson expedition," said Sir Ernest, "is composed of fifty men, most of them college graduates, with the most modern equipment for scientific research. When we consider that Admiral Wilkes made the same discoveries seventy years ago with what, judged by present standards, was an ill-equipped expedition, his work ranks as one of the wonders in the history of exploration." Admiral Wilkes came into prominence during the Civil War, when he was sent out in the San Jacinto to look for the cruiser Sumter and intercept the Confederate commissioners, Mason and Slidell, on the British mail steamer Trent. After having stood before the world for nearly three-quarters of a century as an officially convicted falsifier, the statements of fact by Sir Ernest Shackleton and others now completely vindicate Admiral Wilkes's veracity, remove every stigma on his good name, and place him in the company of the greatest discoverers of the world. Not all good and truthful men who have been slandered are vindicated. Some of the most cruel and diabolical complaints have been made against some of the best people, and have had general credence. Men have even been executed for crimes of which they were never guilty. But as a rule truth and righteousness and character are self-vindicating, though it take seventy years, as in the case of Admiral Wilkes, and after the grave has been reached. We live in a universe where a holy God rules by a law of eternal rectitude, and no lies nor injustice against the upright shall live. To him slanders against the good are exceedingly offensive, as the wise man says:

He that justifieth the wicked, and he that condemneth the just, even they both are abomination to the Lord. (Prov. 17: 15.)

Secrets of Long Life

HUDSON MAXIM, inventor and author, celebrated his sixtieth birthday at his home in Brooklyn recently, and gave common-sense opinions on several subjects, especially on the secrets of health and vigor at three score years. He said: "I never felt better in my life. I think the greatest thing that will give a man longevity is a sense of humor. That and outdoor life are pretty good tonics for poor health. A sense of humor gives him a pleasant outlook on life. Instead of a feeling of antagonism to the world, it relieves a man of a good many disappointments. Good humor is a species of good health. Another thing conducive to long life is a sane philosophy, where one only expects to get out of life what he earns out of it. My mother was an optimist and I have been one myself for many years. I feel that the world is a great benefaction and that we ought to be very thankful to be in it to live." Mr. Maxim, though an inventor of war instruments, is in favor of peace societies, and thinks the few remaining wars that are liable to occur will promote a better civilization and hasten a day of peace for all the world. He thinks that the Balkan War, terrible as it has been, will be for the eventual good of the nations who declared it, and that the Turkish people themselves will get rid of some of their handicaps and crimes and enter into a period of greater unity and prosperity. The young man of sixty recommends international lyceums to educate society to know the profit and joy there is in individual and public integrity. To the secrets of health and life given by the one who had passed through the period of two generations could be added that of a clear conscience well regulated and a vital relation to the divine life, which is love. The vigor of age is thus expressed:

Thine age shall be clearer than the noonday; thou shalt shine forth, thou shalt be as the morning. (Job 11: 17.)

TRUST AND OBEY*

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON BY DR. AND MRS. WILBUR F. CRAFTS

WHO has been considered for centuries by Jews, Mohammedans and Christians as the wisest man? And what act of Solomon is counted the supreme proof of his wisdom? When the two mothers came to him, both claiming the same child, and he ordered it cut in two and half given to each, did he have any intention of killing the child? And if it was an act of supreme wisdom for Solomon by such a test to make sure which was the real mother, why should anybody fail to see like wisdom in God's precisely similar test of Abraham's faith and obedience? It is irrelevant to talk of "human sacrifices," for God had no intention that Isaac should die. Abraham had made a "blood covenant" with God that he would trust and obey to the death (Gen. 15: 9-18). To put his faith and obedience and covenant to the severest test, God bade him offer as a sacrifice the son through whose life alone God's promise of countless descendants—the Hebrews of to-day—could be fulfilled. Abraham did not say, as so many do in like cases, "I can not obey God, for the consequences would be harmful." In a test as severe as ever came to mortal man, his faith cried, "When God speaks it is right and safe to trust and obey—to obey God, and trust him to take care of the consequences. God's commands cannot belie his promises. In some way God will provide. Right wrongs no man."

The tests of God are ever adapted to the age. No king could use Solomon's test to-day, nor would God use in our time the test he applied to Abraham. In those days both the father and the king had power of life and death—the father over his child, the king over his subject. But in essence the tests God is applying to men to-day are the same. Let the teacher resist the passion of some in almost every class—at least in every men's class—to waste time over purely theological, theoretic and historical questions to the neglect of practical duties.

The dramatic story and the justification of God should not be allowed to take more than fifteen minutes of the precious half hour which the teacher has to help men to be the Abrahams and Isaacs of to-day—boys and men of faith and faithfulness. Let us recall swiftly seven distinct steps in this story of double heroism, for Isaac also bore the test of his faith and obedience.

1. God awoke Abraham one night at Beersheba and bade him prove his loyalty by taking Isaac to Mount Moriah and offering him as a sacrifice. Abraham knew that human sacrifices were a part of the idolatrous religions about him, and this increased the severity of the test. Not only was he to kill the child through whom alone God's promise of posterity could be fulfilled, but he was to seem an imitator of idolaters whom he abhorred, and whose religious customs he had never in any other case adopted. 2. "He rose early" to obey, and kept his purpose secret from the wife and mother who might have argued against obedience. 3. He persisted in his heart-breaking journey for the three days required for the journey. 4. At the base of the mountain he left all his companions save Isaac, lest some objection might be interposed to his obedience. 5. Upon Isaac he bound the wood, and did not even give up his resolution to obey when his boy said on the mountain top, "Behold the fire and the wood, but where is the lamb?" The question must have cut his own heart like a knife, but he answered, "God will provide," believing, as the New Testament tells us (Heb. 11: 17-19), that God would raise Isaac from the dead. 6. At last the time came when Isaac must be told, and must himself "trust and obey," for a young man of twenty-five could not have been bound unwillingly by an old man of one hundred and twenty-five. This is a lesson for boys and girls as well as men and women, and the lesson for all is: When God speaks, trust and obey. 7. The climax of the wonderful story comes when Abraham raises the knife he would have preferred to drive into his own heart to slay his son, and then, when faith and obedience had been fully proved, God interposed and substituted for Isaac a ram caught in a thicket close at hand.

THE TEST OF ABRAHAM'S FAITH

From the painting by R. C. W. Bunny, R.B.A.

The whole story is an acted parable, such as have always been much used in Oriental teaching. The uplifted serpent, the sacrifice of Isaac, all belong with spoken prophecies and tabernacle symbols as parts of the prophetic picture of Christ's redemptive work. As Isaac bore the wood, Jesus bore the cross; as God provided a lamb Isaac's substitute, so Jesus is ours.

The difficulty that doubters have found in G commandment to offer Isaac they have found in gravated form in the New Testament statem that God spared not his own Son but freely sa ficed him for us all, inasmuch as in this case sacrifice was not intercepted. The difficulties ab the atonement which we cannot understand are of our tests. Shall we in the noontide of twentieth Christian century, when the Cross l drawn millions of men and whole nations to a no life, fail to bear the test of faith which Abrah bore successfully in the early t light? What if we cannot co prehend what the angels desire look into, how God could sacrif his sinless Son for sinners? Let accept the fact as stated by Jes and his apostles, and as it h been tested in millions saved accepting it even when they co not comprehend it, and foll their trustful footsteps into t Christian life.

More than half the things do every day are things which do not understand, but do the at the word of some one we tru or who has a right to comman Years ago, when dynamite h been laid in the rocks of Hellga in New York harbor, a little chi who knew nothing of enginee ing, nothing of electricity, in ob dience to her father's wo touched an electric button a blew tons of rock up through t water into the air. Many a wor man, at his master's order, mak some fragment of a machi which he never saw complete, a whose purpose he does not con prehend. Many a messenger ca ries a package of whose conten and purpose he knows nothin We "walk by faith," and we al ride by faith when we enter conveyance whose mechanism w do not understand. A docto comes when one is ill, and pr scribes medicine of whose compo sition the patient knows nothin but he takes it and is healed Wisdom as well as faith bids u to accept God's plan of salvatio that has saved others, withou waiting to master all its philoso phy and comprehend all its diff culties. Let reason say, "It i logical to believe that what ha saved so many 'twice-born men will ennoble my life." Let th heart say, "I will trust God eve though I cannot understand."

Usually the right course brings the happiest re sults even in this world. Obeying God makes fo health and happiness and competence and long lif and true success and abiding honor. It is a grea thing to be able to say as Walter Scott did: "I am drawing near to the close of my career. I hav been, perhaps, the most voluminous writer of th day, and it is a comfort to me to think that I hav tried to unsettle no man's faith, to corrupt no man' principles, and that I have written nothing whic on my deathbed I should wish blotted out." I contrast, think of the many novelists who hav stained their pages with words that are rank poiso to young hearts.

Nowhere is the faith of Abraham, that obeying

OUR SUNDAY SCHOOL SUPERINTENDENTS' ROUND TABLE

[illegible] to question No. 8 in "Our Sunday School Superintendents' Round Table Department, I would state one objection to the proposal to unify or combine the Sabbath school with athletics [illegible] would be in direct opposition to the very cause for which the Sabbath school was instituted, namely, of leading the young to sober, quiet thought of the Bible and religion. Do we have any account in God's Word from Genesis to Revelation of such a thing as "church athletics" as having any place whatsoever in God's house of worship? If so, please point it out. Dear friends, let us be careful with what we ally our beloved Sunday school and guard it with a zealous care, making it not merely a place of pleasure but a place where both young and old may come and learn of him whose ways we should strive to follow. I, for one, would say, let us leave the Sunday school as it is, allied to church work, and not unify it with anything that would have a tendency to lead away. In answer to No. 9, I believe the worst thing to be seen in Sunday schools is the installation of ungodly officers and teachers. Read Christ's own teaching of the blind leading the blind, and be convinced that it applies well here. Let us have, as far as possible, godly men and women as teachers and officers. In answering No. 10, exactly opposite to No. 9, I would say: Notice the interest there is in a school with truly Christian leaders as compared with one where it is otherwise.—Mrs. L. M., Natoma, Kan.

Reply: "And the streets of the city shall be full of boys and girls playing in the streets thereof." The prophet Zechariah wrote these words to describe what should be the condition of Jerusalem in its restoration when it should be called "a city of truth." (See Zech. 8: 1-5.) Play is not a sort of venom to be extracted by a rigid course of training. It is as natural for children and young folks to play as it is to breathe, and it should be the aim of parents and teachers to guide play rather than crush it. So far as possible the Sunday school should be made to dominate the lives of its scholars, and this can not be done during the brief session one day in the week. Some classes of boys and young men have been so organized that all of their physical and intellectual developments have been conserved by meeting every day in the week either as clubs for play or classes for study, as is the custom in the Y. M. C. A. These class organizations sometimes take entire charge of departments of church work. CHRISTIAN HERALD superintendents are urged to look well into the Boy Scout movement. It suggests many ways of employing the activity of boys that will make them helpful members of society and of the church, for a scout must obligate himself to be clean, kind and helpful always in the name of Christ. And he is given a walking-stick, not a gun, to make his way through the world. Sunday schools are becoming more and more interested in this movement.

All superintendents and teachers are invited to send communications to W. F. Crafts, 2100 Pennsylvania Avenue, S. E., Washington, D. C.

THE MODERN GIRL AND HER WAYS

BY MARGARET E. SANGSTER, JR.

A LITTLE old lady with faltering steps entered the room while a club meeting was in progress.

"Oh, it's only grandmother!" murmured the president of the club, without leaving her place; and as "grandmother" was a stranger to the girls, they went on with their remarks.

That is, all except one tall, plain girl in a business suit. She was on her feet as soon as the little lady entered and did not resume her chair until the grandmother of her hostess was comfortably settled. And all of the very modern and sophisticated girls looked at their friend in surprise and wondered why she was so unnecessarily polite and formal.

But the girl in question thought of it not at all; she did not know that she had done anything unusual. For this girl can often be seen amid the rush and bustle of the city, helping an old man across a crowded street, or giving up her place in a car to a tired-faced mother with shawl and market-basket. She thinks nothing of it, and expects nothing from it; but to her, a smile from a tremulous mouth or a brightened gleam from a pair of fast-fading eyes means more than much fine silver or gold.

This type of girl is fast dying out. She is now as unique as she is refreshing, and all because of the modernism that girls love to boast of. When the maiden aunt who lives in a story-book world tells "what I did," or "how I acted when I was a girl," you should not think of her as a fault-finding old woman who tires you, but rather think how she acted when she was your age, and what you would be like if you had her pretty politeness and formal little mannerisms.

I once heard a girl who was popular and well brought up—yes, and even a shining light in society—say to her mother in front of some young men:

"Cut it, mamma! Do you think that we want to listen to your old-fashioned ideas?"

As the mother was a little deaf, she missed the drift of her daughter's rude remark; but two young men who heard it never called at the house again, and I heard one say to the other as they gained the street:

"A girl who speaks to her mother like that is not the kind of girl that I care to know!"

Girls who labor under the impression that their friends like the young woman who is a "good fellow"—slangy, rough, and unrefined—are all wrong. For I have heard young men condemn a girl many times for just these things. And, in one way, it was a rather unjust condemnation; for these same girls were sweet and natural when alone with their families, and were only tomboyish from the mistaken idea that they would be more attractive to their social acquaintances.

One of the most popular girls I ever knew was perfect in her manner to older people. She was tender and loving to her grandparents, and she petted her father and mother as she did her small sisters and brothers. Everybody loved her, from the stern, puritanical village minister to the smallest and crossest baby in town. At last the girl's engagement was announced to a college chum of her brother's; and when I met the happy man on the street I stopped to congratulate him. His eyes shone as he shook my hand.

"There's nobody like her!" he said in a fervent tone, "Nobody! The first day I met her I knew that she was the Only Girl. And when I saw her wrap a shawl around her grandmother with that quaint little air of taking care of some one; and saw her pat her mother's hand when she thought they were alone, and kiss the scratch on a dirty baby's cheek, I knew I was done for, and that I loved her!"

I once went to school with a girl who for a long time was my model in everything. Her hair and dresses were always spick and span, and her smile was always radiant; but her manners were the greatest source of delight to me. There was not a soul in the school who did not like her. Even the grim principal unbent when she was near. Personally, I idolized her, and enthroned her in my dreams. Perhaps this attitude made my awakening a little sharper and a trifle more cruel.

One day I summoned up enough courage to call for her on my way to school. And as I was somewhat early, a flurried maid told me to wait in the hall, as she informed me that "Miss Madeline was not dressed yet."

I waited, silent, frightened by my presumption, when suddenly from somewhere above me came a call—almost a snarl—in a well-known voice:

"Sister, have you taken my hair-ribbon? Have you? Oh! how I hate you! Say, mother, hurry up there!"

The mother's patient voice came in answer to the peevish call: "Coming, dear. I'll help you to dress."

"Can't you hurry, mother?" screamed my little model. "D'you think I've got all day? Don't put your cold hands on my neck? Haven't you got any sense?"

A cough behind me brought me to myself, and I saw Madeline's father standing near.

"Don't mind that noise," he said nonchalantly. "It's only my daughter getting ready for school."

His matter-of-fact manner was the last straw. So this, then, was a common, everyday occurrence!

"I don't think I'll wait," I stammered. "It's getting late." And with uncertain steps I reached the street. My dream-bubble had burst; my shining idol was shattered into a thousand fragments.

Girls, never be hypocrites with your manners! Never treat a stranger better than you would your own mother; never fail in courtesy where your own family are concerned. For if you do, even though you gain a little cheap approbation, you will be found out.

In the large, beautifully furnished reception room of a Young Women's Christian Association building, there hangs on the wall an illuminated card. Stepping up to it, this is what one may read: "Courtesy is like an air cushion; there may be nothing in it, but it eases the jolts a lot."

Try to live up to that homely little text. It is best to be natural always. Cultivate a courteous manner in your home and it will come as a matter of course before strangers.

"The Gospel Carrier"

A FAMILIAR figure on the streets of Rochester, N. Y., for many years was known to everybody as "Blind Tom," but his full name was Thomas Jefferson Anderson. He was found dead at his home on the morning of January 29. His daily walk through the thoroughfares was made with sandwich signs placed upon him upon which were large texts of Scripture. His favorite was "Watch therefore and wait, for ye know not the hour when the Son of God cometh." He was a devout man and called himself "The Gospel Carrier." Blind from birth, the son of a saloonkeeper, he could repeat the New Testament from memory, and was an eloquent speaker, and had good command of language. He was to have been ordained in the ministry, but circumstances prevented this. Of late, his texts of Scripture have been read by thousands, some of whom rarely ever or never hear the Gospel preached, while to others they have been an uplift in the busy hours of the day.

W. H. W.

When you eat pie you eat shortening unchanged by the baking.

FOOD chemists find that the lard or other fat in cooked pie crust is the same as in uncooked dough. Since the shortening is one-third (by weight) of the entire crust, it is evident that its wholesomeness should be beyond question.

The only way to be sure of this is to have your pies made with

CRISCO
For Frying—For Shortening For Cake Making

Crisco is scrupulously clean and pure in manufacture and is strictly vegetable in origin. It is registered under the Pure Food Law by the U. S. Government. If it were of animal origin, it would be classed by the Government under the Meat Inspection Law with most other cooking fats.

The very thought that a pie is made with such pure, wholesome and delicate shortening makes Crisco pie unusually appetizing. And, if pie made with animal fat seldom agrees with you, you will appreciate the easy digestibility of the Crisco crust.

Sell every cow that does not earn $100 every year

That's what the successful dairymen in the San Joaquin Valley, California, will tell you. There is big money in dairying on this basis.

Buy 20 acres of land, plant to alfalfa, stock with 15 cows and a side line of poultry and hogs. Stick to your business—and you should earn from $1,500 to $2,000 after the second year. You can start, with success assured, for $2,000 to $2,500.

But dairying is not all. Opportunities for fruit, gardening and general farming are everywhere.

Don't take my word for it—investigate. Ask for our book, "Dairying in California." It will point out dozens of ways of finding the truth for yourself. It's free—write at once.

DAILY MEDITATION
FOR EVERY DAY IN THE YEAR
BY REV. J. H. JOWETT, D. D.

SUNDAY, March 9. II Corinthians 6: 11-18. When we turn away from the world, and leave it, we ourselves are not left to desolation and orphanhood. When we "come out from among them" the Lord receives us! He is waiting for us. The new companionship is ours the moment the old companionship is ended. "I will not leave you comfortless." What we have lost is compensated by infinite and eternal gain. We have lost "the whole world" and gain "the unsearchable riches of Christ."

And therefore separation is exaltation. We leave the muddy pleasures of Sodom and we "drink of the river of his pleasures." We leave "the garish day," and all the feverish life of Vanity Fair, and he maketh us "to lie down in green pastures," "he leadeth us beside the still waters." We leave a transient sensation, we receive the bread of eternity. We forfeit fireworks, we gain the stars!

What fools we are, and blind! We prefer the scorched desert of Sodom to the garden of Eden. We prefer a loud reputation to noble character. We prefer delirium to joy. We prefer human applause to the praise of God. We prefer a fading garland to the crown of life. Lord, that we may receive our sight!

MONDAY, March 10. Genesis 22: 1-8. When the Lord proves his children it is always with the purpose of enrichment. It is not like an examination at college or school. An examination adds nothing to our wealth. But the Lord's examinations add to our spiritual treasure. "Probation worketh hope." In the very midst of the test we are adding to our stature. It is a discipline that brings refinement and vision. The patriarch Abraham came out of his test with a deeper intimacy and friendship with God. In his willing spirit he found the bounty of the Lord.

We need not, therefore, be afraid of the divine tests. Our only need is to approach them in the spirit of obedience. They may appear terrific and threatening, like bristling forts, but we shall find they are "palaces beautiful," abounding in treasure, and rich in provision of the bread of life. Every hard task, loyally accomplished, unveils some fresh glory in the divine grace. Through every test we may find new resources and march in ever stronger equipment to new crusades.

TUESDAY, March 11. Genesis 22: 9-18. What a tremendous heritage the good Lord attached to an act of obedience! "Because thou hast done this thing, . . . I will bless thee, and I will multiply thy seed as the stars of heaven." And God adds trails of glory to every act of dutiful obedience! There are radiant spirits whose mission it is to add bright consequences to every shining deed. We may not see the glory in a retinue of material blessings; it will be something better than these; even the glorious graces are dignities of the spirit. No holy and lofty action goes unattended and alone. It most surely has a shining train of heritage, it moves like a monarch with illustrious suite.

It is well, therefore, to have a strong, quiet confidence in the imperial dignity of loyal obedience to God. Let us reverently regard the infinite relationships of apparently commonplace duties. "Kind words can never die!" "True deeds can never die!" The shining life of their inheritance stretches across the generations like a line of light. Every true thing is linked with the Infinite. The gift of "a cup of cold water shall in no wise lose its reward." Every sacrificial act is "bound up in the bundle of life with the Lord our God."

WEDNESDAY, March 12. Deuteronomy 8: 1-8. "And thou shalt eat and be full, and thou shalt bless the Lord thy God." Fulness is surely a more searching test than want. Fulness induces sleep and forgetfulness. Many a man fights a good fight with Apollyon in the narrow way who lapses into sleepy indifference on the Enchanted Ground. Men often sit down to a full table without "grace." Pain cries out to God while boisterous health strides along in heedlessness. Yes, it is our fulness that constitutes our direct peril. "This was the iniquity of Sodom, fulness of bread and abundance of idleness."

And so our tests may come on the sunny day. A nation's supreme tests may come in its prosperity. The sunshine may do more damage than the lightning. The soul may falter even in Beulah land where "the sun shines night and day."

Prayer must not, therefore, tarry until sickness and adversity come. We must "pray without ceasing" in the cloudless noon, lest we are stricken with "the arrow that flieth by day." We must seek the eternal strength when no apparent enemy crouches at our gate, and when our easy road is lined with luxuriant flowers and fruits.

THURSDAY, March 13. Hebrews 11: 17-22. "Accounting that God was able." That is the faith that makes moral heroes. That is the faith that prompts mighty ventures and crusades. It is faith in God's willingness and ability to redeem his promises. It is faith that if I do my part he will most assuredly do his. It is faith that he cannot possibly fail. It is faith that when he makes a promise the money is already in the bank. It is faith that when he sends me into the wilderness the secret harvest is already ripe from which he will give me "daily bread." It is faith that "all things are now ready," and in that faith I will face the apparently impossible task.

And thus the "impossible" leads me to the "prepared." The desert leads me to "fields white already." The hard call to sacrifice leads me to the "lamb in the thicket." "God is able," and he is never behind the time. The critical need unveils his grace.

Faith goes out on this invincible reliance. It is "the assurance of things hoped for." And by faith it inherits these things and is rich and strong in their possession.

FRIDAY, March 14. Micah 6: 6-9. "Do justly." I am to pay reverent and scrupulous regard to common rights. My outlook is always to include my neighbor and what is due to him. I am never to tamper with the scales to my own profit. I am to have no unjust weights in any of my relationships. And this covers every kind of commerce, even the commerce of words.

Diamond Dyes Spell Economy

"I am sending you photographs of my sister and myself, to show you what we have been able to do with Diamond Dyes.

"The gown that I have on I made over from material we had in a tan broadcloth Russian Blouse that we never liked. We dyed this black. My sister's suit we made according to a——— pattern, from a gray Homespun suit which we dyed navy blue.

"I think you can see from these photographs of my sister and myself how much Diamond Dyes mean to us."

MRS. J. R. RAYMOND, New York.

Diamond Dyes are the wonder-workers of the home. Rugs, portières, curtains, feathers, etc., can be made bright and fresh as new.

Diamond Dyes

There are two classes of Diamond Dyes—one for Wool or Silk, the other for Cotton, Linen, or Mixed Goods. Diamond Dyes for Wool or Silk come in Blue envelopes. Diamond Dyes for Cotton, Linen, or Mixed Goods come in White envelopes.

Here's the Truth About Dyes for Home Use

Our experience of over thirty years has proven that no one dye will successfully color every fabric.

There are two classes of fabrics: animal fibre fabrics, and vegetable fibre fabrics.

Wool and Silk are animal fibre fabrics. Cotton and Linen are vegetable fibre fabrics. "Union" or "Mixed" goods are mixtures of 50% to 80% Cotton—so must be treated as vegetable fibre fabrics.

Vegetable fibres require one class of dye, and animal fibres another and radically different class of dye. As proof we call attention to the fact that manufacturers of woolen goods use one class of dye, while manufacturers of cotton goods use an entirely different class of dye.

Do Not Be Deceived

For these reasons we manufacture one class of Diamond Dyes for coloring Cotton, Linen, or Mixed Goods, and another class of Diamond Dyes for coloring Wool or Silk, so that you may obtain the very best results on EVERY fabric.

REMEMBER: To get the best possible results in coloring Cotton, Linen, or Mixed Goods, use the Diamond Dyes manufactured especially for Cotton, Linen, or Mixed Goods.

AND REMEMBER: To get the best possible results in coloring Wool or Silk, use the Diamond Dyes manufactured especially for Wool or Silk.

There is Only One

Compo-Board

IT is not classed with the cheap substitutes for lath and plaster. It is not like so-called "wall boards." It is a wall lining in a class by itself—the most practical, the most successful. Thirteen years of severe tests have proven its superiority.

How You Can Know the Genuine

Get the sample as illustrated above—notice the construction. It is not simply several layers of card-board pasted together. It is built with kiln-dried slats as the foundation, pressed between layers of air-tight cement and specially prepared paper into a stiff straight sheet ¼-inch thick.

Why You Should Be Sure of Getting Compo-Board

It is stronger, more durable than lath and plaster, or any of its substitutes. Impervious to cold, heat and moisture. Test it by soaking in water with other "Wall Boards." It never needs repairing—will not mar with the knocks of furniture against it. It has stood the test of time and rough usage in thousands of homes.

Compo-Board is sold in strips four feet wide by one to eighteen feet long by dealers in nearly every town.

Manufacturers are finding many profitable uses for Compo-Board. It is better than wood for many purposes. Write for the experience letters from some of them.

Sample and book free—(Tells in an interesting way all about this modern wall lining).

"POET OF THE SIERRAS" DEAD

JOAQUIN MILLER, the old gray "poet of the Sierras," died on the afternoon of February 17 in one of the cabins on his beautiful estate in the Piedmont foothills overlooking San Francisco and the Golden Gate. He had been ill for the past year or so, and at his age death was not unexpected, yet his passing was felt as a personal loss not only by the large circle of his friends and intimates but by the thousands all over the land and in other countries who were familiar with his writings and appreciated his rugged genius.

In many respects this poet of the forests, this self-made student of the life of the Western plains and mountains, was unique. He was not the representative of a class but a class in himself. He drew inspiration from his surroundings as they were, he lived close to the great throbbing heart of nature, and then stringed his lyre in harmony to interpret the story she had to tell. He sang of the mountains and the valleys, the backwoods and the camps, the rivers and the forests—in a word, the life and labors and pastimes, the joys and the sorrows of the Western people—in a cadence which thrilled their hearts; he touched the chords of their nature and, enrapt in wonder, they listened to the strains he evoked. He was typical of the mighty West in all its moods and tenses; it was his first love and it was his last; he never forgot the home ties, nor wished to cast off the early influences which called forth the splendid gift of song which was to make his name known and loved not alone in his own land but wherever the English language is spoken.

True, he was a wanderer at times, but his heart ever turned to the early associations which gave bent to his native genius. He was not a great poet in our modern acceptation of the term; he soared to no great heights of fancy nor did he attempt any sublime epics. All his life he was a man of the people, and he became a poet of the people, loved for his simplicity and the homely themes he treated.

"Joaquin Miller" was born Cincinnatus Heine Miller at Wabash, Ind., November 10, 1841. His pseudonym was due to his defense as a lawyer of the Mexican bandit, Joaquin Murieta. When he was nine years old his father removed to Oregon, but the family not prospering there, young Miller made his way to California and became a miner. He had little chance for an early education, but in time he managed to enter Columbia College, Oregon, where he was graduated in 1859. He became a lawyer, but the profession was not much to his fancy and he neglected it. For a time he edited a weekly newspaper. He took part against the Modoc Indians in Oregon, who were making raids on the settlers; for his services he was appointed a judge and held the position four years. In the meantime he had written many poems, but he failed to find a publisher in America. He took them to London and fared no better. For two years he remained in the English capital, faring as best he could. Somehow he managed to scrape together enough to have the poems published. They were an immediate success. Literary London came to his feet. Browning, Rosetti, Dean Stanley and other lights of the time became his friends. His fame was assured. He was named the "poet of the Sierras," and the name stuck to him. From this onwards his pen was prolific, and he kept writing almost to his last day.

In his later years he became somewhat eccentric. He purchased a large estate overlooking the Golden Gate, California, to which he retired. It was named the Heights. Here a series of separate cabins was built for the individual members of his household. He erected tombs in honor of Browning, Rosetti and Moses, and built a large mausoleum of rough stones on the summit of the hill where his body was to be cremated and the ashes deposited. His ashes rest here, but the remains of the poet were cremated in Oakland.

There is to be no false emphasis in my speech, no exaggeration, and no short weight. Every word is to have its own true weight, for "by thy words thou shalt be justified, and by thy words thou shalt be condemned."

"Love mercy." The scales may be weighted in fairness to my brother. I must give him "good measure, pressed down, shaken together, running over." I must deal not only in justice but in mercy. Nay, mercy is the finest and most finished justice. Mercy is the most intimate kinsman of truth. And when we "love mercy" we are in the home of truth.

"Walk humbly with thy God." In this companionship all graces will be born. No pride can live in this fellowship, no meanness, no hardness, no injustice. If I keep near God I can never be alien to my brother. When I abide in the Lord my soul will be "as a well-watered garden."

SATURDAY, March 15. John 10: 11-18. "I lay down my life." In that supreme sacrifice all other sacrifices turn pale. In the power of that sacrifice the blackest guilt finds forgiveness. Its energies seek out the ruined and desolate life with glorious offer of renewal. When the Lord laid down his life the entire race found a new beginning. Our hope is born at the Cross. It is there that "the burden of our sin rolls away." In his might we find daybreak! When he said, "It is finished," our soul could sing, "Life is begun!"

And so pilgrims gather at the Cross. Songs are heard there, the "sweetest ever sung by mortal tongues." And the power of the Cross never wanes. Its glorious grace reaches the soul to-day as in the earliest days. It reinspires the despairing heart. It transforms the mind. It remakes the tissues of the will. There is no shattered power that the power of the Cross cannot restore. "We are complete in him."

In the cross of Christ I glory,
Towering o'er the wrecks of time;
All the light of sacred story
Gathers round its head sublime.

These Daily Meditations will appear in each issue through 1913.

Painted Floors are Easy to Keep Clean

A little soap and water keeps painted floors clean. It takes a scrubbing brush and lots of hard work to make bare boards presentable, for the uncoated wood absorbs and holds stains of all kinds. Painted floors look better and are more sanitary. Little wonder, then, that American housewives are demanding them for kitchens, laundries, pantries, and wherever floor surfaces receive hard, constant usage. Try Acme Quality Granite Floor Paint and see what splendid serviceable effects can be obtained. It dries quickly, giving a tough, elastic, wear-resisting surface. It is one of the line of

ACME QUALITY

Paints, Enamels, Stains, Varnishes

From roof to cellar, you will find ready for immediate use the appropriate ready-to-use Acme Quality.

The lower illustration shows how Acme Quality Cement Coater is applied. If you have a cement floor, you know how it continually powders up and wears away. This Cement Coater will prevent this, giving a hard, smooth, durable, sanitary surface, easy to keep clean. Besides basement floors, it is recommended for use on all kinds of cement or concrete structures—in stables, garages, engine rooms and elsewhere.

To realize just how little trouble and cost it is to use Acme Quality you should send for our free Painting Guide and book on Home Decorating. It is written for the man of the house and the housewife. It tells what to use, shows by colored etchings some beautiful effects, and tells you how the work should be done. We will send you these, free, if you drop us a card asking for them. If you do not know where you can buy Acme Quality products, ask us.

LETTERS FROM EMINENT MEN

Good Advice to American Boys.

OUR invitation to prominent Americans, who are deeply interested in the future of the boys of our country, to send brief messages of counsel and encouragement, has brought in a number of responses, several of which have already appeared in the pages of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. Below we give the replies received from Speaker Champ Clark, Secretary of the Navy Hon. George von S. Meyer, Hon. James Wilson, Secretary of Agriculture, and Ex-Governor John A. Dix of New York. These letters should prove inspirational and helpful to our boys of the CHRISTIAN HERALD Family Circle, for whose special benefit they were written:

Speaker Clark on Thoroughness.

I am very fond of boys. I have one of my own, who is my constant companion when circumstances permit. He is twenty-three years old and attends the law school of the University of Missouri. It is a great cross to me to be separated from him even for the purpose of his receiving an education. He and I have been chums ever since he was born. Neither one of my children ever gave me a minute's trouble in their lives.

Boys ought to learn something thoroughly. A little smattering of a great many subjects may make a man a very pleasant and agreeable companion, but those who succeed best are those who make themselves masters of some particular subject. For instance, I can get in forty-eight hours two or three dozen stenographers at five or six dollars per week, but one who can write ninety words and do it well can secure from $50 to $100 per month, and one who can report a trial in court or take speeches verbatim can get anywhere from $100 to $150 per month, and a first-class stenographer can get five or six thousand dollars a year—that is, the most rapid and accurate ones, and it is the same way in every other branch of human endeavor. The world is looking for really competent people.

Hoping that this will do your boys some good, I am your friend,

CHAMP CLARK.

The Speaker's Room, House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

Secretary Wilson Favors the Farm for Boys.

This department has organized something like one hundred thousand boys and girls, mostly in the Southern States, to work toward a knowledge of agriculture. We are organizing in all the Northern States and will have many more. This is our line of work with boys, and we think we are doing something.

JAMES WILSON.

Department of Agriculture, Office of the Secretary, Washington.

Secretary Meyer Exalts the Navy as a Profession.

I wish that it were in my power to place in every schoolhouse the story of our navy and its achievements in peace and war, until the heroic deeds of John Paul Jones, John Barry, Stephen Decatur, Oliver Hazard Perry, David G. Farragut, David D. Porter, William B. Cushing, and Admiral George Dewey, and of many other brave officers and sailors, were as well known throughout the land as are the alphabet and the multiplication table.

I wish also that it were in my power to impress on all young people that it is the splendid education that our officers receive at Annapolis which assists in forming their characters and which is instrumental in producing the efficient operation of our vessels and in the end makes our navy an instrument for peace. The opportunity for a first class education is offered to all our young people in this country by the public schools; let them make every effort to benefit thereby.

The history of our navy is an honorable one. The navy aided in the War of the Revolution; fought the War with Tripoli; suppressed piracy in the West Indies; won the War of 1812; preserved the Union in the War of Secession; won the War with Spain, and is our main defense against foreign aggression.

The navy is, moreover, a school of efficiency, teaching many trades, discipline and cleanliness to young men. As a trade school it has been called "our great national university." It returns to civil life annually as many efficient, patriotic and trained young men as are graduated from the five leading universities of the country.

Our navy stands for honor, virtue, patriotism, obedience to those in authority, and respect for the law.

G. v. S. MEYER.

The Secretary of the Navy, Washington.

Ex-Governor Dix on Character-Making.

Upon entering one of the universities in a foreign land, one sees over the portal chiseled deep in the keystone of the arch, these words, "Manners maketh man." Generations have passed over the threshold and observed these words, and I doubt not that the influence of that appeal and that admonition has made an impress upon mankind. The influence of right living, of diligence and determination upon the youth of our country, inspiring young men to achieve high standards, is a responsibility alike for man and woman, that succeeding generations may attain, under new conditions of national life, those progressive results which will exalt national honor and benefit mankind.

Young men must be taught by example and precept to meet with fortitude the everyday obstacles and annoyances, to exercise the mind by wise application to study, to develop the body by systematic work and to gain spiritual advancement by correct attitude toward holy things. Development is change—it is self-denial, and unless guided into pathways of rectitude, character often wanders off into the by-ways leading to stagnation or worse.

The principle of thrift is the foundation of character. It combines the elements of character which are expressed in manners. It should teach one to spend wisely and save generously—to be honest, honorable and honored.

MOTHER LOVE

IS THERE a height or depth that can Mensure a mother's love?
Deep as the sea's unfathomed depth,
High as the heavens above!

There is no truer love, as her
Unselfishness will prove;
You may her heart with sorrow break,
There still remains her love.

She cares for us in infancy,
In childhood and when grown;
And as our love for her grows less,
Hers takes a deeper tone.

No other love will stand the test
Of long neglectful years;
Years, when all other love would die
In bitter, angry tears.

When we form other ties, 'tis then
Our love for her grows cold;
While mother's heart is large enough
To gather in the fold.

We do not think, we do not feel,
Till called upon to part;
Then every unkind word and deed
Will rankle in the heart.

Then, little children, one and all—
Manhood and woman, too,
Cherish the mothers that remain
The hearts that beat so true.

"I'll see to her all right, Nan—you nd to your patient. Alison, you get me water. If we had some smelling lts—"

"Here's a bottle of washing amonia. That ought to be fumy nough. Put her head down and her et up—there! She'll come to in a inute."

"Then one of you come over here nd help me rig this tourniquet. It's ot to be tight as never was. Does it urt, love?" The speaker was bending ver a white little creature half in her rms and half on the floor.

"Not much. Can I open my eyes ow? I don't—see—how you knew my -name."

"No, don't open 'em yet, dear. Not ill we sponge you off nice as a pin. ou don't want to get all faintish gain, do you? We'll have you well in minute more, honey!"

"You called me Love before."

"Well, I'll call you 'love' again—you re a love; isn't she, girls? Some olks would have screamed."

"Love! Love!" The mother was truggling up, calling wildly: "What's he matter? What have you done?"

"Don't try to get up quite yet—lease don't look just yet."

"But my baby—Love- -"

"I'm all right, ma. I don't bleed a rop now—don't you go an' look over ere, though! I got my eyes shut, ight."

One of the three girls, still busily vorking, vouchsafed explanation in a natter-of-fact voice.

"We found your little girl quite 'cut p'—out in a field we were crossing. o we brought her home. She'll come ut all right. Please don't worry! We've got the bleeding stopped al-eady."

"They're the strongest, ma! I veigh ninety pounds, an' I never walked a step o' the way home, not a single!"

"That's nothing!" the girl Jean aughed. "What's all our gym work good for if we can't do as much as hat? We're muscular as Injuns, aren't we, girls? There, that bandage will hold till a doctor gets here. Now we'll clean up."

"'Doctor!'" gasped the terrified woman across the room. "Is it as bad as that? I must get up!"

"No—please! See how weak you are. You couldn't stand on your feet. Jean will take care of your little girl—why, Jean's a regular first aid! She's specializing in all sorts of aid-things. But we'll get the doctor, of course, as soon as we can. You see it's an artery—"

"'Artery!' No! No! Love, what have you done to yourself? What have you done?"

The little voice sighed faintly. "Well, I guess I most cut my hand off. It was that old hen, Crazy Cath'rine, mother! She won't lay only just in the tall grass, an' I ran my wrist right up against a sc—scythe."

"Sh!" warned a voice, but it was too late. Ellen Knox had once more lapsed into unconsciousness. The hot little kitchen was the humble arena for heroic labors for a little space, then again an interval of comparative calm.

"Now, Nan, come and sit by my patient—you stay with yours, Alison. I'm going to telephone to a doctor."

"Our telephone's out o' order," Love remarked. She was lying quite at peace and open-eyed. "You couldn't telephone to a cow."

"Then I'll go for a doctor. I guess I can do that! You tell me where the very nearest one lives."

"There isn't any very nearest one. What'll she do, ma? Go get pa?"

"Where is pa?—tell me quick!" Jean was already at the door.

"Down in the early field. You know where I found Crazy Cath'rine's eggs? Well, you keep right on going till you hear a mowin' machine buzz. That'll be pa."

It was to an unfamiliar kitchen—a hospital-kitchen—that the girl Jean brought Seaber Knox. She walked beside him through field by field, quietly explaining the unfortunate state of affairs. He could scarcely keep up with her free, swinging stride, though the very soul of the man hurried.

"If you say so, we'll run," Jean said, "but there's no need of that. I've got the bleeding stopped beautifully and the other girls are taking care of your wife. Please don't be alarmed!"

It was the matter of mere minutes to harness a horse and dash away for a doctor, but there were still serious complications left behind Seaber Knox in that little hospital room. He rode away and rode home again in a bewildered and distressed state of mind. If Marcella and Essie Bell were only at home to keep mother from trying to get up, and to get the men's dinner! There wasn't a neighbor's family without work and complications of its own—sickness at the Randalls' and the Brewers' and Cordelia Burns away—oh, poor little Love, poor little Love! The father's heart bled with the lacerated little wrist.

He put up his horse and went into a quieted and tidied little kitchen. A smell of boiling vegetables and meat came to meet him. There was the sound of clinking forks and spoons as though some one were setting the table; he heard a girl's voice in the pantry. Had Marcella and Essie Bell got home unexpectedly early? But the voice was not a Marcella voice nor Essie Bell's.

The doctor had arrived before him and was in the cool sitting-room already dressing Love's hand. He looked up as the father entered.

"Well, wasn't much need of me," he laughed cheeringly. "Some doctor got in his work here ahead of me! Pretty good work, too." His voice grew quite suddenly grave. "If it hadn't been good work I don't know where your little girl would be now, Mr. Knox," he said. "I tell you, these are the times to have girls educated. Coolness, common sense, learning, great yokefellows!"

Seaber Knox went into the bedroom to his wife. The blinds were shut and the room perfectly dark and quiet. She was lying on the bed with bandaged head and eyes.

"Pa!" faintly.

"Yes, ma, here I am. You all used up?"

"Oh, Seaber, I'm so ashamed! Instead of helping I went an' made another one! I never could stand blood—there was so much blood, pa!"

"Yes, I know. If you talk I'll have to go out—"

"I've got to talk! First, I kept fainting, an' then I went an' had one o' my stone-blind headaches—right there in the middle of everything. One o' those dear girls brought me to bed—you never saw any one so strong, pa. She says it's practicing so many developing kinds o' exercises, an' they make 'em walk a lot, besides. She knew just what to give me, too. She laughed when she said she learned that at college! Now, what do you suppose they're doing out there, pa?"

He was beyond supposing. In the cool dark he sat and rubbed his nose in the pa-way of bewilderment.

"Getting dinner for the men! They would do it. I told 'em what I could, an' Love told 'em some, too. They went right at it. You never saw!—vegetables an' meat an' all, an' one of 'em's made a dessert."

He stooped in the darkness and found her poor hot cheek. He was not used to kissing ma of late years. She felt a sweet and healing surprise.

"You're a good man, pa," she whispered tenderly.

The girl Jean had found the dinner

Rugged Children

Of a Hundred Nations Are Now Fed on Quaker Oats

Every mother, of almost every race, knows something of the value of oatmeal.

She knows that children thrive on it, if she doesn't know just how.

And to "feel one's oats," in every language, indicates vitality.

Science knows the reason.

Science finds that oatmeal is rich in lecithin and phosphorus, builder of brains and nerves.

Science finds that oatmeal builds up the thyroid.

And the thyroid gland is now believed to control the brain development.

So the leading nations, in this year 1913, agree on oatmeal diet.

Quaker Oats

The Favorite Oat Food More Than Half the World Over

Among the highly intelligent, oatmeal is now an almost universal food.

But one brand of oatmeal far outsells all the others, because of its flavor and richness.

This is so in America—so half the world over. We ship it for thousands of miles.

Every year a thousand million dishes are consumed.

This Is the Reason

Quaker Oats is made from the cream of the oats. The finest oats that grow are sifted 62 times to pick out the grains for Quaker.

We get only ten pounds of Quaker Oats from a bushel—just the rich, plump, luscious grains.

The result is a flavor that is never forgotten. And our process keeps that flavor intact.

Once eat Quaker Oats, and lesser oatmeal seems flat and commonplace.

Yet this finest of oat foods, with all small grains discarded, costs but one-half cent per dish.

Thus, for 25 years, the fame has spread and spread. Quaker Oats is now "The World's Breakfast." It is supper, too, for millions.

Don't serve to your folks any lesser grade of oatmeal. This food is too important.

horn and had gone out to blow it; he heard the clear, inviting call. She came back into the house laughing joyously.

"I never did that before," she cried gaily. "It's nice, I like it. I wish they'd call us to dinner at college with a horn, don't you, girls?" She was a tall, fresh-cheeked, wholesome young creature. Seaber Knox, watching her, thought she might easily have been named Marcella or Esther Bell. He liked the looks of her. At that moment something seemed to wrench and loosen in some deep place—was it a root of pa giving way?

The dinner was on the table, and, to judge by the sound of voices, under pleasant headway when Seaber Knox had seen the doctor off and assured himself of the quiet of the two sick-rooms. He went to his own dinner with a definite sense of surprise that he heard voices—men voices—at all. The situation had struck him as decidedly awkward for his three hired men. Tongue-tied? Here they were talking and laughing easily. He found them apparently enjoying their well-prepared meal, without a thought of embarrassment. Their three young hostesses were presiding with a quiet grace and absence of self-consciousness that astonished him and set him to thinking new thoughts. Again he felt that wrenching loose of tough fibers within the hard-packed soil of his mind. This quiet acceptance of a trying situation—this easy grace and charm—were they parts of a college education? Would his own girls in exactly this sort of crisis be as well equipped as these three? Seaber Knox was an honest man.

Then, too, in the other respects—presence of mind in so ghastly a little emergency, the cool grasping of whatever succor was at hand, the lack of hysterical excitement, the determined optimism that went so far toward help—were they all significant things for an honest man to consider? Seaber Knox sat at his dinner table, considering. He ate the savory food in increasing wonder; it was food for his mind as well as his body. Would his own girls be able to get up any better dinner than this, or as good, in the midst of such unusual and upsetting circumstances? From first to last of that remarkable meal, Seaber Knox did much serious thinking. It was not until close to the end of it that he realized his own unsociability and plunged into the conversation.

"Pretty nice school you think you've got up there to town, I suppose?" he said, jokingly, though his eyes remained grave. "Think it's some worth while, don't ye?"

They leaned toward him, the three of them, with the effect of mobbing him in gay indignation.

"That's not playing fair, Mr. Knox!" they cried. "You know we can't give our college yell with two sick people in the house—and how else could we ever convince you how worth while it is! If you'd just give us a good, fair show—"

"You've had it," he nodded gravely, "I'm feelin' considerable convinced."

After an hour's busy clearing away and setting in order and a tiptoed trip to the two patients, the girls were ready to leave. Seaber Knox went with them to the door. He had meant to try to express some of the gratitude that filled him to the cover of his soul to tell them what they had done for little Love, but it was useless. The best he could manage was to grip their firm young hands with a mighty grip. After that his attempt at off-hand farewell was undeceiving. Mother, listening from her open window, never rightly knew whether she smiled or sobbed.

"Well, well, I reckon I'll see ye all again, some time, when I'm over to your school visitin' my girls."

You Can Be Well

When the circulation is forceful, the nerves strong, breathing correct, and vital organs working properly, disease germs, grippe and colds have little hold upon you.

I have helped 60,000 of the most refined, intellectual women of America to regain health and good figures and have taught them how to keep well. Why not you? You are busy, but you can devote a few minutes a day in the privacy of your room, to following scientific, hygienic principles of health prescribed to suit your particular needs.

You Can Weigh Exactly What You Should Weigh

ANSWERED PRAYERS

I AM near three score and ten. Last summer in order to save life it was necessary to have an operation performed at the hospital. The two Christian men who carried me from the house to the doctor's auto, to be taken to the hospital, afterward went to their knees in prayer that I might be spared to return home. Many other friends, besides relatives, as soon as they heard of my condition, besought the Lord for my recovery. All seemed to believe their prayers would be answered, though doctors and nurses despaired of my life and I was willing to go or stay. He who rewards faithful prayer heard and answered, and my strength has so nearly returned that I feel well enough to resume my work for my Master." This letter comes from Mrs. I. S., of Haddenfield, N. J.

"I am a widow, old and sickly," writes Mrs. C. E. B. from Bradford, Pa. "I was despairing when suddenly God answered my prayer in a most unexpected manner. I want you all to know of this direct answer to an earnest prayer that will help three helpless ones." V. M. C. writes from Ottawa, Kan.: "I am in my seventy-sixth year, and a dark cloud has hung over me for years, but yesterday, in answer to my feeble petition, the Lord showed me the silver lining, and peace reigns once more." Mrs. J. A. D. of Arcata, Calif., writes: "I wish to add my testimony to the many of God's goodness and mercy in answering prayers. He has blessed me recently. I have passed the eighty-third milestone."

A good letter came from Mrs. E. R. K. of Conway Springs, Kan.: "I love the paper very much," she writes. "One column which interests me more than any is the Answered Prayers. I scan them closely every week. One thing that surprises me more than anything is that so few realize what there is in prayer. But not until one comes to the end of self and ventures out on faith will he ever realize what there is in prayer. Twenty-five years ago I passed through the fire. I had always been one that trusted in God and prayer. But I came to the place where help must come, and I knew full well that there was no help anywhere else. It is just wonderful what God will do for one who just throws everything to the winds and says: 'Help must come, and there is no one who can help me but God.' Then we must pray and trust and wait. How often we read: 'Wait!' Sometimes that seems hard, but God knows just when and how to bring things to pass. Since that time prayer is my daily food. He says: 'I will instruct thee and teach thee in the way thou shalt go. I will guide thee with mine eye.'"

Acknowledgments of answers to prayer have also been received from:

Full of labors, annoyances and hardships, pressed and harassed by labors, perils, evil things, wicked things, bad things, then the evil one. Then the prayer is that we may be freed from the danger of all that evil means.

Finally, what are we to do after we have prayed this prayer most earnestly and constantly? We are to depend upon the power of God to sustain us. We are to submit to the leading of the divine. We are to trust his grace and power. And then we are to use our own reinforced wills. We are to be watchful as well as prayerful. We are to be on our guard. We are to resist each and every insinuating temptation with all the force of the sanctified will. We are to have a firm purpose to co-operate with God. We are to keep away from the power of temptations of every kind. We are to be true and firm and brave. We are to be prompt and unhesitating. We must remember: "The devil tempts us not—'tis we who tempt him, beckoning his skill with opportunity!"

Do not pray this prayer in the morning when the sun shines in brightness upon your pathway, and the day opens big with promise of life and blessings, and then when the shades of night come, and alluring voices whisper to you to depart from the straight and narrow way, forget that you prayed this prayer in the morning. But keep in mind your need and His presence; and while doing your part faithfully and well, lean on the strength of the everlasting arms.

Dare to do right, dare to be true!
You have a work that no other can do;
Do it so kindly, so bravely, so well,
Angels will hasten the story to tell.

Keep on praying: "Lead us not into temptation, but deliver us from evil!"

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON

God can bring no evil consequences, more needed than in business and politics. Many business men, in moments of confidence, frankly confess that while right is right in theory, it won't work in buying and selling. They think if a man sticks to the truth while his competitor keeps on lying, the lie will beat the truth. Against this worst form of unbelief we hurl the resistless shot, "Right wrongs no man."

For right is right, since God is God,
And right the day must win;
To doubt would be disloyalty,
To falter would be sin.

The church member in politics needs that war song no less than the business man. When one politician is buying votes directly or indirectly, his rival often thinks he too must "do evil that good may come," which is a "doctrine of devils." It is like removing the granite foundations of the earth to deny that in a God-made, God-ruled world it is always right to do right, and can never be right to do wrong. We must obey God by doing right, and trust him to take care of consequences.

The sacrificial altars are outgrown, but sacrifice is no less central in Christian life. It is essential to our best development that we make sacrifices, take risks, do hard things that promise trouble, to prove and increase our trust and obedience. The very heart of the sacrifice is that it seems we are losing something, encountering some hardship for God's sake and the truth's sake; but faith, if we have real faith, assures us that "God will provide" a way of escape for what we fear, or else will provide strength to meet consequences.

BOWERY MISSION TESTIMONIES

II. A Converted Longshoreman

WHAT a change comes over a man when he gives himself up to Christ! I am what I am to-night by the power of Christ, and that alone. I don't pretend to be a saint. I have no wings, I do not set myself up as an example. But, oh, when I think of what I once was, and compare it with what I am to-night, I know nothing but God's grace and power can have wrought the change.

"It is no pleasure to me to stand up here and tell you of my former utter degradation—people who see me now wonder how it could be that any one could allow himself to get so low. But I am talking to men who themselves feel that it is impossible for them ever to be lifted from their low-down condition. That is why I tell it.

"Men, I am not the same fellow I used to be. I am another fellow. I am a 'new creature in Christ Jesus.' The low, miserable, drunken, half-savage outcast has disappeared, and this is a new man.

"God intended me to be a man. I know that now. He breathed his life into me, and he intended that I should enjoy it. Although in my boyhood I broke through all restraints, and absolutely refused to go to school or Sunday school, and in that way grew up ignorant and brutal, surrounding myself with the most degrading influences from my youth up, I remember how I used to reach out with my heart for something better. It seemed impossible for me to get it, so I took to rum, and rum turned me into something not half as respectable as a dog.

"I was born on Manhattan Island, and have spent all my life here. My boyhood was spent in the lower part of the city. I was strong and high-spirited. I was not afraid of work. I did work and was always able to earn a living at truck-driving, longshore work and such like. But as the years went on drink got a stronger hold upon me every year until at last in December, 1896, I was absolutely homeless, penniless and unfit to work. Nobody would employ me. I had not a friend to turn to. In that bitter winter weather I walked the streets without any underwear, and in rags. I was famishing with hunger. Because I was hungry I came and stood before the doors of the Bowery Mission, and asked some men in the street if I could get anything to eat if I went in. They told me I could. I went in. They were singing a hymn, 'The Lord Will Provide.' I thought what mockery! The Lord will have a stiff job to provide for a wretch like me. I was in heathen darkness as to all spiritual matters. I didn't believe what they were singing. For years I had been accustomed to look upon religion as a fairy-story, something fit only for old women and children. Christians! I hated the name. I thought them all fakes and humbugs.

"Suddenly I heard men talking about the change that had come into their lives. They were describing themselves as having once been in exactly the same condition as I was that night. That was something I couldn't get over. I believed them. I took heart. I said to myself, 'I'm going to try this.' For fourteen days and nights I had walked the streets and had not once slept in a bed. I was dead tired. I was played out. I was dying of hunger. They gave me a plate of soup that night, and that was the last 'charity' I ever received. I told them I wanted to be a Christian and they gave me a little Testament. The first words I read in it were 'Blessed are they which do hunger and thirst after righteousness, for they shall be filled.' I didn't understand it, but somehow or other from that moment I was filled day and night with a passion for righteousness.

"I knew there must be some power that made those men on the platform righteous and kept them righteous, and I wanted it. I hungered for it.

"Oh, thank God, it was true! It all came out as they said it would. For sixteen years I have kept that before me. I am still 'hungering and thirsting after righteousness,' and God is still 'filling me.'

"To-night I rejoice in the fact that I am living a sober, honest, self-respecting life, with money in my pocket, and so much trusted by my employers that I am collecting money for them.

"There is only one way of accounting for the change. It is by the grace of God I am what I am."

pensions are owned or run by fanatical devotees of the church. These places are the constant resort of priests, and are open also to members of the black party. Amongst these are needy adventurers with titles real or spurious to their names—Duke This and Prince That. They are always on the lookout for money. Aided, it may be, by some one in the hotel or pension, they get acquainted with a rich American family with marriageable daughters. To one of these love is made and marriage is arranged. Such have no difficulty in finding a priest to perform the ceremony. It is done. Then when the adventurer gets what he wants, he deserts the girl, and, as I have said, she has no remedy. Some few years ago a young girl was so treated. Her pseudo-husband, having secured her money, left her, and married civilly and legally an Italian woman with whom he was in love. The victimized girl shot dead her betrayer and his wife. Recognizing the provocation she had received, she was left unpunished. Another girl similarly betrayed committed suicide. The too frequent occurrence of such tragic cases induced certain deputies to bring before the parliament a measure for the imprisonment of priests and their witnesses who dared to go through a religious form of marriage before the parties contracting produced a certificate of their having been civilly married by the city authorities.

In view of the Ne Temere decree it would be well if marriage were made a compulsory civil contract in every land. For, as we have seen, whilst rendering that iniquitous decree, so fertile in cruelty and immorality, of no effect, it does not prevent the newly married couple going before any minister in church or home and having a religious ceremony performed.

I desire to tell the readers of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD of the other measures adopted by Italy to render the Roman Catholic Church as a political organization helpless in the land, and so maintain the people in the enjoyment of civil as well as religious liberty, but must reserve what I have to say for a second article.

Regarding Advertising

ADVERTISING has changed greatly since the first issue of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD was printed. Through the persistent efforts of men in the advertising profession, the greater part of present-day advertising has become news. No responsible editor of a newspaper deliberately plans to print inaccurate news, and no sensible merchant attempts to deceive the people whom he wants to interest in his business. Whenever any of our subscribers is defrauded by an advertiser in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD we will make good the claim, provided that the subscriber, who must be of record, has mentioned THE CHRISTIAN HERALD in writing to the advertiser, and provided the claim is made to us within two months of the date of the appearance of the advertisement. This guarantee does not apply to investment advertisements.

SAPOLIO

The amount of cleaning, scouring and polishing that you can get from one cake of Sapolio is simply astonishing.

The reason is plain.

Sapolio does not waste.

You may have tried strong, harsh compounds that give poor suds. They simply grind off the dirt, therefore must be used freely and wastefully.

The grinding gives your tins a dull, "frosted" finish. In time it wears off the tin surface.

Then rusting starts.

In giving your tins the desired like glitter, Sapolio's rich, cleansin help materially. Sapolio's suds make injurious materials unnecessary.

MORMON UPHEAVAL

[ORMONISM as a religion is on trial among its own followers. Never since the "revelations" of Joseph Smith ppeared has there been such a f excitement, of doubts and of impending disintegration aster, as now prevails. When Spalding, of the Episcopal in Utah, lately issued his let exposing the absurdities of Smith's alleged translations e "sacred hieroglyphs" and l that these translations were nously condemned by the ablest scholars, Mormonism was to its depths. Now the up- has been intensified by other . What these are is explained Rev. J. A. Livingston Smith, r fifteen years was a Presbyte- ome missionary in Utah. He : "For seventy-five years or the civilized world, outside of ormon Church, has refused to in the alleged existence of the plates (as well as in the man- d the fact of their translation). rsistent and effective has been niversal unbelief, and so success- s been the arraignment of the itnesses' and their testimony he Mormon Church, by the au- y of its first presidency, has at officially declared that the nical theory' of translation of original 'eye-witnesses' must nly be abandoned as being all he civilized world has declared be ('absurd,' 'ridiculous,' and mptible'), but that there must bstituted for it a theory which modern official theologian and rete, Brigham H. Roberts, has d and published in the last edi- f the text-book for the instruc- nd guidance of their missiona- known as the Senior Manual.

"This theory has been designated as 'the manual theory,' and, in substance, is as follows, viz.: 'Joseph Smith, by great mental effort, the exercise of faith and the gifts and power of God, was enabled to see (in the Urim and Thummim, or in the Seer Stone), not the mechanical and infallible translation of the Egyptian hieroglyphics into the English language; but the "conception" or "thought" of the hieroglyphics, which he thereupon formulated into the best form and use of the English language of which he was master; and that, too, the best at his command, in view of his limited opportunities and environment!' This is the infallible substitute for the former inspired, original theory! It scarcely needs be added that so widespread and frantic has been the upheaval and commotion produced by this 'manual theory' that its author and publisher has been bitterly assailed by both the Mormon priesthood and laity, and exultingly ridiculed by the non-Mormon people in all parts of the land. By voice and pen alike he is vainly endeavoring to still the tempest and stay the wrath of his offended and bewildered brethren. The summary of these frantic efforts to establish the infallibility of his manual theory has appeared in a semi-official work entitled A Defense of the Faith and of the Saints, by Brigham H. Roberts. While officially designed to be an apologetic of Mormonism in general, the dominant motive, purpose and effort is so manifest and significant that its publication cannot but be hailed by the Christian church as the evidence of the fact that her missionary enterprises and agencies have been justified and fully compensated in the enforced invention of this latest 'revelation.'"

E COLLEGE-TRAINED CHILDREN'S NURSE

HAT branch of nursing which has to do with the care of little children was inaugurated as a profession in England twenty years ago, the Norland ute in London having the honor ing the pioneer training-school e kind.

HOUSEHOLD HINTS

Table silver may be successfully cleaned by standing for one-half hour in water in which potato peelings have been soaked. If the silver is solid or heavily plated, boil in strong soapsuds and place a small piece of alum in the water. Special pans are now made for cleaning silver, and are chemically treated in such a way that all the usual labor of silver cleaning and polishing is entirely done away with, and without injury to the silver.

Very small irons are useful in the home, and are a special boon to travelers. Electric irons are desirable when the house permits of their use, but if the house is not wired, then the small, self-heating irons are the ones to buy. These little irons are heated by gas, gasoline, or denatured alcohol, and keep hot for from five to six hours at the small cost of one cent. They are simple of adjustment, are odorless, clean, and safe.

There is a much more general screening of doors and windows nowadays, because it has become known generally that flies are dangerous germ carriers. Bronze and copper wire is said to be the most durable, but if a hole appears, cut a piece the same shape but about two inches larger all around, unravel the edges, place over the part to be mended, and weave in and out through every other hole, being very careful not to break the wires. Keep the wires smooth and straight, and when the weaving is finished, hammer the surface to give an added smoothness. Wire netting is excellent for mending the bottoms of upholstered chairs. It may be securely fastened around the edges by double-headed tacks and over the springs, then neatly covered with thick muslin.

The Howard Watch

THE best of attention and service for the man who carries a HOWARD Watch—not on account of the watch, but because he is likely to be that kind of a man.

The possession of a HOWARD undoubtedly does suggest a man who appreciates quality and is quite able to know whether he is getting it or not; a man who respects HOWARD history; and withal, the practical man of orderly mind who expects to have things done on time.

A HOWARD Watch is always worth what you pay for it.

The price of each watch is fixed at the factory and a printed ticket attached—from the 17-jewel (double roller) in a Crescent Extra or Boss Extra gold-filled case at $40 to the 23-jewel at $150—and the EDWARD HOWARD model at $350.

Not every jeweler can sell you a HOWARD WATCH. Find the HOWARD jeweler in your town and talk to him. He is a good man to know.

Admiral Sigsbee has written a little book, "The Log of the HOWARD Watch," giving the record of his own HOWARD in the U. S. Navy. You'll enjoy it. Drop us a post card, Dept. W, and we'll send you a copy.

"DISCHARGED"

NOW, misther, yer honor," the sheriff then said,
"We've caught um full-handed, indade, sir, we ded;
He'd stolen a ham—'twas a foine, joocy mate—
An' had taken it home to his fam'ly to ate:
An' ther-re was they all, jist a-atein' an' fryin',
His wife an' the childer that's sittin' an' cryin'!"

The magistrate then from his bench good and tall
Looked down on the culprit, his family and all;
Adjusted his glasses most carefully, too,
To bring the whole group of them closer to view.
"And what is the charge, Mr. Sheriff, please answer."
"It's the stalin' of mate from the house of John Hant, sir!"

"They seem to be poor!" said the magistrate then,
And he thought of the days of his boyhood, and when,
In a humble log cabin with little to eat,
His father and mother had struggled to meet
The needs and the wants of a family so growing,
While the bleak winds of winter around them were blowing.

"Did you steal it?" he asked in a voice soft and low,
"And why did you steal it? I just want to know."
The wretched man shrank from the glance of the court,
Then laughed in the face of the judge as in sport;
"Send me up! Send me up if you want to, yer honor;
I knew all the time I was surely a goner!
But you see" (coming close to the magistrate's view),
"That's my wife; an' my chil'ern air sittin' there, too;
They were hungry, oh jedge, jist as chil'ern kin be,
An' I hadn't a thing fur to give 'em, you see:
So I stole 'em some meat jist to keep 'em from dyin',
I jist couldn't stand so to hear 'em a-cryin'!
An', jedge, it may be I'm a criminal, too,
But I'd ruther, a long sight, I want to tell you,
Be punished like sin fur a crime er a wrong,
Than to have my sweet darlin's a sufferin' long
Fur the want of a wee bit of food in the larder;
Now punish me, jedge, all the quicker an' harder!"

The judge ran his fingers, bestudded with gold,
Through the hair that encircled his forehead so bold;
And then through his past, with his memory's goad,
He stirred up the deeds that he'd done 'long the road;
And said in his heart—and he said it quite sadly—
"We, every blamed one, have at times acted badly;
The diff'rence 'twixt me and this ignorant lout
Is just that this fellow is simply found out;
If I had my full due, as sure as dull fate,
I'd be breaking of rock in the hands of the State."
And then to the criminal he said in low tone:
"Such wrong, sir, the commonwealth must not condone;
To punish a crime, the statutes adjure it,
But mercy is given as one way to cure it!"
Then seizing a pen, with a handwrite enlarged,
He wrote on his docket this legend: "Discharged!"

DOUGLAS DOBBINS.

DISAPPOINTED

LET not thy failure weight thee down,
The world is wide, the way is long;
It is the trying wins the crown,
The loving wakes the song.

Hard though thy days, by grief and pain
Made dark with dread and dull with work,
A quiet conscience is the gain
Of those who never shirk.

Better to lose the fight than win
A large success by devious ways;
No victor ever enters in
Save honor fill his days.

Think not on what is past and gone,
Life's trouble, loss, and fruitless quest;
Thy future is one rising dawn,
And there lies all thy rest.

Be not cast down, the world is bright;
Laugh with the gay, the young, the wise.
To love and labor is thy right,
Here all the glory lies.

BEAUTIFUL ROSES —Guaranteed— FREE

WE HAVE succeeded in having grown for us the Finest Lot of in America. THE CHRISTIAN HERALD Roses for 1913 are guaranteed to grow and bloom. The varieties have been selected with the greatest care. All are hardy and with proper protection will stand the climate of any part of the United States. They are of first grade and highest quality. We are paying 50 per cent more for our 1913 roses than we did for 1912 stock. The roses we will send you this year have been grown especially for us by the largest and most experienced rose growers in America. There are 100,000 CHRISTIAN HERALD Rose Bushes waiting for orders for delivery to our subscribers. These bushes will produce millions of roses every year for many years to come, spreading their beauty and fragrance from Maine to California.

Guaranteed We will replace, free of all charge, every rose bush that fails to grow and bloom if it is given ordinary care and is not allowed to die from neglect.

INSPECTED Every lot of roses will be carefully inspected and will bear the label of the Department of Agriculture, showing the stock in the nursery to be free of insects or diseases.

ONE YEAR OLD All roses are individually labeled, and each rose is one year old stock with a strong growth of wood stems 5 to 8 inches long, and with perfect root growth—a most important feature. Each plant has the body, strength and vitality necessary to insure shipment, transplanting and a good start in new soil.

HOW TO GROW ROSES A booklet of incalculable value to rose growers is given free with each collection of roses. This contains instructions for Treatment on Arrival, Soil, Planting, Mulching, Pruning, Protection, etc. You can be sure of success if you follow the simple directions that even a child can understand.

EIGHT CHOICE, BEAUTIFUL ROSES

1. ETOILE DE LYON (Star of Lyons): The best pure yellow rose for garden planting ever introduced. A strong, robust grower, and very hardy. Bears an abundance of flowers all through the summer and fall.
2. HELEN GOULD: One of the most valuable hardy crimson ever-blooming roses. The flowers are extra large, double and very fragrant. The color is a rich shaded crimson.
3. LADY ROBERTS: An exceptionally fine deep yellow rose, the color shading from a reddish apricot into a deep coppery red at the base of the petals.
4. WHITE MAMAN COCHET: A splendid, beautiful white rose. One of the finest of the great Cochet roses. The flowers are beautifully formed, very full and deliciously fragrant.
5. WILLIAM R. SMITH: A pink rose that is a leader in its class. Flowers very full and double and exquisitely formed. Perfect buds, delightful fragrance, large dark green foliage.
6. MME. EUGENE MARLITT: A new dark red rose. One of the most abundantly blooming varieties ever introduced. The color is a rich carmine red.
7. PINK DOROTHY PERKINS: A variety of climbing rose. Sterling fifteen feet in a season. Flowers in double with crinkled petals; color a shell-pink. Borne in immense clusters.
8. EXCELSA, or RED DOROTHY PERKINS: This is a new hardy climbing rose and a distinct variety in color, form and shape. The color is an intense crimson maroon with the tips of the petals tinged with scarlet.

THE YOUNG PEOPLE'S MEETINGS

NOTES ON THE CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR, EPWORTH LEAGUE AND BAPTIST YOUNG PEOPLE'S UNION TOPICS

Concerning My Neighbor*

WE ARE apt to be bewildered by all this talk about "Social Service." There is so much of it to do, there are so many people to be helped. Where shall I start in? What can I really do to-day that will in any way help? You have noticed that during this year one lesson each month is devoted to "the social teachings of Jesus." The question for this week's study is "What is it all about? For whom is all this agitation and exhortation made? What is the material with which I am to help work out the social plans of Jesus?" The answer is "My neighbor."

Neighbor means the person near you. Look about you. Who is nearest? The young man at the next desk; the people in the same room with you; the folks in the same house with you, father, mother, brother, sister, servant; the folks next door; the people in your block, on your street, in your town; the people you see on the train; the people you write to. Are you doing all you can to help them in Jesus' name? There are many to be helped, but every one helped makes one less who needs help now.

Remember that we are to recognize in every person we meet the Christ whom we serve. They represent him; and by helping them because we love him we please and honor and serve him.

There are definite things to do. We must try to supply the needs of those who are needy. We must help them to help themselves and to help one another. We must try to right the wrongs in society by speaking bravely about them, by trying to influence public sentiment in the church and out of it so that they shall be brought to an end. Above all, we must try to win all whom we can to the acceptance of Christ as their personal Saviour from sin.

The Lord's Day†

NOTHING illustrates more clearly the difference between the Old and New Testaments than the teachings in each of them about the Sabbath. The keeping of the Sabbath in the Old Testament was a matter of obligation; it was something to be paid to God like the tithe; the chief thought about it in the minds of the Jews was that it was something arranged for God and his honor. Jesus startled the Jews by saying that "the Sabbath was made for man." He tried to make them see that God ordained the Sabbath not because He needed it or desired it but because man needed it. It has been demonstrated in countless ways that man's mind and body require one day's rest in seven. The French Government experimented with a secular Sabbath every tenth day, and the experiment failed. God knew that men needed a rest-day every seven days and so he commanded them to take it. When his Son came to earth he explained why the commandment had been given.

To the simple Sabbath requirements of the law the rabbis had added many tiresome and ridiculous amendments, so that the keeping of the Sabbath had become an intolerable, impossible burden. Jesus broke through all these unauthorized traditions by allowing his disciples to pluck wheat heads on the Sabbath as they walked through the fields and by performing works of mercy and healing on that day.

The change in the number and the name of the day has been a beautiful tribute to the sovereign and divine authority of Jesus. Because he rose from the dead on that day, because his Holy Spirit descended to earth on that day, because he appeared to John at Patmos as he had twice appeared on that day to the disciples after his resurrection, because the early Christians formed the habit of meeting to worship him on that day, the first day of the week gradually assumed the place of the seventh as the Sabbath, and has been known from the beginning of the Christian era as "the Lord's Day."

It makes the whole day beautiful and attractive to think of it as the day of Jesus. It is the day that belongs to him. The old Sabbath, established amid the thunders and fires of Sinai and by words written on stone, had at best something stern about it. It was a day that belonged to Jehovah and in spite of all the tender things God had said to his people through his prophets, they thought of him as a being far removed from them, a being to be feared. Jesus let down no standards, took back nothing of the awful earnestness of the moral requirements, but he made the whole thing gentle and glorious and fragrant by his life and his words. The moral law becomes henceforth the simple matter of treating people kindly, of making sacrifices for them because we love them with a love that has its basis in our love for him. The Sabbath becomes his day. It is a day when we are to give up other interests and other tasks that we may talk about him and talk with him and worship him and work for him. The Sabbath is God's gift to man. As a man Jesus needed it and honored it and used it. It is a day henceforth that belongs to him as a man, the man who showed us the way to God, the man who is God. He has shown us how to keep and use the Sabbath. The day becomes ours in the best sense as we make it his.

Our Scripture lesson for this meeting can be made to apply to the New Testament conception of the Sabbath by understanding "burdens" to mean not only the loads of traffic and commerce but the burdens of care and of daily obligations. Have the references which are assigned for the week's readings read at the meeting: Day of rest, Ex. 20: 8-11; Day of service, Matt. 12: 9-13 [lay special emphasis on this passage]; Day of worship, Luke 4: 16-21; Day of vision, Rev. 1: 9-13; Day of fellowship, I Cor. 1: 1-2; Day of witnessing, Acts 17: 1-4.

Young People's Question Box

R. C., Millwood, N. Y. Kindly send me information regarding the formation of a Christian Endeavor Society.

Get your pastor to call together the young people who will help. Study the constitution, copies of which you may secure from the United Society of Christian Endeavor at Boston or Chicago. Get also the Officers' Handbook from the same publishers. While it would not be correct to elect officers before receiving and adopting the constitution, still it would be well to talk over informally the work of the various departments, and particularly to pray for definite guidance in the final choice of leaders. Besides the regular parliamentary officers the constitution provides for a lookout committee, a prayer-meeting committee, a missionary committee and a social committee. Beside these there is an executive committee composed of the pastor, the officers of the society, the chairmen of the other committees and the leaders of the affiliated groups for connection with which the constitution provides. Talk over the various pledges for active members, one of which will be adopted by your local society. From the beginning emphasize the spiritual element. Get all who are interested to spend time in prayer for the new enterprise. Expect the presence and power of the Holy Spirit to make your work really successful.

A BLOW TO THE LIQUOR TRAFFIC

ON MONDAY, February 9, the Senate of the United States passed a bill for the protection of prohibition States, providing against the introduction of intoxicating liquors into such States through the channels of interstate commerce. The measure, known as the Webb Bill, was passed by the House the previous Saturday and the Senate received it without an alteration. The vote in the Upper Chamber was overwhelmingly in favor of barring intoxicants from "dry" commonwealths. Should President Taft sign the bill before his term expires it will take effect July 1 this year.

The passing of the measure by the Senate delighted the Prohibitionists and the supporters of anti-saloon leagues. The galleries of the House were crowded with sympathizers who had flocked to Washington in anticipation of a triumph for the cause. A triumph it certainly is for all temperance workers, as it will do more to break up a traffic they have been fighting than any piece of legislation in our history. It will do away with the business of illegal sellers of liquor who managed to get their wares into forbidden territory. The "speak-easies," the "boot-leggers" and the "blind tigers" will have to quit and turn their attention to a more legitimate and honorable way of making a living.

The far-reaching effects of the bill may be realized when it is taken into consideration that there are about 46,000,000 persons in the United States to-day living under some form of prohibition and that seventy-one per cent. of the nation's territory is "dry." There is total prohibition in seven States, viz., Maine, Georgia, Kansas, Mississippi, North Carolina, North Dakota and Tennessee.

Not even original packages sent by express will be allowed. Such come under the prohibitions of the bill. The principal provisions of the measure are that "the shipment or transportation, in any manner or by any means whatsoever, of any spirituous, vinous, malted, fermented, or other intoxicating liquor of any kind, from one State, Territory, or District of the United States, or place non-contiguous to but subject to the jurisdiction thereof, into any other State, Territory, or District of the United States, or place non-contiguous to but subject to the jurisdiction thereof, or from any foreign country into any State, Territory, or District of the United States, or place non-contiguous to but subject to the jurisdiction thereof, which said spirituous, vinous, malted, fermented, or other intoxicating liquor is intended, by any person interested therein, to be received, possessed, sold, or in any manner used, either in the original package or otherwise, in violation of any law of such State, Territory, or District of the United States or place non-contiguous to but subject to the jurisdiction thereof, is hereby prohibited."

Saved Two Hours a Day $150 in Six Months

AN Illinois farmer whose specialty — poultry — kept him on the road a good share of the time, bought an International Commercial Car for no other reason than that of spending more time with his chickens. At the end of six months he wrote the agent that "Not to mention any other saving, that car I bought from you has put $150 in my pocket already. How? When I am at work my time is worth a dollar an hour — sometimes more. On the road it's worth about half as much, mostly less. That car has saved me on an average two hours a day for six months, 300 hours, one hundred and fifty dollars. I wouldn't attempt to run the farm without it."

You may be able to profit quite as much by the purchase of an International Commercial Car

The Car That Has Made Its Way by the Way It's Made

On hundreds of farms the car has earned enough to pay for itself in a couple of seasons. Its usefulness is almost endless. Its solid rubber tires reduce tire troubles and expenses to a very low figure. The wheels are high enough to give ample clearance on bad roads. The car has weight enough to give full traetive power for climbing hills. The ignition system is of the best. The motor is simple and easy to understand. One lever controls the car. Brakes are positive and powerful. The whole car is simple, extremely durable and economical.

Questions and Answers

B. D., Durham, N. C. Please state if all passenger vessels are now equipped with wireless apparatus.

Since the first of last October all passenger steamers navigating the ocean and carrying fifty or more persons are compelled to be equipped with an efficient apparatus for radio-communication, in good working order, capable of transmitting and receiving messages over a distance of at least 100 miles, day or night.

Mrs. B. L. W., Güines, Cuba. 1. With what authority is it said in Ps. 90: 10, "The days of our years are three score years and ten"? Does it not seem to be a contradiction to Gen. 6: 3? 2. What is the national hymn, song, or air of the United States? 3. Is it stated in the Bible as to how long a time Noah was engaged in building the Ark?

1. There is no contradiction in the Biblical narrative in regard to the term of human life. The passage in Gen. 6: 3 means that that time would be allowed for the repentance of the wicked race then living before visiting them with punishment. It is not generally interpreted as indicating a divine decision to shorten human life, although it was materially shortened after the Flood. 2. The national anthem is "My Country, 'Tis of Thee," sung to the tune of "America." "The Star-Spangled Banner," however, fairly divides the honor. 3. It is nowhere stated in the Bible how long Noah was engaged in building the Ark. The Lord had offered a respite of 120 years, after the warning to the human race (see I Peter 3: 20; II Peter 2: 5), and it was during a portion of that time that the Ark was constructed.

S. M., Rochester, N. Y. Is there a fourth dimension?

In our space of three dimensions we cannot represent a function of more than three variables by one surface, but we can imagine the existence of a space of higher dimensions in which the function could be represented by a geometrical reality. The point, line, surface and volume can be imagined as spaces of one, two and three dimensions or of no dimension. A point, in fact, is position but not magnitude, only a mental conception; the same can be said of lines and surfaces. Two points bound one finite straight line, four lines bound one square, six squares bound one cube; hence eight cubes will bound a four-dimensional figure, which will have a symmetrical eight-sided aspect to the four independent perpendicular directions which exist in four-dimensional space.

M. S. M., New Jersey. What is meant by Noah being perfect in his generation? (Cen. 6: 9.)

It means that Noah, as living by faith, was just and perfect, i. e., sincere in his desire to do God's will (Gal. 3: 2; Heb. 11: 7). In a world teeming with wickedness, and amid universal depravity, he had stood alone, exercising faith in the testimony of God and condemning the sins of men to which his own virtuous life offered a remarkable contrast

C. C. DeL., Port Dickinson, N. Y. I can not quite understand Luke 23: 43. So many misquote it as it is in this answer: "To-day thou shalt be with me in paradise." In this case it is positive, "You will certainly be with me in paradise." In the Bible it reads: "To-day shalt thou be with me in paradise." ("Thou" is after "shalt.") It seems to me as though it was more of an invitation than a command, that he could be with Him if he would; that is, if he fully repented.

The passage in question has been much discussed. It was the Saviour's assurance to the believing thief that that kingdom of which the thief had spoken, and in which he had asked to be remembered, he should see for himself, and not with delay but on that day on which the King himself gave such assurance. The language admits of no other interpretation, and it is spoken with kingly authority. Some have questioned the possibility of another meaning in the passage, by placing a comma after "to-day," but this is not warranted by the text. The promise was clear and specific, and is a striking illustration of how "one is taken and another left," and how easily and quickly divine teaching and divine power "can raise the rudest and worst above the best instructed and most devoted servants of Christ." It was the final miracle of grace at the hands of the expiring Saviour.

C. G. C., Bridgeport, Conn. Please compare Heb. 10: 26-29, also Heb. 6: 4-6, with John 6: 37 and I John 1: 9. Does the passage in Hebrews mean that a backslider can find no place for repentance though he seek it carefully with tears? Is he lost forever?

The passage in Heb. 10 refers to those who sin after receiving "full knowledge" of the truth (see I Tim. 2: 4), and who after having been "enlightened" and tasting a certain measure of grace and the spirit of truth (see John 14: 17-29), apostatize to Judaism or infidelity. Such is not a sin of ignorance or error, but the result of moral wickedness or a deliberate sin against the Spirit—a presumptuous sin against Christ's redemption for us and the spirit of grace in us. Having fully known the one sacrifice for sin, and having a certain experience of the efficacy of that sacrifice, they have now rejected it. In Heb. 6: 4, 6, the same idea is emphasized. Such sinners crucify Christ anew, instead of crucifying the world (see Gal. 6: 14). The passage in John 6: 37 expresses the glorious certainty of eternal life to those who believe and stand firm—those who are given him of the Father and come to him with full surrender. Not the simply willing, but the actually faithful; not the waverers, but the true and abiding, are to realize the promise. In the backslider there has been no complete dedication, otherwise there would be no apostasy. I John 1: 9 emphasizes the assurance of forgiveness and acceptance of the faithful ones. Concerning the possibilities of a return to Christ on the part of a backslider, we can only assert that what to man may and often does seem impossible, is possible with God, and that his grace is boundless. Peter backslid in a most grievous way, and yet was forgiven. By a miracle of divine grace, the backslider, although beyond human hope of recall, may in God's abundant mercy find refuge and forgiveness.

Reader, Wetmore, Kan. 1. The eavesdropper on the telephone is a nuisance who ought to be suppressed. If you are sure of your facts, you have the privilege of complaining to the company, who may be able to apply a remedy. The only other way we know of is to discontinue your party wire and get a private wire, which costs a little more. 2. A person who asserts that there is no good in giving money to missionary work is either a very irreligious person or very ignorant. The slightest familiarity with missionary literature would convince him of the great need of such work, and if he believes in the Bible, he should know that it was the "Great Commission" which Jesus bequeathed to his followers, to preach the Gospel to all the world. His remarks about churches being sold for barns and dance-halls have no foundation in fact.

H. S. D., Michigan City, Ind. What is meant by "grace" in the Bible, as in the expression "My grace is sufficient for thee" (II Cor. 12: 9)?

A fair equivalent of the word "grace" is "blessing." Grace means, in the first place, the disposition which God has toward us; that is, his willingness to bless us; his love and favor. It means, also, the blessing received, the state or experience into which we are brought by God's blessing. There is always in the word "grace" the idea of something bestowed entirely without merit or payment on the part of the one who receives it. God's blessings are bestowed freely; we do not earn them; he blesses us because he loves us, because he is gracious. All he asks is that we shall be willing to receive his grace. This promise to Paul means that God will give him the necessary strength to bear the affliction, and also, as Paul implies in the remainder of the verse, that the happiness of the blessing will balance the distress of the thorn.

S. R., Wappinger's Falls, N. Y. Your editorial comment on Russel Wallace, the aged scientist, pleased me exceedingly. Although he is living yet, Wallace is dead in mind. He does not see things as they are now, as he is mentally blind. The ancients were fond of building wonderful rather than useful things. Their stupendous monuments, palaces, labyrinths, obelisks, catacombs and hanging gardens were of no worldly use to them. We surpass them in every way or in every branch of art, science and literature. As a means of travel and transportation, the ancients used that ungainly beast of burden, the camel, while we travel in cars, boats, and airships. A single locomotive, with a few dozen cars, can take hundreds of thousands of tons of freight from here to Buffalo in a day, while it would take hundreds of camels a whole year to perform such a task. It is needless to go on comparing our superiority to the people who lived thousands of years ago.

R. B., Brunswick, Me. 1. Name some of the best conductors of electricity; also some of the best non-conductors. 2. Of what are the threads which give the light in an electric bulb composed?

1. Nearly all the metals are good conductors, silver being the best and copper next. The best non-conductor is india-rubber; other substances that almost entirely prevent the flow of electricity are wax, paraffin, ebonite, mica, glass, cotton, dry paper, hemp and silk. 2. The incandescent lamp filaments were originally made by Edison from bamboo fibers. Now the filaments are made by dissolving cotton in a solution of zinc chloride and squirting it through fine nozzles into a solution of alcohol. Then the thread is passed around hot steel drums to partly dry it, after which it is put in ovens to wholly dry out. It is next cut in lengths and packed in boxes of pulverized peat and heated to a high degree to carbonize it. In the next process the filament is heated by a current in gasoline vapor until it glows white. After this the thread is cemented to platinum wires and inserted in the bulb, which

"Warmed-over" Dishes Made Tasty

Your family will never again grumble about the "warmed-over" dishes if you use just a little Liebig—pure extract of beef, for flavoring.

There's nothing more delicious in hash or stew enriched with a little Liebig, which replaces the flavor lost in double cooking. Warmed-over meats, croquettes and soups, too, are made appetizing and vastly more digestible and nourishing by adding a little Liebig.

There is true economy in Liebig—it helps make all the "left-overs" into tasty dishes which your people will eat with zest and relish. Try a jar to-day—see how good it is.

J. B. G., Wilcon, Me. Plense explain Matt. 21: 21.

This is the language of similitude and figure which Jesus frequently employed to illustrate and emphasize his teaching. A leading commentator writes of this passage: "From the nature of the case supposed—that they might wish a mountain removed and cast into the sea (a thing very far from anything which they could be thought to actually desire)—it is plain that not physical but moral obstacles to the progress of his kingdom were in the Saviour's mind." What he designed to teach was the great lesson that no obstacle should be able to stand before a firm faith in God—that it would enable us to overcome all difficulties, if we absolutely trusted in him.

A reader (William Stuart, Philadelphia) sends the following verse for use on the flyleaf of a Bible:

"'Tis not enough to read and lay aside;
'Tis not enough to know that Christ hath died;
But, as we read, mark well each sacred page,
And know that Christ's the same in every age."

Mrs. G. L. J., Elkhart, Ind. The familiar quotation you mention is from Butler's Hudibras, part II, canto I. He wrote: "Then spare the rod and spoil the child." It is based on the passage in Prov. 13: 24. Correction, however, like everything else, should be administered in moderation, and any parent or guardian who applies it in a brutal fashion, claiming to have Bible authority for such conduct, is grossly in error. There is no passage in the Bible to justify harsh and brutal treatment of children, although proper correction and reproof are necessary to check disobedience. These should be administered in kindness and not in anger. There is a wide distinction between reasonable correction, suited to tender years and immature understanding, and violent maltreatment, which is simply a way of expending wicked anger on helpless little bodies.

Give Yourself "A Square Deal"

Kellogg's is the "Square Deal" Food

This Means:

IF you could buy a case of Kellogg's Toasted Corn Flakes at a greatly reduced price per package, you might be induced to do so; but before you could eat them all, the first blush of their glorious freshness would be gone. It would be a bad bargain for you. But the grocer won't tempt you to buy more Kellogg's than you need. That is how the Kellogg "Square Deal" benefits you.

If the small corner grocer could not buy Kellogg's in small lots at the same price the big city dealer has to pay for big lots, he would have to buy big lots too, and he would have stale corn flakes to sell you. But there is no reason for his buying more Kellogg's than he can quickly sell. There is no reduction for quantity. That is how the Kellogg "Square Deal" benefits the small grocer and you.

If the big grocer could save money by buying Kellogg's by carloads instead of by the case, he, too, might be tempted to do so, and his flakes would not have the freshness they now have. But he gets no advantage by carload buying. There is no reduction for quantity. This is how the Kellogg "Square Deal" benefits the large grocer and you.

The Kellogg "Square Deal" is as hard to imitate as the Kellogg Flavor.

MILITARY RULE IN MEXICO

THE NEW ADMINISTRATION STRIVES TO CRUSH REBELLION

FTER the shock following the tragic death of Mexico's former president had subsided, the ers both of the United S es and of Mexico paid him high tribute that in spite is many mistakes he might t take a place in the history his country beside those es which all the world as- ates with its greatest steps ard progress—Hidalgo, Mo- s and Juarez. Although at the story given out by the ers of the new government not received with great ience by either the diplo- ic corps or the public in eral, it has since been so fied that it is now practi- y accepted. The Mexican ernment is undoubt- making a conscien- s attempt to place responsibility for assassinations re it properly be- s. Even those most ely connected with situation are con- ed that General Huerta's statement is acceptable. sador, Henry Lane Wilson, has made public the following statement:

"In the absence of other reliable information I disposed to accept the government's version of manner in which the ex-president and ex-vice- sident lost their lives. Certainly the violent hs of these persons were without government roval, and if the deaths were the result of a plot, as of restricted character and unknown to the ner officials of the government.

"Mexican public opinion has accepted this view he affair, and it is not at all excited. The pres- government appears to be revealing marked lence of activity, firmness, and prudence, and esions to it, as far as I have been able to ascer- , are general throughout the republic, indicating early re-establishment of peace.

"The government as constituted is very friendly he United States, and is desirous of affording ctive protection to all foreigners.

"For the present American public opinion should l with the situation calmly, and accept with at reserve the lurid and highly colored stories ch are being furnished by some few correspond- s. The great majority of the correspondents e are endeavoring to deal fairly with the sit- ion."

The new government is taking heroic steps to re the allegiance of the various revolutionary lers or possible leaders of disaffection. The patches state that some of the most important the revolutionary possibilities have been elimi- ed by declarations of loyalty from the leaders. eral Orozco, who has been leading bands of olutionary brigands in the north, has signified intention of supporting the new administration, l has asked that his forces be merged with the ular army of Mexico. General Geronimo Trevino, o was one of Madero's strongest supporters, and o, as governor of Nuevo Leon, was feared by the v administration, has pledged his loyalty. In te of these reassurances many foreigners, who t their families in Mexico City even during the e days' bombardment, have recently been so ap- hensive that there is serious consideration of ding the women and children to Vera Cruz, where y would be protected by American battleships.

The evidence that the Huerta government has been able to pacify all the warring elements in country accumulates daily. In some cases its dges of amnesty and reform have not been sweep- enough to satisfy the rebels. In others it is ieved that mere personal aggrandizement keeps rebel generals in the field. Many of the demands de by these leaders are wholly beyond the power any government to grant. The Zapatist bands e pursuing their regular course of pillage and truction, apparently little affected by the change government at the capital. Another of the most tive rebel leaders is the son of General Genevevo de la O, who is operating in the State of Puebla. Only a few days ago he was reported to have destroyed a Spanish textile factory valued at over $1,000,000.

The most recent advices are silent as to what is taking place in the north, where the friends of the dead Madero are believed to be planning a counter revolution. The government had believed that Carranza, the strongest military leader in Coahuila, had been suppressed, but it becomes evident that this is not the case, for all communication through the territory which he controls has been cut off. Up to the present time no reinforcements of the regulars have been able to get beyond Aguas Calientes. This State is said to be full of former Maderists, and to be in open rebellion against Huerta, though a federal military governor is in possession of its capital. Gen. Huerta's method of handling the situation has been made apparent by the steps he has taken in Mexico City. Concentration of a huge military force in the capital seems to be the keynote of the new government's plans. The Mexican army was practically disorganized by the rebellion, and the regiments are being reformed and entirely reorganized. The addition of the troops under General Pascual Orozco, Jr., to the remnants of the former federal regiments formed a nucleus around which the Huerta-Diaz administration is forming an army sufficiently strong to cope with any revolution which may arise. The only trouble with this plan is that the rebellious forces may gain such strength that action will be necessary before the new military formation is complete.

Along the Mexican border there was a good deal of disturbance a couple of weeks ago, but this has been quieted down, and Señor de la Barra recently stated that, though he did not desire to appear over-optimistic, he felt that the situation was considerably improved in that section, and no further fear need be felt in the border towns.

The question of the proper protection of the Texas frontier was discussed by the Senate Committee on Foreign Relations on February 26. Senators Culberson and Sheppard of Texas pointed out to the committee the need for adequate protection of the Rio Grande country against lawless bands from the Mexican side. The committee decided to send for Secretary of War Stimson, and he appeared at the afternoon session with Major General Leonard Wood. Assurances were given that the present force of seven regular regiments on the border would not be reduced, but there would be a further disposition of troops to give better protection to unguarded sections.

The concentration of troops at Galveston was continued for several days, but admittedly the purpose was to test the working of the new system of army reorganization. Major General Carter, commander of the Second Division, took the opportunity given by the assembly of a complete division of troops to let regimental and brigade commanders have practically their first opportunity to direct the movements of the large bodies of men that would be under their command in time of war.

General Huerta is taking active steps for the bringing on of a popular election, and all the political world of Mexico is turning its attention to that interesting subject. It has already been announced that General Felix Diaz will have as his opponents in his candidacy for the presidency Francisco L. de la Barra, the present minister of foreign relations; Rodolfo Reyes, the son of the late General Reyes who was killed in the first attack upon the national palace; and Dr. Francisco Vasquez Gomez. Campaigns have already been begun on behalf of all of these candidates, though the exact date of election is, as yet, undecided, and must remain so until peace is actually assured.

IN MEMORY OF MRS. SANGSTER

THE Marble Collegiate Church in New York was the scene on Sunday afternoon, February 23, of a beautiful and impressive memorial service in honor of Margaret E. Sangster, who was for many years a greatly loved contributor to the pages of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. The church was fragrant with flowers which had been sent by friends and associates of the authoress, and the service throughout was one of brightness and cheer rather than of gloom and mourning. Many selections from Mrs. Sangster's words, chiefly from her poetical works, were read by the speakers, and it seemed at times almost as if the beloved authoress were present in spirit with her never-failing cheer and inspiration.

The service was opened with an invocation by Dr. Burrell, pastor of the Marble Collegiate Church, of which Mrs. Sangster was for many years a member. The congregation joined in singing one of Mrs. Sangster's hymns, "Thine Is the Power." Dr. Burrell spoke briefly, with deep and affectionate appreciation of the friend in whose honor the service was held, and introduced as presiding officer Dr. Talcott Williams, dean of the New York University School of Journalism. Dr. Williams spoke of the strikingly large number of women who enter the journalistic field, declaring that more women are found in this profession than in any other, except that of teaching. He paid high tribute to Mrs. Sangster as an influential factor in the journalistic life and work of America during recent years.

Dr. Van Arsdale, editor of The Christian Intelligencer, spoke of Mrs. Sangster as a literary co-worker. She was since 1879 on the staff of that paper and continued her editorial relation to it even when she became editor or contributing editor on other publications.

The memorial service was held under the auspices of the Wheaton College Club and the Meridian Club. Mrs. Susan Hayes Ward, vice-president of the Wheaton College Club, spoke of Mrs. Sangster as a club woman. While not so much interested in club life as many women of the present day, she was faithful and helpful in the associations with which she had affiliated herself. Mme. Arckowska interpreted exquisitely Mrs. Sangster's song, "Heartache," and through the beautiful notes of the song she seemed to be speaking again to the hearts of those who heard it:

> It is not the things that you do, dear,
> But the things that you leave undone
> That give you a bit of a heartache,
> At the setting of the sun.

One of the most impressive addresses was that made by Mrs. William Kincaid, president of the Woman's Home Mission Union of the State of New York, who spoke of Mrs. Sangster as a neighbor. She told of the many "twilight talks" they had together when their homes were in the same locality. She read an unpublished poem which Mrs. Sangster had sent her at the time of her husband's death. It was full of the sweet spirit of faith and genuine affection which always characterized this woman, who was a true neighbor to so many American homes.

THE LATE MARGARET E. SANGSTER

Miss Elizabeth Jordan, editor of Harper's Bazar, spoke of Mrs. Sangster as an editor, and related many details of her work at Franklin Square, where she was for some years connected with the Harper publications. One incident related by Miss Jordan reveals in almost startling fashion the never-failing tenderness of this rare spirit:

"Living in the country, she made arrangements with an old cab-driver to call three days in the week, the days she went to the city, and take her to the train. One stormy day he failed to a and, having an engagement she couldn't mis walked the four miles to the station. Her were soaked, she caught cold, and was seriou for a fortnight. One day when she was reco I said to her:

"'By the way, did you ever find out wh cab-driver didn't come?'

"'Oh, yes,' she said serenely; 'H plained to me that he didn't dare t his horse out on such a wretched day.

"I gave my opinion of that cabma when I had finished she said:

"'But don't you see his point of That horse represents his bread an ter.'"

Miss Jordan said that with all the scripts Mrs. Sangster had occasion turn, not one ever carried a hea with it. She always found time to a cheering word.

"She saw every one who wanted her, receiving all callers. She was g interested in young writers. And they had no writing gift, tactfull would set them going in some other tion. Perhaps some woman who br her poor little efforts to Mrs. Sa could bake sweetmeats, though she co write. Then would Mrs. Sangster around among the club women she until she got sufficient orders for meats to give that woman employme Miss Gertrude Griffin read a n of poems from her facile pen. Arthur H. Howland, of THE CHRI HERALD, spoke of Mrs. Sangster as woman's friend," referring to the sands of women with whom she sponded, giving counsel and cheer i problems and burdens of life. Mrs. Upson Clark, president of the Wh College Club, read letters from Mills Alden, editor of Harper's Mo G. H. Sandison, editor of THE CHRI HERALD; Harriet Prescott Spofford others.

Mme. Arckowska sang Gounod's " enly Light." Mrs. May Riley S president of Sorosis, read a charmi of original verse, which, although modestly depreciated it, was worthy a even in a Sangster memorial; Mrs. James Burrell, president of the Woman's Boa Foreign Missions of the Reformed Church in ica, spoke of Mrs. Sangster as a mission wor

Almost every speaker had something to s the religious life of Mrs. Sangster. She was saint; one who had caught the spirit of love, g ness and service from the heart of Christ. the singing of "Lead, Kindly Light," Dr. Van dale pronounced the benediction and the cong tion dispersed, not soon to forget the hour sp honoring this gentle and gifted soul, Ame most loved authoress.

TOPICS OF INTEREST AT HOME AND ABROAD

—MASSACHUSETTS is considering the imposition of an annual license on cats, $2 for "Puss" and $1 for "Tom." The songlords of the State have suffered greatly from feline depredations in recent years.

—THE Post Office Appropriation Bill, carrying approximately $[illegible],000,000, an increase of nearly $3,000,000 over the House bill, was passed by the Senate on February 26. The largest single item in the bill is for the transportation of mails on mail routes, $51,500,000 being authorized for this purpose. The Senate appropriated $47,500,000 for the rural delivery service. The measure carries an increase of more than $12,000,000 over the appropriations made last year, due to the establishment of the parcel post system.

—THE Catholic Universe of Cleveland, Ohio, in its issue of February 21, 1913, makes prominent announcement of the news that "Illinois' State government is almost entirely in charge of Irish Catholics," and will so remain for the next four years. The Catholic officials include Governor Dunne, State Treasurer Ryan, State Auditor Brady, Lieutenant Governor O'Hara, Attorney General Lucey, and Speaker of the Assembly Hoo. William McKinley, the last-named being a Knight of Columbus. Certainly, the Catholic Church is in politics in Illinois, to say the least.

—CAPTAIN A. H. ROSTRON, who drove the Carpathia at full steam through a sea of broken ice to rescue the survivors of the shipwrecked Titanic, came to Washington, D. C., on Friday, February 28, to receive a gold medal of honor, voted him with the thanks of Congress. Under the escort of Senator William Alden Smith of Michigan, who conducted the investigation into the circumstances of the wreck, Captain Rostron availed himself of the privilege that goes with the thanks of Congress to visit the floor of both houses while they were in session. The medal was presented to Captain Rostron by President Taft in the White House at 2 o'clock in the afternoon. All members of the cabinet were present, together with Senator Smith and other prominent legislators. Mrs. Rostron accompanied her husband from England to be present at the ceremony.

—"MAN'S INHUMANITY TO MAN" may be expressed in various ways. The town jailer in a Long Island district, emulating the [illegible] police of other officials in dealing with prisoners, has lately been allowing his charges various privileges, one of which was the pleasure of attending any baseball game in the neighborhood. The prisoners enjoyed this liberty fully, and showed their appreciation by good conduct in the lockup. One prisoner, on a recent outing, became intoxicated, and as punishment, he was denied permission to attend the next ball game. This "terrible example," the jailer reports, is having a good effect, and may not need to be repeated.

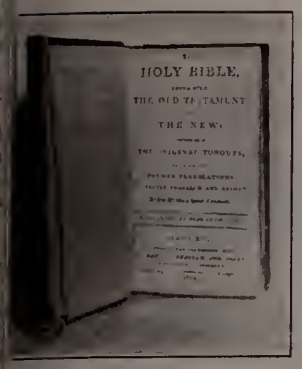
—STRANGE THINGS are happening in the Latin countries of Europe. America, a Catholic weekly published in New York, says of Rome: "The political outlook is dark; religion is to be excluded from the schools and a divorce bill is to be introduced by the government, religious congregations suppressed and ecclesiastical property 'administered.'" From Spain, the same journal has this information: "It was reported from Barcelona on February 15 that a royal decree summons ecclesiastics to serve in the army. Nothing of the like has ever occurred in Spain and the excitement is intense." It will be remembered, however, that during the last insurrection against the Portuguese republic, hundreds of priests were caught with the rebels, and many with arms in their hands were taken prisoners. The church helps to foment revolt, but its priests, though willing to risk themselves in any enterprise that may result in benefit to Rome, draw the line at being conscripted into the Spanish army, which may yet be employed against the papal interests in that country.

—IT APPEARS THAT some enterprising German capitalists with the aid of some American business men have a scheme on hand by which to finance a big line of steamships to ply through the Panama Canal from ports on the Atlantic seaboard to ports on the Pacific coast. On February 21 Mr. B. N. Baker, of Baltimore, appeared before the House Committee on Merchant Marine and gave details of an agreement between himself and the Hamburg-American Steamship Company whereby that company undertakes to finance a $15,000,000 German-American steamship line for the Panama service. The company, if need be, Mr. Baker stated, would double this amount, though at the start it would only advance $7,500,000 as its share of the capital, a like sum to be contributed by American capitalists. The projectors would be willing to abide by the Sherman law and other existing American statutes, and also to take its chances on future legislation by the American Congress. It is prop build ten 10,000-ton steamships each of sixteen knots sp the trade. These are to be constructed in America, ar the American flag and be manned by American seamen international enterprise has excited much comment on of the large sum required and the interests involved, but likely fall to the ground, as it is said great financial i are taking steps to block it.

—AN ALMOST CONTINUOUS uproar, punctuated by one encounter and several threatened clashes, marked the pas the Naval Appropriation Bill by the House of Represe with a provision for one instead of two new battleship vote by which the Naval Committee's recommendation battleships was defeated was 174 to 156 on the final r The House also struck out of the bill the authorizatio transport to cost $1,850,000 and one supply ship $2,425,000, but allowed, in addition to one battleship, torpedo boat destroyers and four new submarines. As passed the measure carries an aggregate of $138,629 This is $7,988,912 less than the aggregate recommended House Naval Committee and about $30,000,000 less th Navy Department asked for in its estimates. The net r the economy campaign in the House was therefore a re of nearly $8,000,000. The total carried by the bill for ne ship constructed is $33,241,504, instead of $41,230,416 mended by the Naval Committee. A riotous scene occurre Representative Murray of Massachusetts, standing up Speaker's rostrum, demanded recognition to make a mentary point of order against two members having th views acting as tellers on the one-battleship proposal. sentative Alexander of Missouri, presiding over the repeatedly ordered Mr. Murray back to the floor, and, fin his direction, Mr. Murray was forcibly removed from t trum by a deputy sergeant-at-arms. Mr. Murray fought this removal, and his coat was almost pulled off in taki away. Mr. Murray's colleagues gathered around him Speaker Clark took the chair and order was restored. Mr. Murray apologized to the House. Representative Ho Alabama, who sank the Merrimac in Santiago Harbor, vated the already tense feeling in the House by assaili "little navy" advocates.

TWO HISTORIC BIBLES

BY ABBY GUNN BAKER



The Fly-Leaf of the Justices' Bible

"I'D KNOW it was Inauguration times if I had no other way of telling than by the demands to see the little book," said United States Supreme Court Clerk McKenney, as he good-naturedly rang the repeater under his desk and produced a bunch of keys.

"Rice," he continued, addressing a colored man who appeared in response to his ring, "go into the Supreme Court Chamber and bring out the Justices' Bible."

It is not any wonder that those who know of it want to see the historic little volume, and when Rice returned with it in his hands, the representative of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD examined it with the greatest veneration and delight. It is a tiny little book, only five and a half inches long and three and a half inches wide. It is bound in bright red morocco leather, with the word "Bible" printed in diminutive gold letters on the back. But one does not see that red morocco cover unless he remove the little black leather slip which protects it. Long, long ago the little red Bible began to show wear, and then the black leather slip was made to protect it—so long ago in fact that fifteen of those covers, made to protect the venerated little volume, were worn out in the service. It is without doubt one of the oldest Bibles, if not the very oldest Bible, connected with the government, and is certainly the most historical. It is the book upon which, since 1800, every chief justice, with the single exception of Chief Justice Chase, and every member of the Supreme Court, has taken the oath of allegiance when accepting his appointment to our highest tribunal. More than that, every attorney who has practiced before the Supreme Court since that date, 1800, has pledged his allegiance over the little volume. All, with one exception also, and that exception was Daniel Webster. It is told even yet of the Supreme Court of that day that Mr. Webster's fame as an orator had so preceded him that on the occasion when he came to argue his first case before the court, the clerk, Mr. Caldwell, in his eagerness to hear the great speaker, forgot to administer the oath.

The little Bible is an Oxford. Tradition says that it is one of the twenty thousand which Congress imported soon after the Federal Government was established at Washington. As can be seen from the title page in our illustration it was printed in 1799, and its price cum privilegio was five shillings. It is printed in the old English style, with the long s's and the quaint spelling which are the despair of the modern reader, even were not the print so fine as to be almost prohibitive. This Bible has always been in the care of the clerk of the court, a position which has been occupied since 1800 by Elias Boudinot Caldwell, William Thomas Carroll, Daniel Wesley Middleton, and James Hall McKenney, the present incumbent.

Clerk McKenney has seen sixteen Presidents inaugurated. On thirteen of these occasions he has assisted by producing the Bibles that were used. It is his duty, when the President takes the oath of his office on Inauguration Day, on the great platform built for the ceremony at the east of the Capitol, to stand at the left of the new Executive, while the chief justice stands at the right, and they hold the Bible between them. When the President finishes the solemn words of his oath he bows his head and kisses the volume, as Mr. McKenney raises it to his lips. Standing close to him, Clerk McKenney notes the verse, or verses, touched by the President's lips. He carefully marks the place, and on the following day, or soon thereafter, he carries the Bible to the White House and presents it to the President's wife.

A day or two after President Hayes's inauguration, Mr. and Mrs. McKenney took the President's Bible to Mrs. Hayes. They found her in the Red Parlor, surrounded by a group of callers. Mrs. Hayes asked Mr. McKenney if he knew the verses the President had kissed. When he replied that he had marked them for her, she begged him to read them to the company, and he opened the volume at the 118th Psalm, and read the eleventh, twelfth, and thirteenth verses. As he slowly recited the words: "They compassed me about; yea, they compassed me about like bees; but in the name of the Lord I will destroy them," Mrs. Hayes cried out in a pained voice, "Oh, no! that verse is not right in the President's case; he would not destroy anybody even if they compassed him about like hornets!"

The Clerk of the Supreme Court, Mr. J. H. McKenney, Who Has Seen Sixteen of Our Twenty-Six Presidents Inaugurated

Clerk McKenney has purchased the Bibles for all the Presidents inaugurated since he has held his office, but two or three of them did not use the Bibles he purchased. When Grover Cleveland came to the Capitol for his first inauguration, he brought with him a little red Bible his mother had given him when he was a boy, and which he had always cherished as a keepsake. On that Bible he took the oath of office. A few days before Mr. McKinley's inauguration, a number of African Methodist bishops came into Mr. McKenney's office one morning with a tremendous package, which proved to be a large family Bible in a big plush box, and they wished to have Mr. McKinley use it. Their request was granted, and the big Bible was one of the show objects in the Red Parlor of the White House for a long time afterward. When Mr. Roosevelt was inducted into office as governor of New York some one presented him with the Bible which he used on that occasion. His name, which was written on the fly-leaf, was misspelled, but he used the same Bible at his second inauguration, and it has been one of Mrs. Roosevelt's most treasured mementoes ever since.

Mr. McKenney has kept many interesting records, and among them is a tabulation of the Bible verses which the Presidents, from Grant's inauguration to Wilson's, have kissed in taking their oath of office. They are as follows:

President Grant (second), Isa. 2: 2, 3.
President Hayes, Ps. 118: 11-13.
President Garfield, Prov. 21: 1.
President Arthur, Ps. 31: 1-3.
President Cleveland, Ps. 91: 12-16.
President McKinley, I Chron. 1: 10.
President McKinley (second), Prov. 16: 20, 21.
President Roosevelt, James 1: 22-25.
President Taft, I Kings 3: 9-11.

ANOTHER ANTARCTIC TRAGEDY

NEWS of another tragedy comes up by wireless from the wastes of snow and ice to sadden the heart of civilization afresh and make men shudder at the terrible toll scientfic research has to pay for a little knowledge wrested from the frozen plains of the Southland.

Lieutenant Ninnis, an Englishman, and Dr. Mertz, a Swiss scientist, both members of the Australian Expedition under Dr. Mawson, according to despatches just received, perished in the attempt to locate the South Magnetic Pole and map the surrounding country. The Aurora, the relief ship of the expedition, is now on the way home, and when she arrives the world will get full details of the tragedy, which, coming so soon after the announcement of the fate of Scott and his companions, causes the mention of the Antarctic to be associated with danger and death.

The Australian expedition, which was headed by Dr. Douglas Mawson, set out in the latter part of 1911 with the object of making a complete geographical and magnetic survey of the wide zone of country surrounding the magnetic center of the Southern Hemisphere. He had no ambition to reach the South Pole, nor intention of trying to do so. The party was composed of about fifty men, most of them graduates of the universities of Australia and New Zealand, in which countries the money was raised to equip the outfit. When Mawson reached Adélie Land, more commonly called Wilkes Land, after the admiral of that name who first discovered it in 1840, the men split up into two divisions, each division choosing a leader and setting out on a different route to pursue their investigations.

Dr. Mawson is not returning on the Aurora, as he was unable to reach the ship before the encroaching ice forced her to set sail without him. He will have to remain in Adélie Land for another year; six men are with him, and it is said the party has provisions and fuel enough to last until it is possible to send for them when the ice-barriers break up. The other members of the expedition are now returning to Australia. Dr. Mawson, it is believed, has already done good work in the way of taking important observations, and it is probable that his enforced stay in the Antarctic will add much to the meager store of facts now known about the magnetic pole and its surroundings.

Scott and his brave companions did not die in vain, neither did Ninnis and Mertz. Misfortune dogged their footsteps, yet they struggled on, trying to add to the sum total of human knowledge, trying to give the world information, and setting an example of manhood and courage which thrills the heart and quickens the pulse of all true admirers of heroism and bravery.

It is a remarkable illustraton of the eccentricity of fate that Lieutenant Ninnis wanted to join Captain Scott's expedition along with a comrade, Captain Oates, who perished with Scott. No room could be made for him, but Dr. Mawson gladly appointed him to the post of surveys and sledging, at which he was an expert. He belonged to the Royal Fusiliers, and was interested in exploration all his life, his father having served as surgeon under Sir George Nares on the Alert in the Arctic expedition of 1875-1876.

The other victim, Dr. Mertz, was a well-known athlete and scientist. In his native country, Switzerland, he had much experience among the Alps of crevasses and glaciers and snowslides, and was the champion ski-jumper of the world.

A late special despatch from Sidney, Australia, reads:

"Professor David declares that the message received yesterday (Tuesday) from the Antarctic, stating that two members of the Mawson expedition lost their lives, is irreconcilable at present with all previous news, since on January 25 a message announced that all were well at the main base, where Lieutenant Ninnis and Dr. Mertz were stationed. Professor David's theory is that an accident took place during the embarkation. A similar incident, with almost fatal results, took place during the embarkation of Sir Ernest Shackleton's expedition in 1909. It was probably as a result of the accident that Dr. Mawson and his party were compelled to remain at the base while the Aurora proceeded to Termination Glacier to pick up Dr. Wild's party, after which it would be too late to return to Adélie Land."

THE HEART'S BEST GIFTS

A SERMON

By

Pastor Charles Wagner*

TEXT: "Such as I have give I thee." Acts 3: 6

LET us draw some conclusions from this old story. Since the nucleus of the account is a miracle, we hear the most contradictory comments on it nowadays. A legend, say some. An actual experience, say others. How are we to decide which is right? At this distance, who is able to establish one position or the other? I am ready to agree that many of us are too credulous. Every man should set at the door of his mind a vigilant guard to exclude the entrance of every idea which is not just and reasonable. But it is right, it is just, not to set a limit to the field of possibilities. How many things declared impossible have become possible as time passed! A man has no right to form a low opinion of his own powers. There are in every one of us unknown energies, an immense capital which lies unused because we do not realize that we possess it. Whether you choose to call them miraculous or not, there are potent means of action in our reach; it is our duty to avail ourselves of them.

What Can I Do for My Neighbor?

Brought face to face with the world's miseries and infirmities, even though they may be deeply rooted, even though they may seem incurable, we have the question constantly before us: "What can we do for the afflicted ones?" Every time one man meets another, one of two questions rises in his mind. One of them is good, the other evil. If the man is bad, the question will be: "Of what use can this man be to me? How can I derive some benefit, some advantage, from crossing the path of this person, old man or child, chief or subaltern, stranger or compatriot, believer or unbeliever, infirm or healthy?"

The good question, the humane question, the question really worthy of us, is this: "What can I do for this man?" Applied more specially to suffering, this question, when put sincerely, leads the way to the discharge of duty. When I meet an unfortunate fellow man, whoever he may be, who is suffering in body or soul, the very pain I feel at seeing him suffer ought to be for me an appeal to attempt something which may relieve him. All disarrangements in human relations, all the evil which one man does another, come from the same source: from the vicious impulse to exploit one's neighbor. But all wholesome relations and all benefits come from the spirit which animates us when we ask: "What can I do for my neighbor?"

What can I do for my neighbor? This is the question I find in the ancient story for the men of to-day. We would change the whole face of the earth if, having asked ourselves this question in all simplicity, we would answer with all our hearts, as Peter answered the lame man: "Such as I have give I thee."

Peter and John had no money, and it was money the paralytic asked for. It often happens that we are asked for what we do not possess. It even happens, in everyday life, that some people seem to make a specialty of asking you for what you have not. And certain minds are so strangely constituted that they take offense when we do not give them what is not ours to give.

Be very careful not to be guilty of this injustice. It is commoner than some of us may think. To ask some one for what he cannot give; to offer him in return what he has not asked for, and to refuse what he might be able to give you; these are the sad incoherences by which we spoil each other's lives!

How often it is true in family life that we do not give to those we ought to love the little affection, the little signs of tenderness they have a right to expect from us! Be it only a smile, every one should have a supply of them; be it only a flower, there are seasons when there are bouquets in every field; be it only a slight attention, attentions do incalculable good sometimes. These are little doors which open out on the immense blue horizon of happiness. If you leave these little doors closed, those who are thirsty will continue to suffer from thirst, those who are hungry will still be hungry. There are men and women dying, in the very domain of affection, only for lack of little attentions. But there you are; you are too generous for such trifles. You offer more; you have all sorts of official attentions on your program. Your poor, neglected wife, who would be made happy by one affectionate kiss, is put off, according to your station in life, with a fine country-seat, a new carriage, or a new dress. She could get along well without all of this. But what she really wants, the only thing which is of real importance to her, and which you might give her so easily, you refuse her.

"Such as I have give I thee." It is the expression of man's good will, in its broadness, its simplicity, its sincerity. If we could make this our motto, our way would be full of light, and we would shed light into the hearts of all those who lived about us.

Take cases like those we have read about in this little story. There are sick people all about us. You cannot perform miracles, you say. Very well. Yet human good-will has done many things which approach miracles very closely. Has this good-will not given birth to that amiable and tender science which relieves and heals sickness and suffering?

The Heart of Compassion

One day when I was studying the relation between the age of miracles and the present, I happened, in the course of a promenade, on a very suggestive discovery. It was in the neighborhood of Geneva, in the very early spring. The trees were still bare of leaves and the sun pierced to the soil beneath them and warmed the budding violets and primroses. The branches were vocal with the songs of birds, songs of love and cheerfulness. A path through the grass, still brown with the memory of winter, led me to a little country cemetery. On a tomb half covered with that delicate moss which time spreads over everything, I read the name of a physician, Daviel, with this inscription: "He was the first to remove cataracts." In the midst of the spring brightness which filled my eyes wherever I turned, I felt myself invaded by a powerful and grateful emotion at the thought that I stood above the dust of a man who had given back their sight to hundreds and thousands of his fellow men. What miracle ever reached so many? And what is the first source and secret of this science of relief and cure? It is to be found in good-will and pity. If a man's heart were not gripped with compassion at the sight of misfortune, he would not seek means to combat it, he would not seek in himself the courage to attempt the impossible. To be blind, to have nothing left of two eyes which once were luminous windows open on the universe, nothing but two somber caverns where the love of lost light weeps; to have lost the power of reflecting the blue dome of heaven, the tender green of the meadows, the grace of the flowers, the snowy brightness of the mountains—what a terrible misfortune, and how the heart contracts at contemplating it! The first desire of any one who has a heart is to free the prisoner from his terrible bondage. And here is the source of so many ingenious efforts, studies, contrivances which would have remained unknown forever, and by means of which all who can be saved are saved.

Love—Our Poor Heart's Greatest Need

But when you have nothing to offer, when nothing can be done to remove the affliction? Give what you have, give true kindness, genuine love. And never conceive the idea that it is kindness to exaggerate the misfortune in the hearing of the victim, to weaken him, to pity him till he is more wretched than he was before. There are ways of interpreting a situation which increase its difficulty a thousandfold. Let us be careful never to employ them. Let us try hard to put ourselves in the place of him who suffers. Let us treat him like our own equal, and let us show our pity for him by forgetting that he is infirm. Let us forget it, though we do not allow it to leave our minds. Let us treat our unfortunate friends as if they were interested in everything which interests us. And most important of all, let us love them, truly and profoundly. What our poor hearts need most is to be loved, to know that we are not forgotten. The consciousness of being loved is the great light in the night of suffering.

The Thing We Lack Most Often

"Such as I have give I thee." When those we love suffer, let us give them what we have, let us give them all we can. If it is a crisis of suffering which will pass, let us be kinder to them through that period; let us augment our supply of love and kindness till the crisis is over. If it is a chronic malady and one which can end only with the sufferer, then we must love them still more, we must love them and be brave for them. We must take care never to show sorrow, never to weep in the corners and come about them with red eyes. We must conquer ourselves, we must use our best efforts to maintain an attitude which will hold before their eyes that all is not lost: for all is never lost. When you tell a fellow being, by word or gesture, that he is lost, you are adding a stone to the neck of a suicide. No, we are not lost, thank God! We must treat one another like forces against which no misfortune can prevail definitively.

"Such as I have give I thee." There are in the hearts of men forces which can soften any misfortune. There was never a soul which lacked the power to save and uphold other souls. But the thing we lack most often is love, kindness, clairvoyance of sympathy, tenderness, the disposition to devote ourselves to others. It is because we abandon them that sick persons so often abandon themselves. It is not that we do not love them; but there comes a time when we condemn them, when we lose our faith in God for them. We must never lose hope and faith. As long as you hope and trust for those you love, you hold a strong tower for them to take refuge in. There are men who, even though they see their brothers afflicted, beaten, dying, still love them, and hold them calmly. They love that in them which is immortal. The very expression of their faces, without their uttering a single word, may have on the suffering, on the dying, an influence which takes the gloom and bitterness from death itself.

The Part of a Friend

"Such as I have give I thee." I hope I may be permitted here to narrate a personal experience which will be at the same time a tribute to friendship and to truth; to a truth which this age needs to hear. I love this age, and in spite of its faults I admire it passionately. For that very reason I must render it the service of insisting on these truths of the soul, which it sometimes drives back into obscurity with its material realities. Fifteen or twenty years ago I went to visit a friend in the country. I found him in bed in a state of extreme exhaustion and great depression. We talked together in our usual intimate fashion; I felt my whole soul going out to the poor sufferer, and I could see that instead of weakening him, the conversation was reviving him. When I asked his advice about a little excursion I was planning to take on foot, he said to me: "Wait a minute, I will et up, and we will go a little way together." We started out, at first very lowly. I supported him and begged him every few seconds to stop and rest r turn back to the house. He would not do so. "I don't know what is happening to me," he said, "but since you have been with me I have been improving constantly. Let us go on." We went on so successfully that little by ittle we reached a farm miles away and thousands of feet higher. We drank ome milk and enjoyed it greatly. In the meantime the keenest anxiety prevailed at the house we had left. But we reached home without accident, and neither then nor later did our walk produce any evil result. What had happened? Was it a natural or supernatural occurrence, physical or psychical? Who can say with confidence? But this much is true, without any attempt at classification or explanation: The presence of one friend had on another such a healing and comforting influence that it made him capable of an effort which a little while before would have been absolutely impossible. As for me, I offered up thanks from the bottom of my heart to Him who alone has the key of mysteries, and I felt an intense and unalloyed happiness at having been his instrument on this occasion.

We must grant that some have exceptional gifts. But why should they be the only ones to say, "Such as I have give I thee"? Is not this phrase, with its profound meaning, a perfect motto and a magnificent rule of life for all degrees of human capacity?

I wish every one of us would study and practice this chapter of the science of being. And I want to name for you now a terrible enemy who ravages the domain of our power to help others and often destroys the best part of it.

You are constantly meeting people who say: "If I were rich I would build hospitals, I would organize this or that charitable or helpful enterprise; if I were rich everybody should have bread; none should ever lack shelter."

This is both good and bad. It is good to bolster up your personal pride, for it is only a transposition of the prayer of the upright Pharisee to treat the rich with contempt, giving oneself at the same time an easy assurance of generosity; but as far as serving your brother is concerned, it is absolutely bad and useless. Who will be helped by your saying, "If I were rich I would do a great deal of good"? Not a soul. Look about you, see what you are able to do, and do it. This is the reason so many people do nothing. They say: "If I had this or that, if I were young, if I were well, if I were a man instead of being only a weak woman!" Oh yes, if you had been born at the time of the Crusades, I have no doubt you would have helped win the Holy Sepulcher. And if you had been born in Shakespeare's time, it would probably have been you who would have written "Romeo and Juliet." Can you not see that such a way of talking is childish, and that the disposition that prompts it sterilizes action entirely?

"HE EMPTIED HIMSELF OF HIS GLORY"

From the original painting by Sigismund Goetze

Amplify the declaration: "If I were rich"; extend it over the totality of human life. Here is what it will give you: Men say to themselves, "If we were not so miserable, if we were not all candidates for the tomb, affected with a multitude of cares and infirmities, if we were not a troop flagellated with fatality and with woes, we might try something; but since men are what they are, is it worth while trying? What is the use?" Such thoughts lead us directly to discouragement and ruin. No, it is better to say this to your fellowmen: "I am mortal, as you are; like you I am exposed to all sorts of difficulties, pains, misery. I carry burdens just as you do, and although in a different form, sin is a sad reality in my soul as in yours. Let us then be charitable and helpful, each to the other!"

If, although life is full of evil, we were good; if, although life is short, we were thoughtful and patient; if we shed a little light along our dark pathway, my brother, the miracle Peter performed that day when he gave his hand to the paralytic and bade him walk in the name of Jesus of Nazareth, would be nothing to the miracle we might accomplish. The earth would be completely changed, men would transform their mutual relations till we of the present would not be able to recognize them. The serpents which poison our lives would be destroyed and the evil herbs would fall before the sickle.

Of all misfortunes that make men weep on this earth, the least are those which come from without, the bitterest are those whose roots plunge down into the soil of our wicked hearts.

Let us put a little more kindness into our lives. When we wake in the early morning and look out on the dim horizon, knowing neither the manner in which the universe is governed, nor the secrets of men's destinies, let us at least put clearness and order into our lives; let us put into them a smile for others. And the richness of God will shine through our poverty. A profound, an inexhaustible mine of light and power is hidden in the human soul itself; we do not know it, we do not exploit it. We die of hunger with treasures in our reach. If we were kinder the night would be less black, the sunlight would be warmer, the winters less rude, the earth less rough and rocky; we would never know famine; a multitude of miseries would disappear like nocturnal vapors when the conquering sun rises.

And this, my brothers, is how the old story told in the third chapter of Acts, and which doubtless makes some of our strong-headed moderns smile, is the bearer of lofty truths. It is new because it is so old. And this is why I have read and discussed from various points of view the little declaration which can never lose its virtue: "Such as I have give I thee." May God grant that it produce the effect it is able to produce, and help renew our languidly helpless lives with the strength of light and love.

MIDWINTER SUFFERING IN BALKANIA

DURING this week THE CHRISTIAN HERALD'S correspondents in Bulgaria and Macedonia have written us graphically of the midwinter needs of the sufferers in those mountainous countries.

Pastor Furnajieff's letter is in part as follows:

"Almost every day the postman brings letters from pastors and friends both in Macedonia and Bulgaria, asking either that we of the CHRISTIAN HERALD Relief Committee would go there to see and distribute aid, or that we should send them aid to distribute. After seeing the misery as they see it, they plead eagerly on behalf of the destitute women and children. The door bells of the pastors' homes are constantly ringing, and we are constantly hearing that most woful tale of 'No bread, no wood, no coal, no clothes, and no prospect of husband returning' to take up the support of his family.

"The recently created orphans are fast growing in numbers; innocent little children, some of whom lost their mothers before the war, and their fathers on the battlefield.

"Her royal majesty the queen has already stated her message to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD readers and friends. Now the two princesses of the Bulgarian royal family have taken up the cause of the orphans and are reinforcing the noble work of our queen. They have made and sent out an appeal to all the children of the world (for our princesses are yet among the children), asking that they help a fund, wherewith shall be founded orphanages for the bereaved children. In order to carry on the work, the princesses have opened a special orphanage office where they work all their spare time from their regular studies. Contributions have begun to come in already. Their royal highnesses have sent a special appeal to the children of the Russian Empire in which they say: 'You surely are aware of the bloody war in the Balkans. Although God gave his marvelous help to our army, its heroic endeavors were followed by enormous sacrifices. With deep sorrow we think of the poor children who have become orphans as a result of the war. Our dear parents are doing all they can for these unfortunate children, but there remains a great deal more to be done. Therefore, we appeal to your kind Russian hearts and beg of you to help in this noble work. However small your contribution may be, destined for orphanages in Bulgaria, it will be accepted with great gratitude. We, with pleasure, will send our photos and our hearty thanks to every contributor. Do help—that is for those who laid down their lives in the struggle between the Cross and the Crescent. More than ever Christ will look upon what you have done as though you have done it unto him. May he bless the contributions.'"

Pastor Paul C. Mishkoff of Sistov says in his letter:

"Yesterday I was called to visit three villages near our great city. And I saw the terrible sufferings and privations of the villagers, especially the women and children. There are thousands of families without food or clothing. The villagers are utterly destitute. I saw little children naked and sick, crying for bread. I saw women in the hands of death because they are left without bread. I saw the misery, that cannot be described. Food, clothing and blankets must be provided if we want to save them from death and sufferings. If the villagers could be supplied with flour they would be enabled to get out of this cold winter. One thousand dollars will buy flour for five hundred families in these destitute villages. They look to us for help.

"A young woman without relatives or friend was weeping yesterday, as she walked carrying one of her children about three years old on her back another about six months old on her arm, and leading a third, five years old, by the hand. She came to my house and couldn't say a word, but wept. I saw an eighty-year-old woman with two sticks and barefooted, weeping on the street, and pleading for bread and clothes.

"In three out of four places I visited I found sick children, the result of bad surroundings and lack of sufficient clothing and food. I have visited hundreds of small rooms, where I found widows and orphans—whose husbands and fathers had been killed in the war—in destitute conditions, without food and clothing. The other day I saw a young girl crying alone in a corner. I thought she might be sick, but those around told me that she had just heard of her brother's untimely end, and not having heard anything of her father since the war began she feels sure that he also must have been killed like her brother.

"The people are beginning to realize how much they have lost and how hard their lot is, because of the war. Often one sees a woman of the war. Often one sees a woman sitting down on the bare ground, despondent and sad, almost crying; and when you ask them the reason they answer: 'Oh, what shall we tell you first, when we have lost all? We had barns of corn and wheat, loads of potatoes—but now nothing!'

"Public and private charities of our country have been taxed to the utmost, and yet there are thousands of poor wretches walking the streets on these bitter zero nights, who literally have not where to lay their heads, and who have not had a good meal for days. They have no money and no place to go, and are as utterly forlorn and helpless as it is possible for human beings to be. You cannot put yourself in the place of these sufferers and enjoy your next meal unless you do something to lift the intolerable load of suffering from the Christian sisters and children in this country. It is only when one says to himself: 'If I were in their place how would I feel?' that one can begin to realize how unfortunate they are and what a strong claim they have upon those whom our heavenly Father has differently situated. God's blessing will rest on those who shall give aid."

HOME FOR THE BLIND OPENED

THERE was a remarkable gathering of prominent people on the occasion of the opening on Washington's Birthday of "The Lighthouse," a home in New York erected under the auspices of the New York Association for the Blind. President Taft rmally opened the home on this occasion, aking the dedicatory address. He has ıd a keen interest in this project from the ginning. He laid the cornerstone, was esent at the fair held in the Metropolitan pera House in its behalf, and took the time ıring the last few busy days of his term office as President to dedicate the finished ructure.

Former Ambassador Joseph H. Choate esided at the exercises; Eben P. Morford, esident of the American Workers for the lind, who, although himself without sight, a successful business man, related incients of his work in helping the blind to ves of comfort and usefulness. Mr. Wilam I. Scandlin, president of the Blind en's Improvement Club, the thrilling ory of whose life appeared in a recent isıe of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, outlined the ıture of the New York Association. resident John H. Finley of the College of ıe City of New York, who is president of ıe association, gave, in an eloquent adress, a résumé of its work. Miss Helen eller was present and made an appeal for nancial aid to establish similar "lightouses" in other cities. Dr. William H. laxwell, superintendent of New York ity's public schools, told how he had been d, through listening to an address by Miss Vinifred Holt, to make recommendations hich led to the establishment of special lasses in which blind pupils studied on qual terms with the sighted, thus increasıg their efficiency and self-confidence. He tated that some of them had even outtripped their more fortunate fellow stuents.

The Lighthouse, located at 111 East ifty-ninth Street, is six stories in height nd includes schools of instruction for the ightless and an exchange where their ares may be ordered or sold. It will serve s a social and educational headquarters for he blind people of the metropolis, and will bring help and delight to many lives that have little enough of sunshine.

When President Taft arrived he was escorted to the platform by a squad of blind Boy Scouts. A chorus composed of blind men and women sang a hymn to Liberty, which had been written by Arthur Farwell. Mr. Choate, in his remarks, paid high tribute to former presidents of the association, Dr. Lyman Abbott and the late Richard Watson Gilder. Speaking of the new president, he said: "Then, too, there is Dr. John Finley, who found that the care of the three or four thousand boys he has under his wing did not take enough of his attention to keep him from doing good in other directions." He gave highest praise to Miss Holt. "But there is one name greater than all of these in connection with this institution," he said, "and that is the name of Miss Winifred Holt. Her name brings to mind what one woman can do, for it is due to her that this building is now complete."

President Taft at the Opening of the Settlement House for the Blind on February 22

Mr. Taft said he often wondered when he read the Declaration of Independence what a blind person thought of the clause which says that all men are created free and equal. He continued:

"This isn't true in the sense in which it is generally understood. We are not all equal in opportunity, nor in friends, nor in environment. What that clause meant was that under the new form of government, which the signers of the Declaration believed to be the best yet devised, every effort would be put forth to bring about a condition where everybody should be free and equal. And we find that the best way to help the blind is to help them to learn to help themselves, to give aid to the faculties they have to make up for the faculty they have lost."

The chair which President Taft occupied on this occasion was specially made for him by three blind carpenters. It was later presented to Miss Keller. After the formal exercises and addresses, a miracle-play, composed by Miss Carolyn Wells and Miss Holt, was produced by blind children, after which the Boy Scouts present gave an exhibition drill. Among the distinguished guests were Rev. Charles Slattery, Rabbi H. G. Enelow, Mgr. Lavelle, and General Charles F. Rowe

WHILE TWO KNIGHTS TALKED

BY ARTHUR K. AKERS

YESTERDAY they drove the last spike in the new double-track through the Crazy River hill-country, and now things will be different on the Mountain Division. Bancroft, the hief, says that despatching trains won't be a man's ob any more. It will be too easy—more like chaperoning a string of seminary girls in a town vhere there isn't a boy's college. It's the end of the ld days when the South End unloaded fruit and egetable trains on the mountains until the engines vent north pulling every last orange and tomato hat the Winchester Hill would stand for and the outhbound Mardi Gras specials and the export reights fought their way through by the grace of God and the help of despatchers that could carry a lozen orders in their heads at once. Now there will never be any meeting orders except on crossovers, which "the Fathead" says will have its advantages. And those who have been at the Junction headquarters long enough know that he refers to something that is sacred yet to the stove committee at the roundhouse. He himself claims that he has never understood it. Bancroft said at the time that he had no opinion, but in private he is reported to share the belief of his wife, which is also the unvoiced conviction of the entire division.

It came about on a night in June when the Fathead had been holding down a despatcher's chair on the third trick for two months—not the old Fathead of borrow-pit fame, with the battered hat and the wistful eyes, but a renovation that had seized on the chance that Bancroft gave him when he came out of the hospital, wrestled anew with the Morse code, mastered the rules by main strength and awkwardness, and clawed and dug and hung on world without end until the chief simply hadn't another excuse left when Petey Ferguson departed for the East and left room for a new third-trick man. The Fathead was that man. Tourist travel was heavy on this night, people hurrying to the mountains and seashore to get away from the heat. In addition, there was a Knight Templars conclave on in Philadelphia and the northbound through passengers were coming down out of the Gap to the south in five and six sections. Big solid Pullman trains they were, with two engines apiece whirling them up the Clinch Valley, slamming them around the curves and over the crest of the Divide with a rush and a swift mighty drumming of the exhausts ahead, flags flying and streamers waving from vestibules and rear ends. Inside the cars the Knights and their ladies were enjoying themselves and the cool breaths from the hills that crept in through the screened windows as they climbed higher and higher above the two-thousand-foot level.

All through the day the gay procession had rolled past the Junction; and when, at midnight, Vinson turned the sheet over to the Fathead and went home there were three more of the extra trains yet to come. Down below, Bancroft had just put his wife on Number Four, southbound, and he came up in the office a minute to see how they were running before he too went home. There he found the Fathead—big, slow, faithful old Fathead—humped over the sheet under the ghastly glare from the mercury tubes, figuring out his trains and meeting-points. It was the biggest night's work he had ever tackled and he was new to the job, but that didn't disturb him any. It took so long for him to get excited that there was never time.

"Look after Number Four," Bancroft jokingly called back to him from the doorway as he was leaving. "My wife's on her this trip."

"Sure!" responded the despatcher, and went on figuring.

Outside the moon flooded the big yard with its light, dimmed the red and green eyes of the target lamps, and turned the steam from the engines into floating silver. The window curtains were raised in many a berth that night while the occupants watched the glory of the moonlight on the mountains in preference to sleep. Up in the despatcher's office, alone except for one operator, the Fathead sat in his shirt-sleeves and toiled over his sheet, planning, weighing, altering, striving, until the perspiration stood out on his face in beads, to keep the road from being hopelessly blocked with the tangle of trains that were being poured in on the Mountain Division from both ends. One after another the trains shot down from the Gap, clattered through the yard, and departed puffing heavily on the grade beyond.

Through two crowded hours the tension never slackened and the despatcher bent unceasingly over sheet and key. It was two-thirty when Franklin called for orders for fifth Fifty-three, the last of the Templar sections, against Number Four. And with his brain filled with the snarl of details that accompanied almost infinite train movements, the Fathead gave them orders which called for the two trains to pass each other on the single track between Brandon and Knob Rocks, and no one noticed the error. Some minutes later, after the conductor and engineer of fifth Fifty-three had signed the order and been given "complete," the Franklin operator flinched under the sudden fierceness of the call that the despatcher's office sent rattling over the wire. "Fr! Fr! Fr! 9! Di!" snapped the sounder in urgent staccato.

"I, Fr," he responded.

"Don't let fifth Fifty-three get—" came the words.

"She's gone!" interrupted the operator.

"Catch quick! I—" But the rest of it went to the empty air, for in two bounds the Franklin man was out of the door, sprinting and shouting hopelessly after the disappearing tail lights of the Templars' train. And, while he ran, the wire began sputtering with frantic calls for Richwood, to the north of Brandon.

"Hold 4," ordered the Fathead when Richwood's acknowledgment came, though he knew that he was hoping against hope.

"Gone several minutes," came the languid reply.

To the despatcher, the office appeared whirling dizzily before his eyes and he could not hear the instruments for the words of his chief that seemed now to be singing in his ears, "Look after Number Four. My wife's on her."

Brandon and Knob Rocks lay between Franklin and Richwood, but neither was open at night, and calling them were only a waste of time. Once or twice the Fathead endeavored to raise them, and then held his head in his hands while he tried to think. The train wire chattered on with other demands for his attention and, as in the midst of an evil dream, he answered them, wondering in a dazed way that a wheel could turn when doom hung so surely somewhere above one of the "S" curves between Brandon and Knob Rocks. All unknowing, the operator across the table from him made some trivial remark that jarred through the

The Great Sacrifice

THERE are many ways of celebrating Good Friday. Even those Christians who do not give much attention to special church feasts or fasts feel that on this day there should be a peculiar thoughtfulness and earnestness in the demeanor of all who revere the memory of Christ. Even business is largely suspended on that day. Christian nations unite with the churches in commemorating the event which has made Christian civilization possible.

It is good to have our minds brought again to recognize the supreme importance in Christian faith of the death of Christ on the cross. We are in constant danger of drifting away from this real foundation of the Christian religion. St. Paul declared that he was determined to know nothing "save Jesus Christ, and him crucified." We are in danger of forgetting what the Gospel really means. The Gospel is not primarily a message urging people to do right; even Confucianism is such a message as that. The Gospel is not an exhortation to people to lead unselfish lives; systems of ethics other than Christian have brought this plea to the hearts of men. The Gospel is not even primarily the proclamation of a divine Father and an urging, like the urging of the prophets, to serve and worship him. The Gospel is the announcement that God's Son has died to atone for the sins of the world; the announcement that by faith in that death we may be freed from the penalty of past sins and delivered completely from the power of sin in the present; it is the glad offer that every one who accepts it may live in grateful and affectionate companionship with the Christ of Calvary; it is the urging of a new motive of life, the motive of pleasing Christ and serving others in his name, because he died for us.

We shall soon be singing and telling the glad Easter message. Christ is risen from the dead and we shall live with him. But the message of Good Friday is a message of death. The world's best Friend is dead. The Lamb of God, who came to take away the sin of the world, has been sacrificed, and on this day we think with solemn awe of the blood that he shed. We think of him despised, rejected, scorned, mocked, scourged and crucified. We remember that "he came unto his own, and his own received him not." We think earnestly and seriously of our sins on this day. We remember that "he tasted death for every man." We hear the words of Jehovah, through the lips of the prophet: "Though your sins be as scarlet, they shall be as white as snow; though they be red like crimson, they shall be as wool." We recollect that there has been "a fountain opened in the house of David for sin and for uncleanness." We remember that "with his stripes we are healed."

The story of Calvary brings to our mind again the things that Christ and his apostles said about self-sacrifice. There are burdens for us to bear, crosses for us to accept, hard tasks for us to do in the name of the Christ who died for us. The disciples rejoiced "that they were counted worthy to suffer shame in his name." Paul gloried in tribulation and was glad to think of himself as always bearing about in his body "the dying of the Lord Jesus."

But even at Good Friday there is a touch of glory, a note of jubilation. Since God did so much for us he will do everything. "He that spared not his own Son but delivered him up for us all, how shall he not with him also freely give us all things!" The power of sin is broken; the promise of all good is sealed. Nothing can ever undo the fact that Christ died for us; we need never more be slaves of sin or fear

> In the cross of Christ I glory,
> Towering o'er the wrecks of time.
> All the light of sacred story
> Gathers round its head sublime.

The Drift in Mexico

PRESIDENT TAFT, as the improving situation in Mexico seems to show, took sane and conservative ground in opposing, or at least delaying, intervention. Although the trouble is still far from being ended, prospects are brighter for the restoration of order and the protection of foreigners in the disturbed republic. Calm reflection brings the conviction that an armed occupation of Mexico would have been a huge and costly undertaking—an enterprise involving the use of even more men and money than intervention in Cuba cost this nation. English newspapers are pointing out that Britain's Boer invasion cost $1,000,000,000, and that to deal with Mexico would be a bigger and costlier problem. Had it become absolutely necessary, such considerations would have had little weight, where the lives of Americans and foreigners were in jeopardy; but the improved situation gives encouragement to hope that the period of actual danger is past, although the complete tranquilization of the country may be a task of many months' duration. Mexican politics, being of a volcanic nature, may hold new surprises, however. Nobody can predict what the near future might develop should a serious attempt be made to turn over the government to the iron rule of Porfirio Diaz.

Sunshine and the "Blues"

THEY are the antipodes of feeling, the opposite poles of sensation, mental and physical. Some folks have the "blues" at regular intervals, just as we know certain ministers who have their seemingly inevitable "blue Monday" after a strenuous Sunday. Making due allowance for occasional physical depression, still, in a great majority of cases, there is no reasonable excuse for the "blues." We would urge everybody to get the sunshine habit, and to cultivate it assiduously. It will yield a steady reliable crop the year round, as a sunshiny spirit is a true perennial. If you try with God's help to live a clean, pure, upright, helpful life; if you pay your honest debts and owe no man anything save loving kindness; if, realizing all of your faults and shortcomings, you ask God to forgive you for his dear Son's sake who knew and sympathized with human frailty and waywardness; if, having settled that matter and taken God at his word, you take off your coat and do something for somebody else who is in sad need of your help and cheer, you will soon find the change you seek. For you will sail out of the blues and into the clear sunshine which cheers the path of all who love God and their fellow man. You will then be in tune with the divine harmonies; life and work will take on a new meaning. You will sleep sounder and better than you've done in years. Don't worry about yourself, but having once put your trust in God, hold on to it hard and fast. Our Father loves to be trusted and those who trust most are the happiest. Remember that introspection and the reiterated personal appeal in one's own behalf is an elementary stage of Christian experience. You must get away fro that and go boldly forward. God does not tak back his word. If Jesus' disciples had been co tinually concerned about and praying for their ow forgiveness, they would have had no time for wor in spreading the Gospel.

The President and His Advisers

DURING the last few weeks, President Wilso has received a great deal of advice, much of i sincere and well meant, and possibly quite as muc of it valueless. If he has been able to profit b even a fraction of this volume of counsel, he shoul prove a very wise and popular executive. When h took up the duties of his high office, he found a inheritance of big issues, foreign and domestic sufficient to tax the capacity of the most experience statesman. But it is not only the Mexican em broglio with its dangerous possibilities, the tariff the "big interests," labor and similar problems tha demand his most serious consideration. There ar other questions, less seen on the surface but non the less important, that must claim the attention o the new administration. It is therefore of the first consequence that in choosing his official advisers, the President should have made no serious mistake. A round peg in a square hole is a bad fit for a cabinet office, or indeed for any other post where the incumbent has intimate relations with the administration, and can influence its policies.

When the announcement was made public recently of the appointment of a Roman Catholic as private secretary to the President, the Catholic journals at once broke out in a chorus of jubilation. Expressing the general sentiment, the Catholic Universe of Cleveland, Ohio, February 7, 1913, declared the secretaryship > one of the most important posts in the country; . . . the highest position a Catholic has ever held in an administrative way in the entire history of the United States. It ranks second only to the appointments of Roger B. Taney and Edward D. White as chief justices of the Supreme Court of the United States. . . . If there is any especial significance to us as Catholics, it is that the new secretary is a practical Catholic.

Other Catholic publications followed in a similar strain of extravagant exultation. Of course, the essential point of distinction between such comment as this, and what would have been expressed had any other than a Catholic been chosen, is obvious: had a Methodist, Baptist, Lutheran, Presbyterian or any save a Romanist been appointed, the incident would have possessed no political significance whatsoever. Why, then, should the Roman Catholic journals persist in trumpeting the news to the country as a political triumph, equal if not superior to the capture of a cabinet post? If such, indeed, be their interpretation of it, then it will be well for the American people generally to keep informed of the course of events at the nation's capital. Even before the appointment was made, the Ministerial Association of Huntington, W. Va., on December 12, 1912, petitioned the President-elect > to make such change in the personnel of the official secretaryship of the cabinet when he comes into office as will remove all grounds for suspicion of the secret revelation of the plans and policies of his administration to the representatives of this foreign hierarchy, and thus eliminate a condition which, in our judgment, endangers the success of any administration.

Similar resolutions, after the event, are reported as having been passed by a Ministerial Association in Waukegan, Ill. Both are representative interdenominational organizations, and their example will probably be followed by others.

Now, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD is not in the business of giving advice to Presidents and cabinets. Such a presumptuous proceeding is usually futile and quite superfluous. We prefer to think that the Executive and those around him in his immediate official circle are sane, sensible, broad-minded men of the type that the people approve and trust. They are quite capable of interpreting the signs of the times and they doubtless realize that the Roman Catholic question is one which may at any time become acute in our politics. They must know how the political activities of the Catholic Church embarrassed the last two administrations and contributed to the downfall of Mr. Wilson's predecessor. The whole country will hope that the new administration may keep clear of such entanglements. How the President and his cabinet may regard the declaration that the choice of a Catholic for private secretary is the capture of a strategical position we cannot even imagine.

President Begins Indian Memorial

PRESIDENT TAFT on Washington's Birthday broke ground for the national American Indian Memorial which is to crown Fort Wadsworth on Staten Island, to look out on Europe and to give the first greeting to the ships entering New York Bay. Accompanying the President were members of his own and his official family and commanding officers of the army and navy. The best feature of the occasion was the presence and participation of Indian chiefs and representatives in full costume of furs and skins and eagle feathers, and beads and bones and red, yellow, and blue paint on their faces, from the Sioux, Crow, Chippewa, Cheyenne, Flathead, Gros Ventres, Arickaree, and Mandan nations. Dr. Joseph R. Dixon, secretary of the Memorial Association, spoke of the struggle of humanity to gather up the ashes of yesterday and put them in the urn of today, and of the fact that the proposed monument was the only one ever dedicated to a single race. President Taft said among other things: "It is appropriate that the race which controlled North America for centuries before the white man came should have a memorial in this the great sea entrance to this continent, one recalling his noble qualities, of which he has many, and perpetuating the memory of the succession from the red to the white race in the ownership and control of the Western Hemisphere. We are indebted to Mr. Rodman Wanamaker, through whose generosity this beautiful memorial is to be erected." The President then dug out a liberal shovelful of dirt and laid it aside as the start of the enterprise. Then some more of the soil was cut out with a stone hatchet by a red man. Dr. G. F. Kunz presented the bronze tablet marking the site. The orator of the day was Chief Red Hawk, a Sioux, who took the place of Hollow Horn Bear, who could not be present. His speech had to be translated, and was in part as follows: "I am glad to meet you on this occasion. I am an American Indian. When the white man first came over here and discovered this country we were here already. I believe we were created to live in this country. My children and my grandchildren are being taught to follow the white man's way, and I am glad. We Indians as yet are not able to manufacture even the poorest kind of calico. But we have been taught in our Indian way to love one another as brothers, and I think that you have been taught to love each other too. Therefore, let us join hands in brotherhood and so you will help get us out of the rut of the past." At the close of Red Hawk's speech, which was loudly applauded, thirty Indian chiefs together hauled up the Stars and Stripes to the top of the pole and the united bands played "The Star-Spangled Banner." It is none too soon for our country to make atonement for the wrong treatment of and crimes committed against the red man. The gigantic bronze figure crowning the pedestal will mark the appreciation of the admirable qualities of the Indian and also the beautiful magnanimity and loyalty of the red man. With one hand, out of which the buried hatchet has fallen, inviting the East to the Empire of the West, and with the other hand holding the pipe of peace, the statue will be one of the most significant peace monuments of the world, echoing the song of the angels:

On earth peace, good will toward men. (Luke 2: 14.)

House by Parcel Post

THE whole house did not go by parcel post to the Clay Products Exposition held in the Chicago Coliseum closing March 8, but each brick out of which the building was made was sent from the various brick manufactories of the country through the parcel post to Chicago, the bricks numbering in all 25,000. The feat was originated to test the practical merits of the parcel post system. A record was kept of every brick, of the time it left the yard, and the time it reached its destination. The brickmaking industry is thus referred to very early in the history of the race:

And they said one to another, Go to, let us make brick, and burn them thoroughly. And they had brick for stone, and slime had they for mortar. (Gen. 11: 3.)

Captain Scott's Widow Honored

IT HAS just been officially announced that King George has granted to Mrs. R. F. Scott the same rank, style and precedence as if her husband had been nominated a Knight Commander of the Bath, as he would have been had he survived. As a knight's widow Mrs. Scott will henceforth be known as Lady Scott. Besides this honor bestowed the British Government has just notified the Lord Mayor of London that it intends to provide for the support of all relatives dependent on Captain Scott and his four companions, who perished in returning from the South Pole, so as to insure their being in as good a pecuniary position as they would have been had the disaster not taken place. The total subscriptions to the various funds opened in their behalf have now reached a splendid figure. It is computed that, as Captain Scott's pay, according to his rank, was $3,000, and that in addition he would receive, when in command of a first-class battleship, an extra sum of $1,640 yearly, Mrs. Scott will receive $4,640 annually. No title could have added any luster to the character or fame of Captain Scott had he lived, and no honor that has been bestowed upon his widow is more than just. The prompt provision for the support of the families of Captain Scott and of those who perished with him is in answer to the hero's dying request, one of the most patriotic and pathetic appeals ever made in the world's history, which plea emphasizes and sanctifies the great truth so often forgotten: that it is a man's religious duty to provide for the temporal support of his family.

But if any provide not for his own, and specially for those of his own house, he hath denied the faith, and is worse than an infidel. (1 Tim 5: 8.)

Benefactor of Dumb Animals

ADOLPH MELZER, of Evansville, Ind., announced the other day that four States—New York, Illinois, Mississippi and Indiana—had accepted his gift of $1,000 each, to be held in trust for 250 years and three months and compounded semi-annually at 4 per cent., for the relief of dumb animals. At the end of the trust period each bequest will amount to $20,155,964.13, and the entire sum is to be used by the governors of the States for dumb animals. Missouri rejected the offer for fear that no bank could be found that would agree to take charge of the fund under the conditions. Five other States—California, Colorado, Kentucky, Massachusetts and Minnesota—have not yet acknowledged the offer. Mr. Melzer made a similar proposition to the city of Evansville, which was accepted. Last Thanksgiving Day this friend of dumb animals gave a dinner to several hundred underfed horses at his stables, and gave a dinner on the same day to the drivers of these horses. This man has a large heart and a wise head to sow a thousand dollars and get twenty millions from it as a harvest. Two hundred and fifty years is a long time to wait, but it will pass, and there will be people and a good civilization, and helpless animals to care for then. His benefaction of some two hundred million or more dollars will make a millennium for the dumb animals. The wheel by that time may have pretty well banished the horse from the streets of our cities, but in other realms he is still supreme, and despite all the motors his race is likely to be more numerous then than now. This gift illustrates the principle contained in these words:

A righteous man regardeth the life of his beast. (Prov. 12: 10.)

Saves Drowning Son

IN a torrent of ice cakes below Wright's Falls, at Marlboro, N. Y., over which they had fallen more than sixty feet, Bernard Heberich and his son Barney, three years old, were saved from death by a narrow margin the other day. Heberich was skating on a lake, drawing his boy on a sled. Barney was laughing when his father stubbed his toe and fell. The father's hold on the sled rope loosened and when he got on his feet he saw sled and child sliding toward the brink of the falls. The sled slipped off the ice at the brink. It was seized by the falling water. The father jumped over the edge of the precipice and the fall of the father and child into the gorge was almost simultaneous. Barney dropped into a pool and was thrown on a shelf of rock, where he stopped. His woolen cap had slipped over his face and saved him from being cut badly. Heberich reached the boy and found him conscious. He dragged the child to safety. Finding that his leg was crushed at the knee he shouted for help. A woman passing near heard the cries and sounded the alarm, and several came to rescue the two. The father was taken to the hospital, where it was said he would recover, and the boy was soon back to his toys at home. How stronger than life is the love of a parent for a child! It is one of the pictures of paradise, one of the flowers of heaven given to bless the earth. Most fathers would have done just what the man did. Such soul-possessing love of a father for the life of a son is seen in the story of the patriarch.

And Israel said unto Joseph, Now let me die, since I have seen thy face, because thou art yet alive. (Gen. 46: 30.)

Spiders Help Build Canal

AMIDST the vast enginery, the large number of men and the fabulous wealth employed in the construction of the Panama Canal, one of the smallest of God's creatures is contributing to the work. Official notice that six large spiders were working for the Panama Canal was given out the other day when Colonel Goethals arranged for a man to take care of them in the instrument room at the Gorgona shops. From the cocoons the instrument makers will take threads for use in all the engineers' transits on the work, these threads taking the place of platinum. What a relation there is between the minute and the magnificent, the silken web spun by the insect and one of the mightiest pieces of engineering on the earth! What a care over the least and greatest portions of his creation has the Almighty, who feeds the spider and teaches it how to spin its thread, who holds a sea in either hand and gives his children the ingenuity to cut a channel in the earth between them and make them one! The wise man refers to this type of industry by the spider in the words:

The spider taketh hold with her hands, and is in kings' palaces. (Prov. 30: 28.)

THE EMPTY TOMB*

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON BY DR. AND MRS. WILBUR F. CRAFTS

WHEN Jesus was being laid in the tomb the women followed after and beheld the sepulcher and how the body was laid, and they returned and prepared spices and ointments with which to anoint the body of Christ (Luke 23: 55, 56). "And very early in the morning the first day of the week they came unto the sepulcher at the rising of the sun. And they said among themselves, Who shall roll us away the stone from the door of the sepulcher?" (Mark 16: 2, 3). "And they found the stone rolled away . . . And they entered in, and found not the body of the Lord Jesus" (Luke 24: 2, 3). "Two men stood by them in shining garments; . . . they said unto them, Why seek ye the living among the dead? He is not here, but is risen" (Luke 24: 4-6). "Come, see the place where the Lord lay. And go quickly and tell his disciples that he is risen from the dead. . . . They departed quickly from the sepulcher with fear and great joy" (Matt. 28: 6-8). But already two of the disciples were on their way to the tomb. "So they ran together; and the other disciple [John] did outrun Peter and came first to the sepulcher" (John 20: 4). They ran because they had been told by Mary Magdalene, who had come to the sepulcher before the other women, that she had found it empty and that some one had taken away the body of Jesus (John 20: 1, 2). John, reaching the tomb before Peter, "stooping down and looking in, saw the linen clothes lying, yet went he not in. Then cometh Simon Peter, following him, and went into the sepulcher, and seeth the linen clothes lie" (John 20: 5, 6). "Then went in also that other disciple, which came first to the sepulcher, and he saw and believed" (John 20: 8). "Then the disciples went away again unto their own home. But Mary stood without at the sepulcher weeping, and as she wept, she stooped down, and looked into the sepulcher, and seeth two angels. And they say unto her, Woman, why weepest thou? She saith unto them, Because they have taken away my Lord, and I know not where they have laid him. And when she had thus said, she turned herself back, and saw Jesus standing, and he knew not that it was Jesus. Jesus said unto her, Woman, why weepest thou? Whom seekest thou? She, supposing him to be the gardener, saith unto him, Sir, if thou have borne him hence, tell me where thou hast laid him, and I will take him away. Jesus saith unto her, Mary. She turned herself, and saith unto him, Rabboni, which is to say, Master" (John 20: 10-16).

But Jesus did not stay in the garden; he went out towards Galilee, and there met the woman on their way to tell his disciples that he was risen from the dead. "Jesus met them, saying, All hail. And they came, and held him by the feet, and worshiped him. Then said Jesus unto them, Be not afraid; go tell my brethren that they go into Galilee, and there they shall see me" (Matt. 28: 9, 10).

NOTE.—The foregoing account of the resurrection of Christ is taken from all four of the Gospels in the order of events in order to make it more complete than if read alone in Mark 16: 1-11, the passage assigned for our lesson study to-day.

The women went to find a filled tomb, filled with the dead body of their Christ, but they found it empty! Peter and John went to find an empty tomb, and they found it empty indeed! "Oh, you visited Palestine to find your Christ, but you did not find him, you found only an empty tomb!" This was the stricture made by a man who was always harping upon materializing the truth, as he expressed it, to a lady who has just returned from Palestine, her soul aglow with her experience there. "Yes," she replied, "I did find the tomb empty, just as I expected I should. I visited it on Easter morning all alone, before it was quite light, the tomb in the garden, not the garish place in the Church of the Holy Sepulcher. It was sweet and quiet, and little wild flowers were blooming about it. I entered the tomb. It seemed too sacred for me to touch. I stood there and thanked God that it was empty, for had my Christ lain there he would have been a false Christ, and there could be no hope in a resurrection for me." "Did you not visit the Holy Sepulcher in the historic old church?" persisted the objector. "Yes," the lady answered, "but it seemed to me a house of war rather than a house of peace, because for many centuries it has been a bone of contention between different sects. The Crimean War was brought on by a quarrel about who should have the privilege of putting a patch on the leaking roof." "Did you see the sepulcher itself?" demanded the questioner. "No, I went in only as far as the door of the 'Angels' Chapel'; it is the vestibule leading to the sepulcher, and is said to contain the stone that was rolled away." And the lady continued, "There I could see the tomb beyond—a sarcophagus about five feet long and two feet high and three feet wide, on which the Russian pilgrims (who had been walking for five months to be in Jerusalem at Easter time) were laying pieces of white cloth with pictures of the crucifixion on them, afterwards to be used as their own windingsheets." "Did you have no misgivings that you might be mistaken about the location of the tomb when you remembered that you were alone at the so-called Garden Tomb, but found yourself in a throng at the Church of the Holy Sepulcher?" continued the questioner. "Oh, no," the lady replied, "for throngs went also to the Garden Tomb; it was just my blessed opportunity to be there alone." "On what do you base your belief that the 'Garden Tomb' was the actual tomb of Christ?" "I rely upon the investigations made by such scholars and scientists as General Gordon, Dr. Selah Merrill, Bishop John H. Vincent and others. And, too, the Archbishop of Canterbury and five other bishops, as representatives of an English association, purchased the garden and the sepulcher at a large price, believing that it was indeed the tomb of Christ." "Still, it is an empty tomb," persisted the questioner. "Yes, its emptiness is its blessedness." And thus ended the interview.

The flowers which have come forth in the newness of life on all sides help to proclaim the truth, "Now hath Christ risen from the dead, the firstfruits of them that are asleep," for since he has risen, we know that we shall rise also. And the whole world is beautiful to help on the gladness of our decision to love and serve him forever.

"SO THEY RAN BOTH TOGETHER: AND THE OTHER DISCIPLE DID OUTRUN PETER, AND CAME FIRST TO THE SEPULCHER"

From the painting by Eugène Burnand

The Easter praises may falter,
And die with the Easter Day;
The flowers that brighten the alta
In sweetness may fade away;
But after the silence and fading
There lingers untold and unpricec
Above all changing, all shading,
The love of the living Christ.

AN EASTER STORY FOR THE CHILDREN

Little Dick was a lame boy, who could not go to school or play with other children. He used to sit by the window and watch them go by and they used to bring him apples and cakes. But several days passed and Dick was not at the window. Our little friend ventured to call at the door and ask if Dick was sick. "Yes, very sick," answered his mother. One day Dick woke up from sleep, as he was lying sick in bed, and he said, "Oh, mother, I have had such a beautiful dream. I thought I went down to the river and I saw a lot of little children in a boat, and they said to me, 'Hop in, and we will take you across the river.' And I said, 'No, I can't hop, for I am a lame boy,' and they got out of the boat and lifted me in, and soon we were on the other side. They told me I could pick all of the flowers I wanted, and the little birds came and lighted on my hands, and sang sweet songs to me. 'Where are we?' I asked, and the children said, 'This is heaven, and now we will take you to see Jesus.' And, mama, I could walk as well as any of them. I wasn't lame any more. And Jesus put his arms around me and told me I was always to live with him. But I said, 'Let me go back in the boat and get my mama.' And Jesus said, 'Not just now, but you may go for her some time.' And oh, mama, I was so happy." What could the mother say? She knew that Jesus was calling her little boy to come, and not many days after he did go to the heavenly land.

One day after it was all over the mother called the little school children who had known Dick to come in, and she told them about his dream. They all thought they would not be afraid to sleep and awaken in the land of Dick's dream. And the mother grew more tender and loving every day, thinking of the time when Jesus would send for her.

OUR SUNDAY SCHOOL SUPERINTENDENTS' ROUND TABLE

"BETTER THAN ringing a bell to call a Sunday school to order is the playing of a prelude, or the quiet playing of the opening hymn several times until absolute quiet reigns."—H. Ellis Lininger, Cowles, Neb.

Here is another reply to the same question: "In our little rural Sunday school at Tallmadge, Mich., we are fortunate in having as one of our workers a fine organist. When she takes her place at the instrument, it is a signal for classes to form. Then we listen to a beautiful voluntary, which is both worshipful and instructive. For instance, "The Heavens are Telling" would go with our recent lesson on the Creation."—Mrs. Melvin Smith.

—IN REPLY TO THE question "What is the worst fault in a Sunday school?" comes this answer: "It is teaching from quarterlies instead of the Bible. The impression is often thus left that the lesson is not in the Scripture, but in the writings of the compilers of the Quarterly."—H. Ellis Lininger.

We would say that scholars taught out of the Quarterly or Lesson Leaves, without a Bible in the hand of the teacher and in their own hands, will certainly be lacking in love and reverence of the Bible. And, too, they will fail to acquire an easy handling of the Bible, which comes with familiarity in finding the different books of the Bible, and in turning its pages. Every scholar should have his own Bible, and bring it to the class every Sunday. He should be marked for this in the teacher's record. The Bibles furnished by the school, and deposited in piles in each class, cannot have the same interest that the personal Bibles will have. If scholars are not able to buy their Bibles, and the school has not sufficient funds for purchasing them, undoubtedly the American Bible Society would furnish them if asked to do so. Let a "Bible in the hand of every scholar" crusade be started. It will help in this matter if the teacher has a specially beautiful Bible to teach from. The Red Letter Bible is particularly attractive, because the teacher can show the scholars the words spoken by the Lord Jesus Christ. The teacher of a certain little girl always read in the class a Bible bound in scarlet leather. That little girl, now grown to womanhood, has a loving memory of her "teacher's red Bible." No other Bible has ever seemed quite so beautiful as that. So, teachers, do not make the mistake of thinking that it makes no difference whether you use a Bible in your class or not, or what kind of a Bible you use.—M. E. Morgan, Chevy Chase, Md.

All superintendents and teachers are invited to send inquiries and suggestions to the conductor of this department, Wilbur F. Crafts, 206 Pennsylvania Avenue, S. E., Washington, D. C.

spell that was on him, and he could have screamed aloud at it. But he set his jaw until the cheek muscles stood out in tiny knots, and did not betray himself. Again he tried to plan some way of catching either train, but his brain failed him, and he could only think of Terreil, once a despatcher there, who was now afraid of the dark, and startled piteously at every unusual sound; he had given a lap order one night too. And there was Anglin. In spite of himself, his gaze shifted upward to the hill across the yard, where the moonlight was white on headstone and monument. Anglin had once made a mistake also, and later they found him out under the coal chutes—quite dead, with the revolver still in his hand. But the minutes were slipping past, and he was doing nothing. He reached for the telephone to notify the wrecking-boss to gather his crew. The final arrangements made, he would try once more to decide whether he should be as Terrell or Anglin by the dawn.

On the observation platform of the fifth Fifty-three two Sir Knights, together for the first time since the capture of Santiago, sat until far beyond the first wee hours of the morning watching the rails unroll behind the train, while their talk ranged over the wide earth. From business deals in Chile it wandered on through the Boer War, touched on Manchuria, skipped over thousands of miles to camp days at Chickamauga, and dwelt on a certain night after San Juan. "Remember Tom Morris?" asked one of the voices in the gloom.

"That fellow in the Seventy-first? Engaged to the little girl at Sweetwater? Yes; why?"

"Oh, I don't know; the thing came to me, that's all. Maybe it was the moonlight a while back that reminded me of the night after we drove the Spaniards out of the rifle pits on San Juan. Tom was there then. I was just thinking how superstitious he was and how it probably was the cause of his getting home to that girl alive. He was sleeping in one of the pits that night and said that he kept being bothered with a dream that something was about to fall on him and crush him. He'd wake up and fight it off, and then go back to sleep only to dream it all over again. Along near two or three o'clock in the morning he got tired of the performance, as well as worried about it; got to wondering out there in the dark, as a fellow will sometimes, if there wasn't some meaning connected with it. Finally he crawled a pretty good distance back in the long grass and finished out the night without any more trouble. Shortly after daylight the Spanish dropped a shell into that pit and tore it up generally. Since then I've wondered some myself about such things. I don't know—I suppose it was just foolishness, though."

Only the steady rhythmic click of the wheels on the rail-joints and the labored cough of the exhausts far ahead disturbed the silence that followed. The other man laughed lightly. "Coincidence, just coincidence," he said. He stood up and stretched himself lazily. "Let's go in," he added. "I want to get a bit of beauty sleep this side of Washington."

"Where are we?" responded the other.

"H-mm, let's see. The last town was Knob Rocks. That's somewhere below Damascus Junction. We're coming to another now."

He turned and peered out to catch sight of the station's nameboard, fastened to the end of the depot where the dim light from an oil lamp fell on it. "Brand—something—Brandwood or Brandon—I couldn't make it out. Let's go in."

As he held the door open there

STRENGTH

Without Overloading The Stomach.

The business man, especially, needs food in the morning that will not overload the stomach, but give mental vigor for the day.

Much depends on the start a man gets each day, as to how he may expect to accomplish the work on hand.

He can't be alert, with a heavy, fried-meat-and-potatoes breakfast requiring a lot of vital energy in digesting it.

A Calif. business man tried to find some food combination that would not overload the stomach in the morning, but that would produce energy.

He writes:

"For years I was unable to find a breakfast food that had nutrition enough to sustain a business man without overloading his stomach, causing indigestion and kindred ailments.

"Being a very busy and also a very nervous man, I decided to give up breakfast altogether. But luckily I was induced to try Grape-Nuts.

"Since that morning I have been a new man; can work without tiring, my head is clear and my nerves strong and quiet.

"I find four teaspoonfuls of Grape-Nuts with one of sugar and a small quantity of cold milk, is delicious as the cereal part of the morning meal, and invigorates me for the day's business." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich. Read the little book, "The Road to Wellville," in pkgs.

"There's a Reason."

Ever read the above letter? A new one appears from time to time. They are genuine, true, and full of human interest.

DAILY MEDITATION
FOR EVERY DAY IN THE YEAR
BY REV. J. H. JOWETT, D. D.

SUNDAY, March 16. James 2: 20-26. We cannot separate flesh and blood, and keep either alive. Each is necessary to the existence of the other. And we cannot separate faith and works without destroying the spiritual vitality of both. One will remain a cold profession, the other will remain a dead machine. What is the worth of a man's faith in his wife if it does not express itself in reverence, in kindness, in gracious and ample devotion? And what is the worth of a man's works toward his wife if they are inspired by no faith, by no genuine and ardent trust? Even so in our relationships to God, when we divorce faith and works we isolate them in coldness and death.

And, therefore, God cannot welcome a faith which is not attended by the witness of works, nor can he welcome works which do not bear the seal of faith. But the two together are an offering which "makes glad the heart of God." Trust inspiring devotion, and devotion inspired by truth—these are what beautify the relations of man with man, and they also beautify the relations of man with God.

MONDAY, March 17. Mark 16: 1-11. "Very early in the morning." That was the dawn of a new day for the race! It was the coming of marvelous light. "Life and immortality were brought to light." The long night was over, despair was broken, the Morning Star heralded the perfect day! "The people that sat in darkness have seen a great light."

And it was the coming of a marvelous life. The realm of the dead thrilled with a great awakening. Those who were "dead in trespasses and sins" felt the goings of a renewing breath, as of the air that stirs with the dawn. And that breath of the morning is in the old world to-day. It is breathing abroad on its glorious reviving mission, and everywhere men and women are becoming "alive unto God."

And that dawn is also the coming of a marvelous song and liberty. In the morning light, when everything is awaking, the birds begin to sing! And in the resurrection of the soul we have the bird-music. "My joy shall be in you, and your joy shall be full." "Rejoice, and again I say, Rejoice!"

TUESDAY, March 18. Isaiah 53: 3-12. "The Lord hath made the iniquity of us all to meet on him." So does the margin render this great passage. The Lord Jesus as the point of convergence for the sins of the race! There was grace and energy enough in his sacrifice to cope with the poison and deadliness of its guilt. He loved us even more than we had loved our sin. His love went deeper than our sin. He took the burden of sin upon him, and in his own great travail he set his people free.

But a veil is drawn between us and his sorrows. Perhaps his sorrows are among the "many things" he has to say unto us, but we cannot "bear them now." Perhaps when our intimacy is firmer, and we are able to share deeper secrets, he may tell us more of the awful happenings in Gethsemane and on the Cross. Perhaps these may be secrets to be unveiled when we have perfect sight, and when the chords of our souls are perfectly attuned to sing "the song of Moses and the Lamb."

Meanwhile we know enough to recognize that our redemption is not cheap. Let us not treat it cheaply, with any heedlessness or indifference. "Ye were bought with a price." "Ye are the Lord's."

WEDNESDAY, March 19. Matthew 16: 21-28. Satan sought to tempt the Master through the lips of a disciple. He used the accents of love to lure him from the solemn way of his sacrifice. "Be it far from thee, Lord: this shall not be unto thee!" . . . "Get thee behind me, Satan!" Thus does Satan use a sacred relation for the conveyance of a deadly temptation. It is like using a sacramental cup for the conveyance of poison. It is like sending an infernal machine in the covers of the Bible. Satan had used the Lord's enemies for his undoing: now he seeks to use His friends.

But the Lord was numb to his appeals and enticements. "He must go unto Jerusalem." "He set his face steadfastly to go to Jerusalem." He strode on toward the cross and death, for our life and glory, and nothing could turn him aside. "Get thee behind me, Satan."

Our temptations also sometimes come to us in sacred guise. They wear the garb of friendship. They speak in tones of affectionate remonstrance. They would lead us from the way of sacrifice. "This shall never be unto thee!" May it be our wisdom to recognize the enemy in the accents of the friend, and to steadily march on in our appointed way.

THURSDAY, March 20. Matthew 27: 15-25. "Now Barabbas was a robber." And the multitude preferred him to Jesus. But let us save our fiery indignation. Wherein are we better than they? Or in what are we superior to Judas? A thousand times we have preferred the devil's friendship to the Lord's! We have often asked less than Judas asked for his betrayal. We have sold the Lord for an unclean jest! We have sold him for an hour's applause! We have sold him for ignoble ease! We have said, "Let him be crucified!" And we have tripped away with the enemy of our souls.

So let us not deceive ourselves by professions of indignation. To criticize another is no proof of our own virtue. But we do sometimes act as though to be censorious is to be pious. "Wherein thou judgest another thou condemnest thyself." Let us rather pray that the good Lord will give us light and sight that we may have true discernment of "things that differ": and that he will give us inclination and courage that we may "abhor that which is evil and cleave to that which is good."

Let me remember that though the Lord is no longer here in the body I can "crucify him afresh and put him to open shame."

FRIDAY, March 21. Mark 15: 25-38. "Himself he cannot save!" Well, we know he never did. He was giving himself away for others. He was forever sharing his fulness with other people's emptiness. Everybody found their missing piece in him. "Virtue" was going out of him continually! If any trembling soul drew near, with aching want, the blood of his

WE LIKE especially to quote the gray-haired saints who send in their testimonies of answered prayer. The voices of young and old join in the expression of gratitude and praise, but there is peculiar blessing in the sober words of those who have tested God's promises through many years. "I want to thank and glorify God's holy name through my blessed Saviour," writes A. K. S., from Rockport, Mo., "for more answered prayers than I can tell: health, the salvation of loved ones, for his Word, and for sweet communion with him. I am in my eightieth year, and find there is no sweeter atmosphere to live in than to know that God loves me."

Here are a number of home stories that reveal God's presence in the affairs of life and his willingness to help those who trust him. Mrs. C. A. P., of Red Hook, N. Y., writes: "I want to acknowledge God's goodness in answering my prayer by restoring my dear little boy to health. I believe God hears and answers prayer." B. E. B. writes, from Clinton, Iowa: "God answered my prayers in sparing my life, and in several business transactions." Mrs. A. M. M., of Stoddard, Wis., writes: "Twice have I prayed to the Master to spare the life of two dear little children if it was his will. Praise his name, my loved ones were restored to health. Our Father doeth all things well." A grateful mother, Mrs. S., writes from Philadelphia: "I wish to add my testimony to the fact that God hears and answers prayer. He has answered mine many times, and again in answer to prayer he has restored my son to health." S. S., of St. Vincent, Calif., writes: "I wish to thank God for restoring to health a sister who was very sick."

"Many times when the way seemed dark and troubles hard to bear," writes Mrs. E. H., from Catskill, N. Y., "I have got on my knees and prayed for strength to bear and to be guided to do that which was right and for the best. My prayers are always answered, and the way seems light. I am thankful to him, as the things he does always seem for the best. If every one would only have more faith in prayer how much brighter this world would be! 'What a Friend we have in Jesus!'" Mrs. M. M. T., of Round Knob, Ill., writes: "I wish to acknowledge God's goodness in answering my prayers. Have in all times found that his grace was sufficient for me."

K. M. B. writes, from Saratoga Springs, N. Y.: "I have been an invalid for four years and now I am almost well again. God has been so good to me. He has answered my prayer for health and the prayers of all my friends for me. My heart is filled to overflowing." "The Answered Prayer column has been a great comfort to me," writes Z. T. A., of Reading, Pa. "The dear Lord has just answered our prayer for help in time of trouble." A Reader, from Frederick County, Md., writes: "I wish to acknowledge God's answers to prayer. The reason we do not get more is that we do not ask enough. God wants us to ask large things of him."

Acknowledgment of answers to prayer have also been received from:

DAILY MEDITATION

strength flowed out to the infirmity. And now upon the Cross, in the awful consummation of his mission, bearing the burden of the world's sin, he did not save himself. "I lay down my life for the sheep." And so is it gloriously true, "Himself he cannot save."

Charles Kingsley used to make a quite noticeable pause before he mentioned the Saviour's name. He would not jumble it up with common words. He gave it a certain "apartness": he took the shoes from off his feet, and so preserved a tender and delicate reverence.

And surely it is well to pause before we walk through the Garden of Gethsemane, and up the hill to the Cross. If we move with trampling feet it will be very common ground. We shall be like a company of hurrying tourists "doing" Jerusalem! Let us be much on our knees when we turn to the things of these awful and mysterious days. Let us pause, and pray, and praise!

SATURDAY, March 22. Mark 15: 42-47. Joseph of Arimathea expressed his love in a very tender respect unto the dead. Perhaps behind the reverent act there was a spirit akin to Nicodemus, tremblingly groping its way by night into the kingdom of God. Perhaps there was a more intimate communion which in these latter days had blossomed into actual discipleship. Joseph "went in boldly unto Pilate." Is not that the firm courage of affection? There is nothing so daring as love! Love is always ready to take its life in its hands! And Joseph dared everything when he revealed his friendship for him who had just been put to death as a common malefactor.

"And he brought fine linen, and took him down, and wrapped him in the linen." And is not all this the exquisite reverence which is also born of affection? How holy is the care which love bestows even on the remains of the dead! The casket is not despised even when the jewel is lost! The cage is handled with care even when the bird is flown! Joseph was the Master's friend when "all was over."

It is comforting to know that our Lord had these tender, human offices in the season of death. Joseph of Arimathea has a shining place among those who "ministered unto the Lord."

These Daily Meditations will appear in each issue through 1913.

THE VOICE OF THE NATION ON ROME

Blushing for Protestants

WHILE reading in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD of December 11, on page 1252, "Molding the American Mind," I blushed and felt ashamed on account of such superficial, weak-kneed Protestants, who so give themselves away that the whirlwind of an empty Roman show can sweep them off their feet. Do they know and read their Bibles? If they search God's Holy Scriptures, do they ponder Luke 17: 20? Do they find anything in favor of Rome in Acts 10: 26; I Peter 5: 1 and similar passages? What a shame for Americans who are doing such homage to cardinals and other so-called dignitaries of the Roman See! If Christ and the apostle Peter should now appear on earth, what would be their verdict?

The writer of the above lines has been a Roman Catholic and has studied that weird system, and therefore he feels indignant that such abominable idolatry is applauded in a free country with an open Bible. Permit me to quote from a book by the Rev. Prebendary Jackson, Curiosities of the Pulpit, the following:

"Whiston relates that an Italian friar, famous for his learning and eloquence, was commanded to preach before the Pope at the year of jubilee. In order that his discourse might be pungent and applicable to his distinguished audience, he repaired to Rome a good while beforehand that he might study the fashions and manners of the conclave, and possibly expose their libertinism and vice. The effect of his coming to the so-called capital of Western Christendom was precisely the same as that which led Martin Luther to denounce the court of the Vatican. When the day on which he was to preach arrived, he ascended the pulpit, and after praying with much fervor, he looked around for some time in silence, and then cried out three times, with a loud and sorrowful voice, 'Saint Peter was a fool! Saint Peter was a fool! Saint Peter was a fool!' Then without adding a word more, he quickly came down from his elevation and left the church. Being summoned before the Pope and asked why he had behaved so strangely, he said with deep modesty, but terrible force: 'Surely, Holy Father, if cardinals may go to heaven abounding in wealth, honor and preferment, living at ease, if not impurely, seldom, if ever, preaching or administering Christ's holy sacraments, then, surely, Saint Peter was a fool, who took such a hard and troublesome method of arriving thither, fasting often, traveling always, always praying, and always preaching.'"

Gaylord, Kan. German Minister.

Rome's Desperation

THE Roman Catholic Church in our country as a political organization is making itself exceedingly offensive by its officiousness in political affairs, and by its relentless vigilance and scramble for offices in the gift of the nation. The Catholic Church as a political organization would, if it could, banish every Bible from our public schools and eliminate everything from the text-books of our schools that gives the facts of history referring to the bloody record of its own history. Yes, she needs to whitewash herself and purge herself from the awful guilt of having shed innocent Protestant blood to enhance her interests during the past. One need but recall the awful slaughter of Protestant lives on St. Bartholomew's Day, in Paris and Orleans, when multiplied thousands of Protestants were slain until the blood flowed in the streets of the city.

Yes, by all means this grasping, political organization wants such ugly and bloody facts expunged from the pages of history. Let the facts stand where they belong; let this organization face its own record; let their children and Protestant children read it. It is time that there should be a nation-wide and concerted action taken by Protestant America against this officious and united political organization. Our public men should take the lead, the religious press should follow, and the Protestant secular press should show a bold front against this un-American organization. . . . No other church in America is so insolently aggressive, denouncing our public school system and our right to rule ourselves and run our national government. No other church in our nation attempts any such thing. Why an organization imported from Europe to America should do so is evident. It has lost its power, measurably at least, in Europe, and now it attempts supremacy on the soil of Protestant America and seeks to gain the position to have the Pope of Rome, not a citizen of America, a foreigner, control this nation.—Evangelical Messenger.

A Prediction Fulfilled

I HAVE been a subscriber for (I think) twenty-five years, and it has always been a most welcome visitor; indeed, when the question of renewal comes up each year, we all agree, "Let all others go, but keep THE CHRISTIAN HERALD." Forty years ago my dear old grandmother (who was a pastor's wife) used to say to me, "You will doubtless live to see the time when Christians will wake up to the fact that they have a most dangerous enemy in Catholic Rome." These words come back to me as I have been reading the last few numbers. May the blessing of God rest upon you in this work, and may you always have the presence of the Holy Spirit enabling you to speak the truth with boldness.

None of our CHRISTIAN HERALDS are ever destroyed, but are passed on to those who we thought would read and appreciate them.

Romanizing the Republic

I WISH to thank you for the attitude of your paper on the Roman menace, and the enlightening articles along that line which have appeared from time to time in your columns. Romanism is undoubtedly the greatest danger that threatens our land, and unless the people are aroused to the imminent peril of the Papal conquest of America, we will soon be wholly under the domination of the foreign ecclesiastic whose seat is on the Tiber. Rome already controls the secular press, makes politicians cringe and fawn for favors, is largely the balance of power in our elections, is censoring the schoolbooks and public libraries, is plundering the public funds for sectarian schools, uses the government schools to propagate its immoral and blasphemous doctrines, is clamoring for a division of the school fund, denies religious liberty to the Protestant teachers in the Philippines, is fast Romanizing the public schools, the civil service, the army and navy, flaunts the Papal colors above the Stars and Stripes, and openly boasts that the swords of the fourth degree men of the Knights of Columbus "are prepared to cut a path for the Pope to the White House."

We are beginning to realize the truth of the prediction uttered by General Lafayette, the friend and comrade of Washington: "It is my opinion that if the liberties of this country—the United States of America—are destroyed, it will be by the subtlety of the Roman Catholic Jesuit priests, for they are the most crafty, dangerous enemies to civil and religious liberty. They have instigated most of the wars of Europe."

The Catholic Church in Politics

I HAVE been deeply interested in the articles regarding the Roman Catholic Church and its aims, in trying to control this country through politics. How can they expect to succeed, unless they raise a better class of citizens than their teachings are doing? Take the convicted dynamiters, beginning with the McNamaras, and with rare exceptions, they are the products of the Roman Catholic Church.

When the Catholics of Boston tried to have the Ninth Regiment of Volunteers under arms to escort Cardinal O'Connell through the streets when he returned from Rome, they quickly dropped the matter when some of the Boston ministers protested against the arrogance of such action.

A LITTLE CHAT ABOUT IDEALS

BY MARGARET E. SANGSTER, JR.

SO THE Prince set Cinderella upon his horse and took her way to his fairy kingdom. And when they arrived he put a crown of gold upon her head, and led her to a silver throne. And so they were married and lived happily ever after!"

The child of seven shut the green and gold book softly, almost reverently, and as the gilt-edged pages fell silently together she saw pictures before her half-shut eyes: the sweet, demure little maiden in the peasant's hut, the radiant lady in the ball-room, and the gracious princess clad in ermine and jewels. And the child sighed.

"My!" she whispered to herself, "if I were only the princess." And she began to dream again, only this time she herself was the heroine.

"Let me see," she murmured—for she had a little habit of thinking aloud—"I'll have black, black curls; and violet eyes; and an alabaster brow." (This description, of course, did not tally with the chubby baby face and straight little braids and round eyes which she really possessed). "And the prince will be tall and dark, with a curly mustache and big brown eyes, and peaches-and-cream looking cheeks. And when we get married we will sit on lovely thrones with cushions, and look at each other, and eat ice cream all day long. Won't it be lovely!"

The child put the book carefully back on the shelf and went to the nearest mirror. Back at her looked the solemn eyes; unwinking, grave. And then she turned away and went to play with her dolls. For deep-rooted in her heart was the fearful thought that never, never would she look like a princess. And then, how could the prince—the tall, dark, gallant prince, who waited somewhere for her to grow up—marry her?

Here let me confess it: I was that little girl, and the silken-clad prince was my first ideal! I dreamed of him by night and talked to him by day, and played with his imaginary image that I saw at dusk in the firelight. And when I was hurt or offended, I would sit in a dark corner with tears trickling down the sides of my very small nose and think of the time when I would ride away with him on his prancing charger, much to the discomfort of my unromantic family. But one day I awoke to the fact that I had grown tired of him; that the idea of a princess's life on a shining throne seemed rather dull. And though I cried and worried over him, he never came back again with just the same charm. For he had served his purpose and lasted quite a few years.

Then, one summer, a new vision dawned upon my small and rather empty horizon. He was dark and slender like the prince. But, oh, with a difference, and he was alive! I will never forget the first day that I saw him. I was standing on the porch in a stiffly starched white dress, and my hair was tied back in two tight knots (so tight that my eyebrows must have had a slightly Oriental look), and caught up with enormous blue bows. The new "ideal" came up the path between two rows of stubby trees and my eyes grew round with excitement. But he only glanced nonchalantly in my direction and said in a drawling, obviously affected tone: "Hello, kid!"

I grew scarlet up to my tight hair and thrust my finger into my mouth, and ran to my mother; for I was only ten.

I cannot remember ever speaking to him; but I sat and looked at him whenever he was busy, though he never noticed me except to pull my hair, and make me blush. And when he went away I was lonely and missed his step on the stair, and his drawling voice in the halls, and his teasing. Several years ago I saw him again, but he seemed, somehow, very different, very dull and sordid. Not that he had changed; but my ideal had grown larger.

When I was about fifteen, I had vague thoughts of wearing long dresses, and putting my hair up. I began to study queer subjects and go to football games. Stories by writers with marvelous imagination took the place of my fairy books. And with these changes, another ideal became enthroned in my heart. He was not patterned after any particular type; he was a composite of the 'varsity football player with the characteristics of a fashionable clothing-store advertisement added. I seemed to see him—when I shut my eyes—dressed in a uniform, on a highly-polished floor, in a dress suit, clothed in football garments, and also attired in cap and gown with his diploma in his hand; but his face was always the same, and no difference of expression ever showed in his wonderful eyes. However, I liked him, and when he began to fade away from my mind I was truly sorry.

Now, I have a new ideal. I do not know what he looks like or what kind of clothes he wears. He is neither a prince nor a football hero. But he likes the things I like, he measures up rigidly to the mental yardstick, and he looks straight into your face with clear eyes when he talks to you. I may never meet him, but he will always be enthroned somewhere in a little unforgetting corner of my mind.

Girls, always have your ideal! Never feel that you could care for a man whom you do not respect. Build up a character that is real to you; a man who measures up at least fairly to your standard in mental, moral, and spiritual things.

There is a little fable that is in a way symbolical. A young Greek sculptor once made a beautiful figure of marble. He carved it and worked over it, and under his hands it grew into a maiden of marvelous beauty. As she grew more charming day by day, he grew to love her very dearly, cold stone though she was.

At last the statue was finished. The sculptor adored; then, despairing, he went to the temple and prayed that the faith in his artistic creation might be justified. Sadly, disconsolately, he returned to his lonely studio. But as he glanced in at the door he saw a wonderful sight. A red beam from the setting sun fell across the face of the statue, making it look very beautiful, like the face of a young girl gloriously alive. Hoping, yet fearing, he stepped into the room and touched the hand, and lo! it was soft and warm to the touch, and the lips smiled down at him as the figure stepped from her pedestal.

Though merely a fable, it teaches us a lesson: Carve your ideal in good material; put the best work of the heart and mind and soul into it, and some day your labor will be rewarded and you will discover that you have builded well; that you worked in marble and not in common clay.

A WONDERFUL DISCOVERY CLAIMED

ON FEBRUARY 26 there arrived in New York City the much-heralded Berlin physician. Friedrich Franz Friedmann, carrying with him the serum which he claims is a cure for tuberculosis. During the last few weeks Dr. Friedmann's cure has been attracting a great deal of attention, and his name has appeared in the daily papers both with the highest commendation and the severest condemnation.

Mr. Charles E. Finlay, who offered $1,000,000 for the discovery of a tuberculosis cure, was one of those who met Dr. Friedmann at the dock. It developed in the course of a conversation which was held with the newspaper men a few hours later that Dr. Friedmann had refused to accept Mr. Finlay's offer and was financing his own trip to this country. It had been stated a number of times that Dr. Friedmann was about to attempt to commercialize his discovery and have it marketed as a patent preparation. This statement he indignantly denied and placed the correspondence from which the erroneous conclusion was drawn at the disposal of the newspapers.

Dr. Milton H. Foster, of the United States Marine Hospital Service, bore to Dr. Friedmann the request of the government that a quantity of the tuberculosis bacilli be turned over to the government to test the efficiency of the so-called cure. To this proposition Dr. Friedmann readily agreed. When asked to define his serum he made the following statement:

"It is an innocuous, non-virulent, living tuberculosis bacillus derived from a turtle. The original turtle from which the germs were taken was found about nine years ago in the land of Italy, suffering with spontaneous tuberculosis. I discovered shortly afterward that the turtle bacillus is never virulent."

When his attention was called to the criticisms of his brother German physicians as well as those of this country, he said:

"My treatment is original, and that is what the German physicians were unable to appreciate. Their method is to use a dead bacteriological extract like the tuberculin of Dr. Koch or a serum such as the antitoxin of Von Behring, or a chemical compound like Ehrlich's 606."

The New York Times, commenting editorially upon the doctor's arrival and his claims, said:

"The hope that Dr. Friedrich F. Friedmann's treatment of tuberculosis is efficacious or curative lies in his expressed willingness to have it thoroughly tested by the officials of the Public Health and Marine Hospital Service at Washington. If the cultures of tubercle bacilli found in the turtle will really make innocuous or destroy the poisonous bacilli of human tuberculosis, the medical officers of the government will soon know it, and they will acclaim Dr. Friedmann the greatest physician since Jenner. If they find the treatment worthless, this finding, too, will be speedily and mercifully published.

"Meanwhile patients and their friends will do wisely to continue without abatement the courses of treatment now administered by their doctors."

Regarding Advertising

ADVERTISING has changed greatly since the first issue of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD was printed. Through the persistent efforts of men in the advertising profession, the greater part of present-day advertising has become news. No responsible editor of a newspaper deliberately plans to print inaccurate news, and no sensible merchant attempts to deceive the people whom he wants to interest in his business. Whenever any of our subscribers is defrauded by an advertiser in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD we will make good the claim, provided that the subscriber, who must be of record, has mentioned THE CHRISTIAN HERALD in writing to the advertiser, and provided the claim is made to us within two months of the date of the appearance of the advertisement. Reader, Baraboo, Wis. The passage in John 20: 21-23 is one that is frequently cited by Catholics in support of the claim of their church of the power to forgive sins. But it has no relation to the Roman Catholic Church, which did not exist until long after apostolic times. Further, the best commentators hold that "in any literal or authoritative sense, or as a personal act," this power of forgiveness of sins was never exercised by any one of the apostles, and plainly was never understood by them as a power which they possessed or which had been conveyed to them. All they were authorized to do, or ever did, was in a ministerial or declarative sense to interpret the offer of divine clemency to repentant sinners. No Catholic can point to a single text of Scripture to prove that there is any other mediator than Jesus Christ, or a single text to prove that priests can personally forgive sins.

E. G., Gilman, Ill. Please explain the visit of the three men to Abraham (Gen. 18). Was one of them actually the Lord? If so, how can this be reconciled with the statement: "No man hath seen God at any time." (John 1: 18.)

This incident is recognized as one of the "theophanies" of the Old Testament; that is, a real appearance of God to man. It is believed that these appearances were of Christ, the Son of God, rather than God the Father. The New Testament teaches that Christ existed eternally with the Father, and it is not inconceivable that he would at times take the appearance of humanity when he wished especially to make himself known to men. This explanation reconciles all these occurrences with the statement of John that no one has seen God; that is, God the Father. Christ is the personal manifestation of God to man.

Reader, Critz, Va. How can we grow in grace?

For the word "grace," see answer to H. S. D. in last week's issue. To grow in grace means to advance and develop in spiritual experience and power. The Christian grows in grace in the first place by growing in faith. The more we believe, the more completely we entrust our souls and all the details of our lives to God, the more we are blessed. We grow in grace by our work for God. Religious work develops spiritual muscle just as physical work develops physical muscle. The more we do the more we can do. Prayer, study of the Bible, fellowship with spiritually-minded people, attendance at divine worship and prayer services, taking part in these services will help us to grow in grace. We should remember, however, that all grace is bestowed by God himself; as we meet the conditions and enlarge our capacity he gives us more grace, just as he gives us more physical and mental strength when we meet the conditions for physical and mental growth.

Mrs. J. B. W., Montpelier, Ont. Please explain the doctrine of the Trinity. If the Father and Son are one, how could the Son, in the form of man, pray to the Father?

No one should feel discouraged if the doctrine of the Trinity seems difficult, because, as must be remembered, the facts about God are so much bigger than the brain of man that we cannot be expected, in our present human state, to comprehend them. Dr. Denney says that the Trinity is not so much a doctrine as it is an experience. It is the result of the efforts Christians have made to express their experience. When the voice that Paul heard at Damascus declared: "I am Jesus, whom thou persecutest," Paul knew that he had met deity. Professor Herrmann, of Marburg, states that in the minds of the apostles "all difference between Jesus and God himself vanished." Jesus said to Philip: "I and my Father are one." The orthodox faith is that there are three persons in the Godhead. Christians feel that God is their Father, that Christ is their divine Saviour, that the Holy Spirit is their Comforter, Sanctifier, and Strengthener. The Father is a person; the Son is a person; the Holy Spirit is a person. Yet the links that bind these personalities together are so strong that they cannot be dissolved; the three personalities make a unit—which we call God. Thus Christ, as the Son, prayed to his Father, yet, referring to the fact of their indissoluble union, could say: "I and my Father are one."

S. M., De Soto, Wis. Please explain (1) Matt. 5: 19; (2) Matt. 10: 28; (3) Matt. 22: 9, 10, 11, and (4) Matt. 19: 17.

1. Under the Jewish law, it was taught that the commandments must be kept as a whole and that any infraction of a single commandment was a breaking of the "wholeness" of the law (see passage in verse 19). The rendering might with equal accuracy be made to read "whosoever shall annul (or make invalid) one of these least commandments." This was clearly a reference to the teachings of the Pharisees, who, by their doctrinal system of interpretation, giving undue prominence to ceremony and neglecting the spirit of the law, annulled and enervated the obligation under the law. Those who thus dishonored the law, even if by any means they were admitted to the kingdom,

Leave it to the judgment of your guest—to your own sense of taste—and prove how big a difference there is between

Heinz Baked Beans

—which are oven-baked—and the ordinary canned beans which are merely boiled or steamed.

Truly, there's no comparison. The reason why Heinz Baked Beans are such prime favorites among the

57 Varieties

—why they are the choice in millions of homes today—is because Heinz Baked Beans are the very choicest selected beans, baked in the old-fashioned way till they're so tender and flavory that the palate can't resist them. They've far more nutriment, too. And Heinz Tomato Sauce, known the world over, adds a zest beyond description.

The United States Government forbids the use of the word "Baked" on the tins of beans that are not baked. Heinz Baked Beans are baked and labeled "Baked."

There are four kinds of Heinz Baked Beans:

Heinz Baked Beans with Pork and Tomato Sauce.

Heinz Baked Pork and Beans without Tomato Sauce—(Boston Style).

Heinz Baked Beans in Tomato Sauce without Pork (Vegetarian).

Heinz Baked Red Kidney Beans.

Others of the 57 Varieties are:

Tomato Ketchup, India Relish, Euchred Pickle, Chili Sauce, Mince Meat, Peanut Butter, Grape Fruit Marmalade.

OUR MAIL-BAG

would not receive the same honor and recognition as those who faithfully kept it in spirit and lived it in their lives. The whole passage was a comparison of the legal righteousness of the Scribes and Pharisees, which was outward and formal, with that inward, vital, spiritual righteousness and obedience which God desired. Our Lord spoke of the system the Pharisees represented, rather than of individuals. (See Rom. 2: 28, 29; Phil. 3: 3.) 2. His followers were not to fear enemies and persecutors, who might have power over the body, but Satan and his lures to sin, since these would destroy the soul. The passage also discloses that the punishment that awaits the sinner will have elements of suffering adapted to the material as well as the spiritual part of his nature. 3. This passage (v. 11) refers to the ancient custom in the East of presenting festival garments to the guests. (See Gen. 45: 22; II Kings 5: 22.) It is obvious that those who were taken in from the highways indiscriminately could have no wedding garments save such as they would receive. The garment here referred to is the "putting on" of the Lord Jesus as "our righteousness." (See Ps. 45: 13, 14.) The gathering together both good and bad implies that no excellences of our own will compensate for the absence of the "robe of righteousness" which is offered freely to all. It was not the lack of hospitality that brougbt about the exclusion of the unrobed guest, but his failure to accept this robe. His neglect or rejection of it is implied, since he knew that all the others were gladly accepting and that without such a garment he could not hope to enter. 4. This reply to the rich young ruler was obviously given with one purpose: to convince him that Jesus was not to be classed witb the "good masters" of the synagogue, and that he who now spake with divine authority was one with the Father and could not receive such a title except where this divine unity was recognized. (See John 14: 9; John 10: 30.) Any other interpretation than this would be meaningless.

S. T. H., Whitehall, Md. 1. The best authorities hold that, as the spirit after leaving the body can have no cognizance of the passage of time, it cannot be aware of the length of any interval between dissolution and resurrection. That interval will seem to pass as an instant. It is nowhere implied that the interval will be a period of unconsciousness. 2. Tbe answer to the penitent thief has already been discussed in THE MAIL-BAG. 3. According to the spiritual belief of the theological scholars of Paul's day, the first heaven was that of the clouds, the air; the second, that of the stars, the sky; and the third, the spiritual heaven. In the passage in II Cor. 12 he was employing these terms to give point to his illustration, meaning the highest heaven.

Miscellaneous

C. C. H., Seattle, Wash. The passage in Matt. 16: 28 refers to Christ's second advent on his reappearing after his death on the cross.

A Reader, Felton, Del. The stanza you quote is from James Whitcomb Riley's poem on the death of his father. The pronoun throughout is masculine, not feminine as in your quotation.

Mrs. R., Galesburg, Ill. A sixteen-year-old girl can get married witbout her parents' consent in the States of Georgia (14 years); Indiana (16 years); Michigan (16 years), and Minnesota (15 years).

Reader. The Bible law on marriage and divorce may be learned from the following passages: Gen. 2: 24; Matt. 19: 5; by Peter in Mark 10: 7, 8; Eph. 5: 31; Matt. 19: 6; Mark 10: 8; Matt. 19: 6; Mark 10: 9; Mal. 2: 16; Matt. 5: 32; 19: 9; I Cor. 7: 11; Matt. 19: 9; Luke 16: 18; Mark 10: 11; Luke 16: 18; Matt. 5: 32; I Cor. 7: 11; Rom. 7: 2; I Cor. 7: 39; Rom. 7: 3; I Cor. 7: 39.

Anxious Reader, Unionville, Mo. If you feel in your heart an insistent call to service, you should give due heed to it. It would be well, however, to make suitable preparation. Write to the Moody Institute, Chicago, for advice regarding preparatory work, or to the Missionary Board of your own church. All the boards are calling for consecrated capable workers.

V. P. S., Reynolds, Ga., and others. The figures in a recent issue on "The Nation's Drink Bill" were not official. They were an estimate from unofficial sources. It is probably in the neighborhood of $2,000,000,000. The following figures from the Internal Revenue Bureau for the year ending June 30, 1912, are approximately correct. Revenue from distilled spirits, $153,391,487.77; revenue from beer, $63,268,770.51.

J. B. K., Rock Island, Ill. The brothers and sisters of Jesus are named in Matt. 13: 55, 56. See also Matt. 27: 56. It cannot be asserted, however, that these were real blood-brothers, because the word "brothers" in Scripture is frequently used in the sense of "near relatives" and is even extended to include nephews. Other commentators hold that they were brothers in the sense of being sons of Joseph by a former marriage. The true relationship has been much confused by early monkish traditions.

"POLLYANNA"
In Book Form

POLLYANNA, whose spirit of gladness affected every one with whom she came in contact, including many thousand readers of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, has been put into book form. It is wonderful what a hold this little girl has taken upon the hearts o CHRISTIAN HERALD readers. We have received literally thousands of letters asking how this popular serial could be obtained in book form, and we are glad to announce that after the 15th of March Pollyanna may be obtained by any one who desires to have her in this permanent form. Though its title is Pollyanna, many persons have insisted upon calling it and as such it will take its place among the literature of uplift and happiness. Hear what one enthusiast says:

"The Glad Book"

Editor Christian Herald. TANEYTOWN, MD., February 19, 1913.

DEAR SIR: I want to thank you, and through you Eleanor H. Porter, for the beautiful story Pollyanna. I consider it a gem in its class; a story that ought to do a vast amount of good in the world. I trust that it will very soon be published in book form. There ought to be millions of copies of it sold. It should be in every Sunday school library in the land, as well as in thousands of homes where there are children. I want two copies of it right now one for my own library, and one for the Sunday school of my church. Considering the fact that so many "nasty" stories are written these days, a story like Pollyanna is a real godsend to literature, and an evidence that decent stories can still really be written. Thank you and the author once more. A "POLLYANNA" ENTHUSIAST, P. B. E.

Pollyanna has been beautifully illustrated and handsomely bound in decorated satin finish cloth, making an ideal gift book, or one you yourself will place among your book treasures.

OUR SPECIAL POLLYANNA OFFER

We are not permitted to sell this book for less than $1.25; but it may be secured free, postpaid, by any one who will send us a NEW nine months subscription to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, accompanied by $1.25. Present CHRISTIAN HERALD subscribers may have it, postpaid, with their renewal for one full year, for $2.25.

Paint Without Oil

Remarkable Discovery That Cuts Down the Cost of Paint Seventy-Five Per Cent.

A Free Trial Package is Mailed to Everyone Who Writes.

A. L. Rice, a prominent manufacturer of Adams, N. Y., has discovered a process of making a new kind of paint without the use of oil. He calls it Powdrpaint. It comes in the form of a dry powder and all that is required is cold water to make a paint weather proof, fire proof and as durable as oil paint. It adheres to any surface, wood, stone or brick, spreads and looks like oil paint and costs about one-fourth as much.

Write to Mr. A. L. Rice, Manuf'r, 85 North St., Adams, N. Y., and he will send you a free trial package, also color card and full information showing you how you can save a good many dollars. Write to-day.

THE YOUNG PEOPLE'S MEETINGS

NOTES ON THE CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR, EPWORTH LEAGUE AND BAPTIST YOUNG PEOPLE'S UNION TOPICS

Vital Living*

IT IS possible to enjoy the fragrance, the beauties, the songs and the cheer of Easter without catching, after all, its definite, personal and positive message. The question every one of us should ask is: What does Easter mean to me? What has Easter done for me?

In a number of passages Paul clearly states what the resurrection life of Jesus should mean to the Christian. He says, for instance, in Col. 3: 1-3:

If ye then be risen with Christ, seek those things which are above, where Christ sitteth on the right hand of God. Set your affections on things above, not on things on the earth. For ye are dead, and your life is hid with Christ in God.

In Rom. 6: 4-11 he writes:

Therefore we are buried with him by baptism unto death; that like as Christ was raised up from the dead by the glory of the Father, even so we also should walk in newness of life. For if we have been planted together in the likeness of his death we shall be also in the likeness of his resurrection; knowing this, that our old man was crucified with him, that the body of sin might be destroyed, that henceforth we should not serve sin. For he that is dead is freed from sin. Now if we be dead in Christ, we believe that we shall also live with him: knowing that Christ being raised from the dead dieth no more; death hath no more dominion over him. For in that he died, he died unto sin once: but in that he liveth, he liveth unto God. Likewise reckon ye also yourselves to be dead indeed unto sin, but alive unto God through Jesus Christ our Lord.

In Rom. 8: 11 he declares:

If the Spirit of him that raised up Jesus from the dead dwell in you, he that raised up Christ from the dead shall also quicken your mortal bodies by his Spirit that dwelleth in you.

Our Scripture lesson for the Easter devotional meeting is II Cor. 4: 8-18. Again and again through this passage occur great and brilliant and fascinating expressions of the grace and powers available for every Christian soul because of the resurrection of Christ: "Always bearing about in the body the dying of the Lord Jesus, that the life also of Jesus might be manifest in our body" (verse 10). "That the life also of Jesus might be made manifest in our mortal flesh" (verse 11). In the latter verses of the chapter Paul presents his tremendous argument that because of the glories of the immortal life the sufferings of the present life should be endured, not only without murmuring, but with what really amounted, in his own case and in his exhortations, to hilarity.

Here, then, are two great lessons for the Eastertide. The first is a present and constant victory over sin. By faith in the crucifixion of Christ, by willingness to identify ourselves by faith with that crucifixion we may become dead to sin; then by faith in his resurrection, by a bold and determined insistence upon identifying ourselves, also by faith, with his resurrection we become "alive" to God, we have our "fruit unto holiness," and we have the rich and fragrant joy of living hour by hour in unspeakable and precious companionship with the same Christ who appeared to Mary in the garden, to the disciples in the upper room, to the two discouraged and bewildered men on the road to Emmaus.

This deliverance from sin through faith in the death and resurrection of Jesus should carry with it, in the second place, as it did in the case of Paul, a jubilant and heroic attitude toward trouble. Paul never ran away from trouble; he gloried in it. He looked through it. Bearing the trouble he looked beyond it to the real world in which was his citizenship. "We faint not; but though our outward man perish, yet the inward man is renewed day by day. For our light affliction, which is but for a moment, worketh for us a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory; while we look not at the things which are seen, but at the things which are not seen: for the things which are seen are temporal; but the things which are not seen are eternal."

We come at last to the phase of Easter which is most commonly in our thought; that is, its relation to immortality. Again and again Paul couples present deliverance from sin with the sure hope of endless life: "Ye have your fruit unto holiness and the end everlasting life" (Rom. 6: 22). In the eighth chapter of Romans his argument for the presence and power of the risen Jesus in us now leads him to his great climax in which he again refers to the strain and storm of the present life: "If children, then heirs; heirs of God and joint-heirs with Christ; if so be that we suffer with him, that we may be also glorified together. For I reckon the sufferings of this present time are not worthy to be compared with the glory which shall be revealed in us" (Rom. 8: 17, 18).

The Easter season is a special comfort to those whose dear ones are on the other side. The grave has lost its terrors and death its sting. Our loved ones who died with Christ are living with him the endless life. He has opened the gateway into the heavens. Everything in the nature of our fellowship with him now brings us to the assurance that that fellowship cannot end by death. Death had no power over him; it can have no power over us, so long as we are joined to him by faith. All the glory and all the beauty of Easter lure our thoughts to that happy time when, after all earthly things have passed away, we shall be ever "with the Lord."

* VITAL LIVING: THE LESSON OF EASTER. Christian Endeavor and B. Y. P. U. Topic for Easter Sunday, March 23, 1913. (II Cor. 4: 8-18.)

The Birth of a Great Hope*

IT WAS a very happy thought that led the Topic Committee of the Epworth League to choose for the Easter lesson the story of the walk to Emmaus. Here were two men, thoroughly human, altogether such beings as ourselves, walking along just such a road as we have all walked many times. The scenery may have been different from that to which our eyes are accustomed, but the dust and the stones were like those we travel over every day. These men, furthermore, were troubled and perplexed, just as we often are. And to them came a Stranger; joined them in their walk; went with them to the house they entered; sat down with them at the table, and proved at last to be their wonderful friend—Jesus, whom they had seen crucified.

So Easter is not only to be enjoyed when we come to die, or to comfort us when our loved ones die. Easter is not a matter of the future or the past. It is a matter of the present: "Christ with us!" or, still more wonderful, as Paul puts it: "Christ in you!" (Col. 1: 27; Eph. 3: 17, etc.)

Since the young people of the Christian Endeavor and the Baptist Young People's Union are also studying an Easter lesson this Sunday, it will be worth while to look over the notes of their lesson, which bring out further points of the Resurrection Life.

came a murmuring that rose to a hiss, the hiss to a roar, and there was a sudden breath of heat from an engine on a siding; then a glimpse of lighted windows and the blank dull sides of Pullmans that faded swiftly into a cluster of red lights far down the track, as the Templars' train swung steadily northward.

"Guess that was Number Four, their southbound limited. Come on."

As the Fathead's hand had gone out to lift the receiver for his message to the wrecking-boss, the telephone bell tinkled sharply, and, instead of calling any one, he answered it. What he heard startled him almost as greatly as his first discovery of the blunder in the orders. The receiver banged on its hook and he postponed further wonderment while he sent the clear quick "9" call for Brandon echoing loudly through the lonely little stations and towers strung out beside the rails from the Junction to the river. Excited night operators, who had overheard the desperate appeals to Franklin and Richwood, marveled that the despatcher should call a day office at three in the morning. The Fathead himself scarcely understood why he did it, but in his ears was the urge of the voice in the telephone, and patiently, minute after minute, he held himself to sounding the Brandon call. Once he gave it up, for in his heart he knew it was useless. But once more he found his mind and eyes were seeking the hill across the tracks, and in self-defense he went back to the key.

Then a remarkable thing occurred. Brandon answered. Believing it was only some hideous joke, the despatcher resumed his calling; but immediately there came again, this time irritatedly, "I, I, Bn."

"Is Four by?" flashed the despatcher's question.

"Not yet. Think I hear them on the hill now," came the reply.

It was the following night before the operator who copied for him knew why the Fathead suddenly yelled like an ecstatic steamboat and did a ten-second war dance in the middle of the floor. By the time this same telegrapher had ventured to thrust his head through the doorway to see if it were safe to re-enter, an order had been sent to Number Four at Brandon to take the siding there until fifth Fifty-three had passed. The flagman from the former had just straightened up from locking the switch behind her when, with a roar that deepened into vibrant thunder as the drivers struck the switch-frogs, the Templar train swept around the near-by bend in the track and was gone before the calm of the mountains had once more closed in behind the tumult of her passage.

In the meantime the despatcher was holding converse with the operator at the little hill station.

"How on earth did you happen to be there at three A.M.?" he queried in a mixture of curiosity and thanksgiving.

"Been to a party," was the laconic response. Stepped in to change my shoes—new ones hurt my feet and it's half a mile to my house. Forgot to 'cut out' when I closed up at six, so I heard you after me." Then he gave the formal "O. S." for the two trains and limped out of depot and story, leaving the Fathead to finish his night's work with a growing sense of the mystery that lay behind the telephone message.

Throughout all that day he waged a losing fight with the heat and with the sleeplessness that the reaction brought upon him. If he dropped into a doze it was only to arouse with a start and the haunting impression that again he had been hopelessly calling, ever calling, the Brandon office. Writhing through his half-waking dreams was the baffling wonder of how some one had known of his trouble and saved him. When the dusk came he abandoned all effort to rest and started for the division headquarters with a resolution suddenly fixed in his mind.

Bancroft was deep in conversation with Vinson when he entered and did not see the Fathead seat himself at the table back of his desk and begin writing nervously. A fragment of what the chief was telling drifted over the top of the desk and the young despatcher stiffened with amazement at his words.

"Queer thing last night," he was saying. "My wife was going down to her mother's on Number Four, and I suppose my mind was on her a good deal, for some time early this morning I had a mighty strange dream. It seemed that the orders for Four and one of the extra Fifty-threes had been 'balled up,' and I was telephoning the third-trick man to make Brandon the meeting point. I woke up in bed afterward all right, so I reckon it was just a—"

He paused, for the Fathead had risen quickly, his face white as marble, and, without a word, laid a paper on his desk.

"What's this?" inquired Bancroft.

"My resignation," answered the despatcher in a queer strained voice. "You did phone me to pass them at Brandon!"

The Fathead's resignation was not accepted. The chief keeps it in his desk at home. And as to the dream and the tight shoes of the Brandon operator: with their lips the Mountain men say it was just coincidence; but in their hearts they call it—just God.

A SONG OF GLADNESS

Inspired by "Pollyanna"

JUST being glad is
A brave thing to do;
Looking for the glad things
Rather than the blue;
Filling life with sunshine,
Just a steady glow;
Looking for the glad things
Everywhere we go.

Just being glad is Often hard to do;
Forgetting all the sad things
That we ever knew;
Living in the sunlight,
Speaking words of cheer,
Looking for the glad things
Through each busy year.

Just being glad brings Heaven here below,
Looking for the glad things
In the love-light's glow;
Burdens will be lighter,
Life seems more complete;
Looking for the glad things,
Glad things we shall meet.

YIELD

Wanted—10,000 Friends

By R. E. Olds, Designer

On Reo the Fifth I seek each year 10,000 new friends like the ones I have.

Not buyers merely, but satisfied owners who for years to come will be glad that I built their cars.

It is to win that kind of satisfaction that I build a car like this.

26 Years Form a Long, Long Road

I have spent 26 years building automobiles, and it is fair to assume men have found me out.

After 25 years, the demand last year was twice our factory output. At times we had five orders for every car we built.

And this year's output was contracted by dealers before the first model was finished.

That situation, I believe, justifies my radical ideas.

My Ideas Are These

I consider it wrong to take chances. Or to ask a man to take some risks I would not take myself.

So I have all steel made to formula. And I make two analyses —before and after treating—before the steel is used.

I test my gears in a crushing machine of 50 tons' capacity. I test my springs for 100,000 vibrations.

I put my engines to three 10-hour tests which are rarely used. I test them 48 hours altogether.

On driving parts I always insist on enormous margin of safety. So I make them to meet all the requirements of a 45 h. p. engine.

And, to guard against error, the various parts of each car are required to pass a thousand inspections.

Costly Extremes

I know, as you know, that oversize tires mean immense economy. So I use on this car tires 34x4.

I know that endurance calls for roller bearings. So I use 11 Timken bearings and 4 of the Hyatt High Duty. They cost five times as much as common ball bearings.

I know that steel castings too often have flaws. So I use in their place 190 drop forgings, costing twice as much.

I use a $75 magneto.

I doubly heat my carburetor.

For safety's sake, I use big brakes and 2-inch, 7-leaf springs.

For Appearance

To make this car look as good as it is, every detail gets the final touch.

Each body gets 17 coats. The deep upholstering is of genuine leather, filled with the best curled hair.

The electric dash lights are set in. And the car is completely nickel trimmed, even below the hood.

Cost $200 Per Car

These extremes, I figure, add about $200 to the necessary cost of each car.

I could save, on this basis, two million dollars a year by being less conscientious.

I save it instead through factory efficiency. By building all our own parts. And by confining our output to this single model, which saves about 20 per cent.

As a result, this car built as I build it can be sold for $1,095.

When I buy a car I want it built like this. I want low cost of upkeep, no repairs, no troubles. I want to be sure of no hidden flaws. I want a car safe and enduring.

So I build for you exactly the same as I build cars for myself. My envied position, after 26 years, is due to this policy only.

This spring I am seeking ten thousand others who feel as I do about cars.

No Control Like This

No other car has a center control like the one in Reo the Fifth.

Here is a rod, set out of the way, with which the right hand does all of the gear shifting. It is done by moving the rod only three inches in each of four directions. It's as simple as moving the spark lever.

No levers, side or center—nothing in the way. Both brakes are operated by foot pedals.

And the car, of course, has left side drive, like the best of latest cars.

Most men, I believe, would pay $100 for this center control alone. In Reo the Fifth it costs you nothing extra.

Please study this car. When you come to know it half as well as I do, no lesser car will be considered by you.

It means dependability. It means comfort, safety, lack of trouble. And it means an upkeep cost as low as any man can make it.

A thousand dealers handle Reo the Fifth. Write for our 1913 catalog and we will tell you where to see the car.

A WEEKLY ILLUSTRATED NEWSPAPER FOR THE HOME

HOW I SAW JERUSALEM AT EASTERTIDE

BY PIERRE LOTI

Member of the French Academy

WE HAD entered the Holy City at Easter time, encountering thousands of pilgrims making their first visit to the spot of adoration. They had come on foot, amid rain and snow, suffering with hunger, leaving more than one perishing by the roadside. At last we entered through an old wall and narrow gateway, and passing downwards we reach a place surrounded by high walls, facing the Holy Sepulcher. Here it is the custom to pass with uncovered head, as soon as the Sepulcher can be seen. The way is lined with poor men and women, begging and singing; with praying pilgrims; with venders of crosses and chaplets. The walls of the chapels are almost like fortresses, and there, loftier and more somber than all the rest, rises the Holy Sepulcher itself, taking on the appearance and irregular outlines of a great rock. It has two enormous gateways of the twelfth century, adorned with ornaments of strange archaism. One is closed; the other stands wide open, allowing us to see within the great obscurity a thousand little lights. There are chants and cries, discordant lamentations, striking to the soul, and waving censers. Crossing the threshold we are in the darkness of the vestibule, from which we see those magnificent depths in which innumerable lamps are burning. The Turkish guards, armed as if for massacre, line the entrance. They look disdainfully at the worshipers, who are to them as the offscourings of the earth. Oh, the unexpected and unforgettable impression of that first entry! A maze of somber sanctuaries, of all epochs, of all aspects, connected by extensions, porticoes and superb colonnades, or by small gateways and caverns. Some raised, like lofty stages, where we may see groups of women with long veils; others subterranean, sunken in shadow, between great natural rocks. All is in a kind of twilight, with here and there a ray of light that emphasizes the darkness. All is lit up by little silver lamps hanging from the arches like stars. And everywhere the crowds press on, like a great Babel, or stand in groups around some special national altar. Psalmodies, lamentations, chants of sadness swell to the lofty arches, or vibrate in sepulchral echoes below; the nasal songs of the Greeks, mixed with the shouting of the Copts. And amid all the voices, a lifting up of tears and prayers, differing yet melting into one; and all ends in a great inexplicable moan, which rises like the great plaint of men, their supreme cry of distress in the presence of death. . . .

"Pierre Loti"

Captain Louis Viaud of the French Navy

Entering the sanctuary proper we discern amid the columns the dark chaos of other altars, and in the center the great marble altar, semi-barbarous in its luxury, laden with silver lamps, covering the stone of sepulcher. All about this most holy altar the crowd weaves, or tries to stand; on one side hundreds of mujiks, down on both knees; on the other women of Jerusalem, wearing long white veils—we might almost deem them ancient virgins in this shadowed dream. Then there are the Abyssinians, turbaned Arabs, prostrated with foreheads to the earth; Turks with saber on thigh; men of every communion and every tongue. . . . They do not stand long here, but one by one leave this heart of the mass of basilicas and chapels, and one by one we pass, lowering our heads, through a little marble doorway, festooned with decorations. The sepulcher is here, enclosed in marble, amid ikons and lamps of gold. As I went in, a Russian soldier entered, a poor old man, and a woman clad in rich brocades; all kissed the cover of the tomb and wept. Then others followed, an eternal procession, touching, as they bedewed the stones with their tears. There is no plan in all the chapels and caverns around the sacred altar; some are large and marvelously sumptuous; others are very small, humble and primitive, crumbling with age, dug out of living rock in the darkest depths. And here and there the rock of Calvary, left naked, appears in the midst of wealth and archaic gildings. The contrast is strange between such treasures, ikons, crucifixes and lamps of gold and the bare rock, and the shouts of pilgrims, the ruins of walls and pilasters, the rushing mob of humanity. All of the altars of the various confessions are so mixed up that there is a continuous marching of priests and cortèges; passing through the crowds, as they bear their censers, aided by the janisaries calling for room. "Room!" It is the Syrian bishop with a long white beard, emerging from the little subterranean chapel. Then come the Greeks, with Byzantine ornaments; and the Abyssinians, with their black faces. Quick, quick, they pass in their sumptuous garb, while boys swing silver censers ahead of them, pushing aside the mob as they pass. In this sea of humanity there is a continuous roar, unending sounds of psalmodies and sacred gongs. It is so dark that every one needs a candle in hand to find his way between the dark columns, beneath the shaded galleries, and so thousands of jets of flame follow and cross each other. Some are praying aloud, others weep bitterly, hastening from one chapel to the other, here to kiss the rock where the cross once stood, there to bow and weep for Mary and the Magdalen. Priests beckon to lead you through narrow gates to the caves of the tomb; old women, their cheeks running tears, ascend after saluting the tomb itself.

In deepest darkness we go down to the chapel of St. Helena, by a broad stairway with thirty steps, all broken, worn, dangerous like a falling ruin bordered by crouching specters. As we pass our tapers light up these vague, motionless figures, of the color of the rocks, and we see that they are maimed beggars, their faces covered with ulcers, all sinister, holding their chins in their hands, their long hair falling over their faces. Amid these horrors is a young blind man, covered by his blonde hair as with a cloak, beautiful as Christ, whom he resembles closely.

At the bottom, the Chapel of St. Helena seems all the more brilliant as compared with the darkness and its double row of phantoms through which we have just passed. It is lighted through the windows of the dome. It is certainly one of the strangest of all the buildings which make up the Holy Sepulcher. Here we feel in agonizing fashion the weight of the awful past. All was silence when I entered—it was empty, under the eyes of those half-dead specters of the stairway, and I can barely hear the distant rumble of the chants and bells. Behind the altar is another stairway, bordered alike by the long-haired beggars, passing down into darker night.

It seems like a barbarian temple. There are four enormous columns, supporting ponderously the mighty dome from which hang ostrich eggs and a thousand savage pendants. Bits of paintings on the walls still show saints, with nimbus of gold, although smeared with dust and mold of centuries. All at once the Abyssinian priests issue from the lower cavern, looking like the Magi of old, coming forth from earth, with their dark faces, great gold tiaras, long robes of cloth of gold, sewn with fanciful red and blue flowers. . . . Quick, quick, in that peculiar exaltation which seems to animate everything here, they pass through the crypts of the chapel and ascend to the other sanctuaries by the ruinous stairway. Illumined on the lower steps by the rays from the windows above, archaically splendid in their golden garb amid the crouching gnomes of the stairway—then all at once they melt away in the darkness as if swallowed up. . . .

Far from there, in the sanctuaries of the entrance, near the altar of the Sepulcher, rises the Rock of Calvary. It is surmounted by two chapels to which we ascend by a flight of twenty stone steps, and these are to the crowd the real place for prostration and tears.

From the peristyle of these chapels, as from a raised balcony, the view presents a mass of tabernacles, a labyrinth of churches, through which the anesthetized crowd works its way. The more splendid of the two is the Greek chapel; upon a silver cloud, which shines like the rainbow, stand out lifesize the three who were crucified, Christ and the two thieves; the walls disappear beneath the ikons of silver, gold and precious jewels. The altar is erected at the precise spot of the crucifixion; under the altar-screen a silver trelliswork shows in the black rock the very hole in which the cross was placed—and here they fall to their knees, wetting the sad stones with tears and kisses, while chants and prayers ascend from the altar below.

And for almost two thousand years it has been in this place, in different forms, in different basilicas, with interruptions by sieges, battles and massacres, but recaptured again, it resounded once more with the same chorus of prayers, the same despairing supplications.

These adorations may indeed seem somewhat idolatrous to him, who said: "God is Spirit, and those who worship him should worship in spirit and in truth." But they are so human! They respond so well to our instincts and our misery; Assuredly the first Christians, in the purely spiritual flight of their faith, when the teaching of the Master was still fresh in their souls, did not encumber themselves with display, symbols and images. Above all, they were not concerned about terrestrial reminders, the place of martyrdom, or the empty sepulcher. They did not dream of seeking their Redeemer there, for they knew that he was separated forever from transitory things, dwelling above in lasting light.

It was later, and my friendly Dominican pointed to a melancholy slope of gray stones, with here and there an olive tree. "That," said he, "I need hardly tell you, is Gethsemane." He had pronounced the last words almost in a whisper of reverence. No, I had not known, I who was a new pilgrim to Jerusalem, and that name stirred the inner chambers of my heart, and with an indescribable feeling, a mixture of love and anguish, I looked out over the prospect.

With the others I wished to follow that path they call the "Path of Sorrows," even though I knew that it had not been identified until the sixteenth century, and only followed the direction of the route to the Cross in a general way. Here were the ruins of what had been the palace of Pilate, for there have been less changes here than in the neighborhood of Calvary. Here is the ancient Roman pavement, here are ancient walls by which Jesus must have passed.

The road is darkening in the dying light of day. We hear the chants coming from the Chapel of St. Anne. The road runs upwards, narrow and steep, between two ancient walls, by great arches. Other streets cross it, seeming dead, without windows, or other opening. "Hic flagellavit," says a marble tablet set in a doorway. Here he was flagellated. This is the Chapel of the Flagellation, the beginning of the Road. Here is the Turkish prison, built upon the foundations of Pilate's palace, first Station of the Cross. All the other Stations as far as Calvary are marked by inscriptions or columns.

I pass beneath the Arch of Ecce Homo, and hear the Daughters of Zion singing the praise of the Saviour. The way turns and twists its sad length, ever ascending. I reach the Seventh Station, the gate through which Jesus passed toward Calvary, and then past all the rest to the Sepulcher.

But I wanted to visit Gethsemane, seen from a distance only. So thither we directed our ste and I wished for silence. For the first time in r life I was about to enter—oh, so eagerly!—th place the name of which mentioned at a distan had so profoundly moved me, and I had fo seen all these people, the crowd attracted hither if for a spectacle. We entered the grotto call that of the Agony, now become a chapel with rock for a dome, which for sixteen centuries h been considered the place in which Jesus pass through that awful agony before the arre Other places have been disputed and questione but concerning Gethsemane there is univers agreement. The little altars, very old and simpl do not disfigure this grotto, which does not seem have changed in nineteen hundred years. It w in such a spring night as this, as cold as ours pron ised to be, that the apostles slept here, their ey weighted down with fatigue and anguish, whi Jesus went away from them into the garden stone's throw" to pray for strength. Here Jes came to awaken them three times, and here ami the flash of torches was he taken. This rock vault stood there, and heard and saw those things but it is mute.

Thence we traversed the very path back to Jer salem along which Jesus must have walked on ju such a night as this, facing his fate. There wa the same moon shining upon us, the same dee shadows cast by the giant olive trees. The sam breezes blew into our faces, and in the light o memory we could see that frail body strugglin with the weight of impending doom, yet passin firmly onward in the night.

When I left Jerusalem I could not but feel th spell of all I had seen. I felt that the Holy Sepu cher was indeed the soul of the city, yet though i had touched my hardened soul there seemed hop even for the multitude that could not make this pil grimage. To those who have followed me to th Sepulcher let me say: Seek him! You also; try for there is none besides him. To find him yo need not come in pomp and circumstance all th way to Jerusalem, for he is everywhere.

Secretary of the Navy

HON. WILLIAM JENNINGS BRYAN, Secretary of State, was born at Salem, Ill., in 1860. He was admitted to the Illinois bar in 1883; practiced at Jacksonville, Ill., till 1887, and then at Lincoln, Neb. He represented the First Nebraska District in the Fifty-second and Fifty-third Congresses. In 1896 he was nominated for the presidency by the Democratic Convention. In 1898 he raised the Third Regiment of Nebraska Volunteer Infantry for service in Cuba, becoming its colonel. He was nominated for the presidency in 1900, but was defeated. In 1896 he made a tour of the world, meeting everywhere prominent men connected with the several governments. In 1901 he established the Commoner. He is a fluent public speaker on a wide range of subjects, a voluminous contributor to the periodical literature of the day and a forceful exponent of evangelical doctrine. Mr. Bryan has "consulted with more monarchs and statesmen and scholars than Mr. Roosevelt, or Hamilton Fish, or Bayard, or Freylinghuysen, or Blaine, or Olney, or Hay, or Clay, or Calhoun, or Root ever thought of doing"; and he has always been well received even by such widely different personalities as the Czar, the Pope, and Tolstoy.

HON. WILLIAM G. McADOO, Secretary of the Treasury, was born near Marietta, Ga., in 1863, and received part of his education at the University of Tennessee, Knoxville. Leaving college before graduation, he completed his law studies while acting as deputy clerk of the United States Circuit Court at Chattanooga, Tenn., where he was admitted to the bar at the age of twenty-one. Later he became counsel for two railroads and developed keen interest in the affairs of that class of corporations. After coming to New York he formed a partnership with a namesake—though not a blood relative—who is now a chief magistrate in New York City. This partnership was dissolved in 1902. His most notable success has been the construction of the Hudson tunnels. Mr. McAdoo, who is a widower, married in 1885, and has six children.

HON. JAMES C. McREYNOLDS, Attorney General, was born near Elkton, Ky., in 1863. After graduating from Vanderbilt University, he studied law in the University of Virginia. He was admitted to the bar in Tennessee, practicing at Nashville until he became assistant attorney general at Washington—from June 1903, to January, 1907. For a short time he then practiced law in New York, but was appointed special attorney general and put in charge of the prosecution of the Tobacco Trust. When the dissolution was ordered, he attended the conferences between Attorney General Wickersham, counsel for the trust, and the Circuit Court judges, and demanded that the old organization be wiped out. Mr. McReynolds, shortly after this, severed his connection with the government. He later, however, conducted the government's action against the alleged Anthracite Trust and won a partial victory.

HON. LINDLEY M. GARRISON, Secretary of War, was born at Camden, N. J., in 1864. He studied law at Harvard, from there entering the offices of Redding, Jones & Carson, where he continued his studies, which he later completed at the University of Pennsylvania. In 1886 he was admitted to the bar in Pennsylvania, and two years later began to practice in Camden, N. J., removing to Jersey City in 1898. In 1904 he was appointed vice-chancellor of New Jersey, and at the end of his seven-year term was reappointed for another term of the same length.

HON. JOSEPHUS DANIELS, Secretary of the Navy, was born in Washington, N. C., in 1862. He is editor of the Raleigh News and Observer, and has been a newspaperman from early years. For criticizing a Federal District Court judge for his acts in connection with the receivership of a railroad, he was once arrested and fined $20,000. For several days he was confined to a room in a hotel in the custody of a United States marshal. There he wrote his editorials, dating them from "Cell No. 365." An appeal was taken, and the fine remitted. He has been a member of the National Democratic Committee for sixteen years.

HON. ALBERT S. BURLESON, Postmaster General, was born at San Marco, Tex., in 1863, and is the first Texan to occupy a seat in the cabinet of a President of the United States. He was educated at the Mechanical and Agricultural College of Texas, and was admitted to the bar in 1884. He was assistant city attorney of Austin for five years, and later was attorney for the Twenty-sixth Judicial District for five years. He has been a member of the House for fourteen years and was re-elected to the Sixty-third Congress.

HON. WILLIAM C. REDFIELD, Secretary of Commerce, was born at Albany, N. Y., in 1858, and educated at the Pittsfield, Mass., High School. He held prominent positions in a number of large commercial enterprises, and is a director of the Equitable Life Assurance Society of New York. His hobby for years has been the study of business conditions here and abroad, and his opinions are from the manufacturer's point of view. He contends that labor does not need a high tariff for its protection. In the House of Representatives he has advocated a lower tariff on foodstuffs, and in a recent bill proposed to make meat and meat products free of duty; he is regarded as an able exponent of tariff revision. Last year he visited the Philippines.

HON. FRANKLIN K. LANE, Secretary of the Interior, was born in Prince Edward Island, Canada, in 1864. He was graduated from the University of California in 1886, began the practice of law in San Francisco in 1889, and served as corporation counsel from 1897 to 1902. He was Democratic candidate for governor in 1902, and next year received the vote of his party for United States Senator. In 1905 he was appointed a member of the Interstate Commerce Commission. He is also a member of the International Railway Commission, representing the United States Government. On the Interstate Commerce Commission he has won the reputation of being "progressive."

HON. DAVID F. HOUSTON, Secretary of Agriculture, was born at Monroe, S. C., in 1866, and was graduated from South Carolina College in 1887. He received the A.M. degree from Harvard in 1892, and LL.D. from Tulane in 1903, and University of Wisconsin in 1906. He has been president of the University of Texas, president of the Agricultural and Mechanical College of Texas, and became chancellor of Washington University, St. Louis, in 1908. He is a member of the Southern Education Board, the Rockefeller Sanitary Commission, and the American Economics Association, and is also a Fellow of the Texas State Historical Society.

HON. WILLIAM B. WILSON, Secretary of Labor, was born at Blantyre, Scotland, in 1862, came to this country in 1870, and received a public school education in Pennsylvania. He worked as a coal miner from 1871 to 1898, and represented the Fifteenth Pennsylvania District in Congress from 1907 to 1913, when he lost his seat through a combination of Republican and Progressive votes. Since early manhood he has been identified with trade union affairs, and was international secretary of the United Mine Workers of America from 1900 to 1908. He enters the cabinet with a union card in his pocket, and those who advocated his candidacy have had the vigorous support of the officials of the American Federation of Labor.

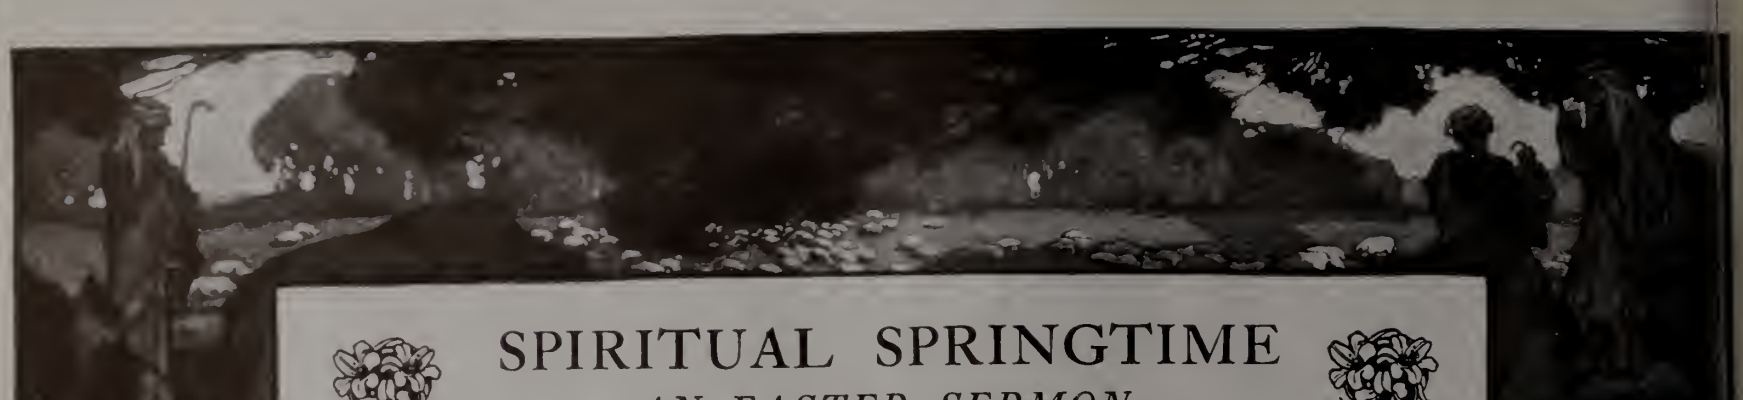
GENERAL NOTES

—IN THE ARKANSAS STATE SENATE lately, Senator Holt, one of the leading lawmakers, spoke in defense of his bill providing that all asylums, homes, hospitals and public institutions should be open to inspection at all times, and giving power to the grand juries of all counties to conduct investigations. The senator openly declared that the Roman Catholic Church is responsible for many questionable acts in attempting to operate convents and homes for minor children, and that all such institutions should be open for inspection. "The Roman Catholic Church," he said, "is slowly but steadily attempting to get control of all government authority for the promulgation of the religious principles of that church. It is time to call a halt." By a close vote the bill failed to pass; but the incident shows an agitation, until late years unknown in this country.

—THE LITERARY OUTPUT of the country in book form has more than doubled in the last two decades. In 1890 there were published 4,559 volumes and in 1912, 10,135. The largest relative increases were in books of philosophy, science, religion, theology, economics, technical and business books, education, biology, poetry and drama, agriculture and out-of-doors. Even taking the increased population into account, the output is an astonishing one. In 1910, fiction reached its high-water mark of 1,539 volumes, but has dropped during the three following years.

—GERMANY'S NEW TAX BUDGET contemplates an expenditure of $250,000,000 on the increase of the army. It will be a non-recurring tax and will bear most heavily on private fortunes, the rate being approximately $50.10 on every $1,000, for one year only. The idea is said to have originated with the emperor, and the princes of the empire are reported to have patriotically agreed to waive their hereditary right of exemption from tax for this particular occasion. Hitherto, a tax on the fortunes of the wealthy has been resorted to only as an extreme measure in war times. The Frankfurter Zeitung, commenting on the enormous tax proposed, says it seems as though "the government has been stampeded by progressive suggestion into underwriting needlessly all the demands of the military men, without giving a second thought to either ways or means."



SPIRITUAL SPRINGTIME

AN EASTER SERMON

By Rev. J. H. Jowett, D.D.

TEXT: "The Sun of righteousness shall arise with healing in his wings." Malachi 4: 2.

I SPENT the days of last Eastertide in a lovely district where the winter was breaking up and the beauties of the spring were emerging on every side.

And everywhere springtime and the Easter glory seemed to pervade each other in mutual interpenetration. While I was thinking about the one, I had the helpful and all-encompassing ministry of the other. While I was meditating upon the wonders of the resurrection, those wonderful spring mornings, so full of song and movement, and with life leaping up on every side in garden and field, offered to me the symbols of the glorious sun of the risen life of Christ. Or if I walked in the presence of nature and breathed the wooing air of the spring, and felt her vitalizing spirit drawing buried powers out of their graves, the earth's resurrection took me to another springtime, another resurrection, to "the first day of the week, very early in the morning," and to the radiant mystery of the risen Saviour and the wonders of the spiritual prime.

And so I want to proclaim the Lord Jesus as the One who brings spiritual springtime into human life. "The Sun of righteousness shall arise with healing in his wings." And if we wish to know what the Lord can do for all men, let us look abroad upon the country when winter is passing, and everywhere we shall find glowing symbols of the miracles of redemptive life and grace.

Now let me quote a few sentences descriptive of springtime from one of the masters of his craft. And then let us see how far these characteristics unfold similar wonders in the realm of the soul. "It is a bright day in April, with a gentle south-west wind. Sitting still in the copse and facing the sun it strikes warm; . . . the clouds are soft and springlike, and the white of the blackthorn is discernible here and there amidst the underwood. The brooks are running full from winter rains. . . . All over the wood which fills up the valley lies a thin, purplish mist, harmonious with the purple bloom of the stems and branches. The buds are ready to burst, there is a sense of movement, of waking after sleep; the tremendous upward rush of life is almost felt. But how silent the process is! There is no hurry for the achievement, although so much has to be done, such infinite intricacy to be unfolded and made perfect." Now I want to examine some of these aspects of the springtime, because they offer to me a rich piece of symbolism descriptive of the spiritual spring, and of the experience of the soul when "the Sun of righteousness arises with healing in his wings."

The Sun of Life

"The sun strikes warm." That is ever the testimony of those who newly experience the saving ministry of the Sun of Life. The Lord Christ is "a light to them that sit in darkness and in the shadow of death." He brings to them not only illumination, but the gracious heat that breaks up the winter in the heart. He creates an atmosphere in the life that is both bright and genial. When he possesses the life, it is as if one emerged from the chill air of a cold dungeon into the warm sunshine of the open world.

I remember the witness of a young Jew who, in the early days of my ministry, became a disciple of Jesus Christ. When I asked him to express in a phrase the nature of his experience when he became a Christian, he gave this brief reply: "A warmth." My young friend had been frozen amid all the chilling rules of an over-regulated life. He had been confined to the outer passages of being, and when he was brought into the inner room where that glowing fire was burning upon the hearth, his predominant feeling was one of warmth. He was kinsman to John Wesley, who, on the day when he passed into the fulness of grace, felt "a strange warming of heart." Springtime had come and winter was broken up.

This is surely the reason why the publicans and sinners were so eager to be in the presence and fellowship of Christ. It was like drawing near to a sun whose beams struck warm upon their frigid souls. "They wondered at the gracious words which proceeded out of his mouth." The light of the majority of the religious people of that day was like moonlight; it was pale and cold. And when the outcast found a man whose religion was like sunshine, he drew near to warm his frozen heart.

> And warm, sweet, tender, even yet
> A present help is he.

Let me take another characteristic which our literary friend offers to us in his description of the spring. "A sense of movement, of waking after sleep, the tremendous upward rush of life." In the springtime there is a sense of universal movement, a mysterious stirring in every corner of the great field. And surely this movement is only symbolic of an equally real but more mysterious movement in the realm of the soul. When the Sun of righteousness arises with healing in his wings the whole being of man is thrilled with the stirrings of life. The New Testament uses two words which I think are redolent of the spring. One is "quickening" and the other is "awaking." They are both suggestive of dead and sleeping things emerging from their graves. When the light of life falls upon the life of man secret powers begin to unfold, sleeping perceptions begin to awake, and the whole being becomes alive unto God.

The Spring of Spiritual Freedom

In a similar but lesser degree we can see this quickening influence on the human plane, between man and man. One soul can quicken another and make it alert where before it was dull and drowsy. William Hazlitt describes the influence of Coleridge upon his own personality. "I was at that time dumb, inarticulate, helpless, like a worm by the wayside, crushed, bleeding, lifeless; but now, bursting the dull bands that bound them, my ideas floated on winged words, and as they expanded their plumes caught the golden light of other years. My soul has indeed remained in its original bondage; dark, obscure, with longings infinite and unsatisfied; my heart, shut up in the prison house of this rude clay, has never found, nor will it ever find, a heart to speak to; but that my understanding also did not remain dumb and brutish I owe to Coleridge." That is to say, one man's mental torpor can be broken and changed into mental vigilance. The winter that reigned in the mind can be dispelled, and springtime may come with light and liberty. Now what Coleridge did for Hazlitt's mind, Christ could have done, in immeasurably richer degree, for Hazlitt's heart and soul. Christ could have entered that inner prison and filled it with light and song. Christ can break the bands of the most tyrannous winter and can usher in the sunny season of spiritual freedom. He can take souls that are "dumb, inarticulate, helpless, like worms by the wayside, crushed, bleeding, lifeless," and he fills them with his own life, and endows them with wings, and sets them in heavenly places, exulting in a sunny and expansive freedom.

The Soul's Spring Song

The best in man wakes and comes to its best when we come into communion with Christ. Let me give a single example of this birth of the springtime when the Sun of our souls has showered its rays upon the souls of men. Here is Frank Bullen, a poor sailor, landed for a little while at Port Chalmers in New Zealand. A shipmate and he were strolling along the shore aimlessly seeking nothing. There came into their ears the melody of a hymn, and they followed its strains and were led into a place of worship. Some man, the leader of the simple service, gave a simple address. "I listened with all my ears. I do not know how long the address lasted. I only know that something was being offered to me th I felt I must have. I felt like one after long wandering in a weary l rinth from which there was no hop escape, had suddenly seen open be him a door leading into sunlight, wi delightful prospect beyond, stretching into infini Let any one contrast this passage with the pass I have quoted from Hazlitt, and he will see compared with the radiant glory that fell u Bullen, the influence of Coleridge was only like dim radiance of a smoking lamp. When Fr Bullen went into that simple place of worshi Port Chalmers, he was found by the Sun of ri teousness and there began a "tremendous upw rush of life," and a spiritual springtide was tered which has only passed to still more glor summer. The Sun of righteousness had ar with healing in his wings.

I look again at our author's delicious descrip of the spring, and I find not only a sense of m ment but a feeling of merriment and song. T nyson has given us these signs of the springti:

> Now rings the woodland loud and long;
> The distance takes a lovelier hue;
> And drowned in yonder living blue,
> The lark becomes a sightless song.

Shelley, too, makes us feel the light and melody f the spring in his dancing lines:

> Bird's love, bird's song,
> Flying here and there.

Is there anything to correspond with this in e life of the soul? Surely when the Sun of rig eousness arises the bird note rings out in the man life. John Ruskin has somewhere said t the introduction of the picture of a bird by one f the great masters was one of the tokens of e Renaissance in art. That bird marked the pass g of the merely technical, the coldly traditional, e imitative and the conventional, to the natu l idea, the glory of the real spring. And so it s with the renaissance of the soul: the heavy-foo d becomes the light-hearted, and repining gives pl e to song.

The Bible is a book of singers and their son . One cannot travel far in the sacred Word with t coming upon the most exuberant songsters. come, let us sing unto the Lord." "Singing w grace in your hearts." "Let him sing." "And th sang with a loud voice." Oh, yes, the bird no s are here because these souls have found their sp tual spring. And the wonder is this: that th birds are singing even when the worldly envir ment is wintry and cold. And it is this class f singing that arrests the pilgrim as he passes . A caged lark singing in Fleet Street can hold thousand people enthralled. Paul and Silas sa in the inner prison, and the Philippian jailer a the prisoners lay awake to hear them. The Sal tion Army sang in the depths of its most terri winter and the English people heard their so from Cornwall to Northumbria. They were treat with derision. Sometimes they were stoned but the bitterest days we could hear the birds singi because there was springtide within.

The Garments of Our Springtide

I am persuaded that the Christian life our own day is too somber, too ca ridden, too burdened, too complainin The recovery of the birdnote would the recovery of a mighty witness. "R joice; and again I say, rejoice!" That the note that will startle the prodigal as he mop by the swine-trough in a far country. And th is the note that will awake the interest of publica and sinners and of "outcasts whom even outcas cast out." When the Sun of righteousness is aris upon us in all the fulness of his quickening bear nothing will restrain our song, "for lo! the wint is past, and the rain is over and gone, and the flo ers appear upon the earth, and the time of the so of birds is come."

I look once again at the aspects of the physic springtide, and I find an overwhelming beaut "The white of the blackthorn is discernible he

THE DAY OF MIRACLES

A STORY BY REBECCA N. PORTER

"STILL storming outside, Davie-Boy?"

David uncoiled the shabby muffler from about his throat and spread it carefully before the fire before he answered: "Yes, other, it's pouring, and it looks like we're in for week of it."

The beautiful, patient eyes of the woman rested on him with brooding tenderness. "I wish you dn't have to go out in this weather, Davie-Boy," e said. "I'm afraid you're soaked through now. h, if I were only strong and well, and could do my art!"

David looked at her in swift alarm. By mutual nsent neither of them ever mentioned her invalism now. They had me to accept her mpanionless, house-ound days as an invitable sorrow, and lthough each brooded ver them in secret, ey were never alded to. This sudden ention of her helpssness alarmed the oy. He changed the ubject.

"Guess what I heard own at the station -day, mother."

Long habit made er rally bravely to eet his forced cheerulness.

"Somebody's going o be married?"

"No. Of course ou'd guess that. But t's much more excitng news than that. Guess something with ome ginger to it, nother."

"I can't think of nything; not a thing, Davie-Boy. What is t?"

"The Carters have ought an automoile!"

"An automobile!"

"Yes, sir, and it's a eauty. They had it lown at the station vhen I went in to get he paper. It's just ike those we see advertised in the big nagazines. It's painted red and holds five peole. Everybody was around the station ooking at it. Guess he Carters'll be goin' up to the city and very place now on rips."

"And they had it out in all this storm?"

"Sure, mother, it lon't hurt 'em. They had curtains all round, even in front; t's great!"

"I suppose they wanted to have it by Easter instead of new hats and little things ike that," his mother suggested.

"You bet!" he answered ardently. "It never seems to me like anybody we know could have things like that, does it, mother? Seems like Rockefeller and people like that that you read about."

Having cheered her up successfully, Davie-Boy went whistling out to the kitchen to build the fire and put on the kettle. Ever since that terrible day when his father had been brought in, white and still, he had shouldered the responsibilities of the little red house in the mountains, and so persistently had he whistled through that first dreary year that it had now become a fixed habit. A few months later, when "mother" had suffered the fall that made her an almost helpless cripple, the whistle had been stilled for many days, but in the end it had risen again, triumphant; more forced than ever, and sometimes almost a wail, but Davie-Boy had had faith that it was a whistle, and gradually as the months passed it had come to fulfil his ideal.

He was up early the next morning, but when he came in to breakfast he was more silent than usual. Mother's quick eyes searched him questioningly. "Aren't you feeling well to-day, Davie-Boy?" she asked.

"Sure!" he answered, but he could see that she was not convinced. She looked at him for a moment in silence. "Don't try to take the carnations over to the church this morning if you're tired," she suggested. "If they get there by four in the afternoon it will be all right."

He did not answer, and mother, after another quick glance at him, began scraping the plates and stacking the dishes in neat piles for him to take out to the kitchen. To make the dishwashing easier, she talked to him through the open door while he worked.

"I do hope it won't rain to-morrow, Davie-Boy. Of course, it's not for us to complain of whatever the Lord sends, but a stormy Easter always seems such a pity. It's the hopeful, promising day of all the year, and I always connect it with sunshine and brightness. There hasn't ever been a rainy Easter since the year your father died and—oh, I hope it will clear."

From the kitchen sink came the sound of splashing soapsuds, but Davie-Boy did not reply.

"I wonder if anybody else will send carnations this year," mother went on, while her long, white fingers plied the darning-needle in and out. "Do you remember that they were father's favorite flowers, Davie-Boy? At first I just ached to put them on his grave at Easter, but now I get so much more comfort out of knowing that they are in the little church, making it beautiful and Easter-like. Tell me about the chancel again, Davie-Boy, so that I can see it all in my mind again to-morrow when I'm sitting here alone. Does the choir march in from the front door, or do they come from the side?"

Davie-Boy had finished the dishes and came in now in long threadbare coat to get the egg basket. "Why, you haven't read the paper I brought yesterday, mother," he said accusingly, as he saw it, still in its wrapper, upon the sewing machine. "You can't afford to get behind with the news, you know." He took the egg basket and went off down the mountain side to the barnyard.

It was still raining hard, and he half ran, half slipped down the steep incline. Once inside the rickety little barn, he set down the basket, fed and watered the one horse, and then sank down upon a grain sack to think. "I ought to tell her," he said aloud.

A tall brown hen peered in at him from under the milking-shed. He felt grateful for her company and threw her a handful of wheat in the hope that she would linger near him. "I never should have begun it in the first place," he accused himself bitterly, "and now every Easter I've added some more to it till it's a great big deceit."

The brown hen gazed at him, unwinking. She seemed to be waiting for him to decide what he should do.

"I've almost gotten to hate Easter," he told her mournfully. "I've told so many stories about the church already, about havin' a real choir and flowers and all, that I've almost gotten to expect to see it that way myself."

The brown hen, disgusted with waiting, wandered away, leaving Davie-Boy alone with his misery.

"I wonder if there ain't two kinds of lies," he mused wretchedly. "One kind that you tell to get yourself out of some trouble, and the other kind that you tell to make somebody else happy. I should think what you lie for would make some difference to God."

He rose stiffly and began his mechanical round of egg-hunting. An hour later, when all the chores were done, he started slowly up the mountain side to the house. He must yield again to long habit, and conjure up a gilded tale of to-morrow's service. Mother would be broken-hearted to hear the real story now. He counted the eggs carefully into the big, yellow mixing-bowl, took off his soaking coat, and dragged himself into the little living-room.

Mother was sitting beside the west window, her sewing lying idle in her lap. She turned as he entered, and Davie-Boy saw, with terror, that there were tears in her eyes. "Mother!" he cried.

She held out both arms to him and drew him close.

"Don't be frightened, Davie-Boy," she said. They're only happy tears. What do you suppose

LIFE'S EASTER FLOWER

By Alice J. Whittier

I

THOUGH weary years we traveled, yea,
Journeyed far and away,
We came to the City of Love at last,
On one great Easter Day.
And down by the River of Life, hard by,
Most joyous blossoms grew;
Rose-red they gleamed in the morning light,
Pearl in the evening dew.
And ah, they bloom for me! for me!
O friend, bloom they for you?

II

Beloved of the bitter heart,
And thou too sad to pray,
And you, and you, who toil for naught
In mills of Everyday,
Would you find the Easter flower of life?
Then you shall know the way.
Now the City of Love lies deep, lies deep
In the Valley of Everywhere.
The path thereto is Death-to-Self,
The milestones are of prayer.

III

The blossoms down by the River of Life
Cover a rocky tomb.
Faith is the strong, deep root of hope;
Joy is the rosy bloom.
For the roots cling close round an empty shelf
Which for our Lord made room.
For He who was tender-human,
He, the Lord from Above,
The Christ who suffered outside the wall,
Reigns King of life and love.

IV

This is the stay of the ages,
The hope that cannot fail,
For the Lord of Life brake the gates of Death,
Hail to the Conqueror! Hail!
And brought life up from the darkness
With love that did prevail.
But oh, He grudged not the cost,
He who loved to the death;
Hence the bloom that covers the broken grave
Fills earth with fragrant breath.

V

"Ye who have fled for a refuge,"
Lay hold on this hope that is ours;
Build you an house in the City of Love;
Pluck of the wonderful flowers.
Hoard them not for a selfish joy,
Plant of them as ye may,
Wear of the blooms in your bosom,
Sing on your busy way,
For the joy of life, the flower of hope,
Blossoms on Easter Day.

WOODROW WILSON TAKING THE OATH OF OFFICE AS PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES AT WASHINGTON, D. C., ON MARCH 4, 1913

INAUGURATING OUR 28TH PRESIDENT

WOODROW WILSON TAKES THE PRESIDENTIAL OATH OF OFFICE BEFORE A VAST THRONG AT THE NATION'S CAPITAL. A BRILLIANT AND IMPRESSIVE CEREMONY OPENS THE NEW ADMINISTRATION

THOUGH the inauguration ceremonies of the fourth of March in Washington, D. C., were notable for their impressiveness and the smoothness with which every detail worked ut as arranged, the most conspicuous feature of he day was the evident whole-souled good nature vhich pervaded everything. Throughout the day he vast throngs which filled the streets were ani-nated by such good humor as is seldom seen even n an American crowd.

Long before breakfast the streets about the Shoreham Hotel were well filled with people who vaited patiently for Mr. Wilson to leave the hotel or the White House. A few minutes before ten he Princeton band was heard up the street and a housand Princeton students singing one of heir popular football songs arrived to line the oute from the hotel to the Executive Mansion. When Governor Wilson had arrived there, the stu-lents who had been admitted to the grounds gath-red on the West Drive and sang the famous Princeton song, "Old Nassau." In response to this greeting their former university president came out upon the portico and stood with his hat raised until they had finished.

The Start for the Capitol

At 10:15 the little procession, composed of the carriages of President Taft and Mr. Wilson and of President Taft's cabinet, set out on its way to the Capitol. Through strong police lines the carriages with their guards of secret service men and cav-alry were cheered till the Senate steps of the Capitol were reached. It was a forty-minute drive through a crowd that cheered its noisy friend-liness at every step. The President and the Presi-dent-elect bowed continuously and impartially all along the way. Both seemed in particularly happy mood, though every one noted that President Taft seemed as joyous as if starting on a holiday trip. At one point some leather-lunged individual called out impulsively, "Well, you're a mighty good loser, anyhow!" and the idea seemed to please the crowd, who cheered it to the echo. In spite of the light-hearted cheering that filled the air, the fact that for one of these men it was his last ride through the streets of Washington as the President of his country and for his companion the last ride as a private citizen for at least four years, impressed all the spectators. Two hours later the big vic-toria carried the same two men back again to the White House, but this time it was President Wilson who sat upon the right with ex-President Taft at the left.

It has been estimated that about one hundred thousand people witnessed the actual ceremony of the inauguration. For an inaugural crowd it was an unusually quiet and orderly one. On many similar occasions the President's speech has been delivered to an accompaniment of laughter and chat-ter and cracking peanuts from those who were be-beyond the range of his voice. This time, however, a remarkable quiet pervaded the crowd during the actual ceremonies. During the wait for the inaugu-ration to start the crowds were kept from becoming impatient by small detachments of West Point cadets and sailors who marched about on various duties. The east front of the Capitol was bril-liantly decorated and every point of vantage was occupied, from the edges of the sloping roof to the great stands about the court of honor.

It was ten minutes past one when the inaugural party came from the Senate Chamber to their places on the special stand. Mr. Wilson sat at the right of President Taft, while Mr. Marshall took his position at the left. As the different well-known legislators and officials appeared they were greeted with rousing cheers by the crowd. Champ Clark, William J. Bryan and a number of others came in for this expression of the crowd's approval.

The Chief Justice Administers the Oath

Just in front of the Presidential platform Gen-eral Wood and his staff kept a space clear. On one side were lined the cadets from West Point and on the other those from Annapolis. On a platform erected especially for them, just across the open space, were ranged over a hundred cameras and moving-picture machines, all focused on the point where the retiring President would pass over the dignities and responsibilities of his office to the new choice of the nation. At 1:34 o'clock Chief Justice White stepped forward and the inaugural party arose. The crowds cheered wildly. Presi-dent-elect Wilson seemed to be almost overcome with emotion. He drew himself to his greatest height and as he raised his hand to take the oath of office a hush fell on the great throngs—even those who were far beyond the sound of the voices. The Chief Justice impressively repeated the oath of office and Mr. Wilson's strong, clear "I do" rang out over the crowd so that it was heard at a sur-prising distance. Deputy Clerk of the Supreme Court James B. Maher then opened the Bible at random and held it for President Wilson, whose lips touched, as he kissed it, verses from forty-one to forty-eight of the One Hundred and Nineteenth Psalm:

Let thy mercies come also unto me, O Lord, even thy salvation, according to thy word.

So shall I have wherewith to answer him that re-proacheth me: for I trust in thy word.

And take not the word of truth utterly out of my mouth; for I have hoped in thy judgments.

So shall I keep thy law continually forever and ever.

And I will walk at liberty: for I seek thy pre-cepts.

I will speak of thy testimonies also before kings, and will not be ashamed.

And I will delight myself in thy commandments, which I have loved.

My hands also will I lift up unto thy command-ments, which I have loved; and I will meditate in thy statutes.

This ended the actual ceremony, and President Wilson prepared to deliver his inaugural speech. The crowd had been pressing closer and closer dur-ing the solemn minutes of the taking of the oath of office and the soldiers and police were pressing the crowd back when the President sent an aide to the officer in command with the message that he wished no one driven away from the stand. The officers were surprised at the command but gave way im-mediately. It seemed to take a few seconds for the crowd to realize that the new President was invit-ing them to come forward so that they might hear his message to the people of the nation. When they did realize it there was one joyous whoop and men and women rushed wildly over the intervening space to secure positions as near the stand as pos-sible. The President then delivered the wonderful inspirational address that concludes this account of the inauguration.

An Interested Family Group

In the great throngs that gathered for these out-door ceremonies there were none more interested than the families of the President and Vice-Presi-dent. Just at one side of the inaugural rostrum Mrs. Wilson and the Misses Margaret, Jessie and Eleanor Wilson, the rest of the Wilson family party, and Mrs. Marshall were provided with seats. As they waited for the ceremonies to begin, Mrs. Wilson watched the swaying throngs with great enthusi-asm. She went to the rail and was waving to the crowd when her daughters and Mrs. Marshall joined her.

"Isn't it beautiful?" said Mrs. Wilson as they viewed the crowd, the West Point cadets, and naval cadets from Annapolis, drawn up in review before her.

"Isn't it?" said Miss Margaret. Then, suddenly reminded that she was standing in her chair, high above the heads of all, the magnet for thousands of peering eyes, she exclaimed, "Oh! I am afraid I am too conspicuous up here. Eleanor, come up here with me."

And her sister seized another chair, and she, too, stood up and watched the throng. Then Mrs. Mar-shall stood in her chair, waving to the Vice-Presi-dent.

When Chief Justice White rose to administer the oath and Woodrow Wilson stood with right hand upraised to heaven, the most human touch in the picture of the day asserted itself. The first lady of the land could not see well from her seat. As spryly as a schoolgirl she moved her chair to the side of the rostrum and climbed upon it with the assistance of Lieutenant Rogers, the President's naval aid. Grasping the railing, she stood there, gazing at the President as he kissed the Bible, and she remained standing until his ad-dress was concluded. The Misses Margaret and Eleanor joined her, but Miss Jessie remained sit-ting throughout the address.

The first person to congratulate the President was Mr. Bryan, who stepped forward and with a hearty handshake tendered his good wishes. Mr. Taft was the next. "Mr. President," he said, his face beaming with a broadening smile, "I wish you a successful administration and the carrying out of your aims. We will all be behind you."

"Thank you," said President Wilson. There they stood—Taft, standard-bearer of a party vanquished after sixteen years of power; Bryan, a thrice defeated candidate, accepting a commission from the new chieftain of his party; and Wilson, the man of the hour, and mustering, as he expressed it, "not the forces of party, but the forces of humanity."

Immediately after the inauguration ceremony was over, the carriages drove up and the procession to the White House started. The afternoon was given over to the inaugural parade, which was, by all odds, the finest that Washington has ever seen. It was the longest inaugural parade in the coun-try's history, and it took four hours for it to pass the reviewing stand. It was almost dark before the final marchers had gone by. The first division was made up of troops of the United States regular army and was led by the West Point band. The midshipmen from Annapolis with their band fol-lowed. Regiments of coast artillery, field artillery, infantry and cavalry followed each other in splen-did succession. The President, who has not been a military man, was puzzled more than once to inter-pret the various flags borne by some of the troops. Several times he looked to Colonel Crosby, his aide-de-camp, for a guiding glance as to what flags he should doff his hat for.

New Secretaries in Jolly Mood

The President was not the only perplexed one, and the new secretaries of the army and navy made considerable sport with one another over the passing troops. Secretary Daniels started it by teasingly asking Secretary Garrison, "Mr. Secre-tary of War, what body is that?"

"That's the Seventeenth United States Infantry," replied Secretary Garrison, quick as a flash. "You can't ask me anything I don't know about the army. Wait till the navy comes along."

Sure enough, when the first regiment of marines marched by, Secretary Garrison turned back to his confrère and shouted:

"Now, Daniels, who are these?"

Secretary Daniels hesitated a moment and then called back evasively:

"They? Why, they are the saviors of the nation."

President Wilson smiled broadly as he heard that. He smiled, too, when the Second Battalion of United States Field Artillery passed with rattling wheels and clanking chains and grim guns and gun carriages trailing behind.

"Those are the barkers," he said to Colonel Crosby at his right.

The second division of the parade was made up largely of militia detachments from various States, in many instances led by the governor of the State. Pennsylvania, New Jersey, Massachusetts, Georgia, Maryland, Virginia and New York were all repre-sented by splendid bodies of their State troops. The third division of the parade was led by the ca-dets of St. John's Academy, New York, and of the Carlisle Indian School. The Culver Military Acad-emy cadets, three hundred strong, came next, and were followed by the veterans of the Civil and Spanish Wars. The civilian organizations which now passed in the growing dusk made the fourth and final division of the parade. Various State political organizations made up the largest part of this section. Fifteen hundred Tammany organiza-tion men from New York City made a striking note of color, as they were all dressed alike and wore white silk hats and carried silver-headed canes. They were preceded by about seventy real Indian chiefs in full regalia of feathers and war paint. Chief Hollow Horn Bear led this little detachment, and as he passed the President's stand, exclaimed dramatically, "White father, white father, white father!"

The college organizations brought up the rear of the procession. Princeton led and came in for rousing cheers from the crowds. The University of Virginia lads marched to the tune of "Auld Lang Syne" and were followed by the students from Georgetown University and North Carolina Uni-versity. It was now practically dark and the presi-dential party returned to the Executive Mansion for dinner. After dinner all secured positions from which the gorgeous display of fireworks could be appreciated. The vast crowds of visitors kept Washington awake and merry until away into the wee small hours of the following morning before they went to bed, calling it a fine inauguration.

The Inaugural Address

In his address Mr. Wilson referred first to the change in government which had taken place, and stated that it signified a real change in the plans and point of view of the nation itself. He declared that "we have been refreshed by a new insight into our own life," and, after commenting upon the greatness of that life, in its material and moral phases, continued:

"But the evil has come with the good, and much fine gold has been corroded. With riches has come inexcusable waste. We have squandered

Easter!

EASTER!

We are apt to associate Easter too exclusively with Jerusalem and with an event nearly two thousand years in the past. Read Pierre Loti's story of his Easter experience at Jerusalem among the people who were trying to make themselves conscious of the presence of Christ by going to the place where he was slain and to the tomb from which he rose.

Here is another story, not of Jerusalem, but of New York; not of two thousand years ago, but less than twenty-five.

A young business man in the leather district, almost under the Brooklyn Bridge and within a stone's throw of Franklin Square, was pacing a loft in his factory, alone, and in great distress of mind. He was more than an everyday business man; he was an earnest Christian worker. After a genuine conversion he had received a mighty Pentecost, but burdens and fears and distresses had crept back into his soul. The glory of the great experience had grown dim. Having had a radiant vision of the Saviour, he had lost the vision again. Terrible fears of death tormented him. Lonely, sad, downcast, he paced the big, desolate room.

Suddenly a voice sounded in his heart:

"Why seek ye the living among the dead?"

Then, the man has many times declared, it seemed that Jesus himself came to him and that together they walked the factory floor. It was not at Jerusalem; it was not on the road to Emmaus; it was not nineteen centuries ago. It was in New York—and yesterday. Together this man and Jesus walked and talked in that loft of a factory on a busy street. The man's trouble was absolutely gone. It has never come back. And the Christ of Easter has used him to lead multitudes of souls to the light and has made him one of the founders of a nation-wide organization which has blessed many communities of America and sent missionaries to the foreign field.

"Why seek ye the living among the dead?"

This is not an isolated case. The results in this man's case were extraordinary, but every day, every night, the Christ of Easter is appearing to men and women who need him and will welcome him. Under the clatter of the elevated trains on the Bowery, in the missions of many cities, in church, in field, or shop, or bedchamber, in strange towns and strange villages or amid strange desolation in foreign lands, people are meeting Christ.

"I know that ye seek Jesus," said the angel to the woman. So is every soul seeking him, who is not now in glad and conscious fellowship with him. Many do not know that it is he they seek, but it is. That strange hunger of the soul, that vague restlessness of mind, is a hunger for Christ. Stretch out your hand, troubled or doubting friend. He will be at your side to clasp it. Speak to him. He will answer. He is not dead. He is not absent. Seek not the living among the dead. Behold him! Prince of Life, Friend of Sinners, Joy of Saints, Hope of the World!

The "High Enterprise"

INAUGURATION Day has come and gone. It was a wonderful spectacle. Hundreds of thousands lined the streets of Washingon, from Capitol to White House, and amidst almost perfect weather, a great multitude witnessed the impressive ceremony of the administration of the oath of office to Woodrow Wilson as President of the United States and Thomas R. Marshall as Vice-President. In his brief inaugural address President Wilson has given to the country an idea of his policy. He touched upon the need of a just and equitable tariff which would not cut us off from our proper part of the world's commerce; the need of a banking and currency system better suited to the country's wants; of an industrial system that should neither hold capital in leading-strings nor unduly restrict the opportunities and liberties of labor; the need of elevating the agricultural interests to the dignity and efficiency of great business undertakings; and the need of safeguarding the nation's health and of lessening, as far as may be, the hard struggle for existence which so many have to face.

But beyond and above all these, the address was a summons to the nobler spirit of the republic, an appeal to the national conscience, an exaltation of the highest ideal in public service. Probably not since Lincoln's day has a truer or sounder note been heard from an Executive. Instead of the platitudes, the glowing promises, and the professions of loyalty to which we are accustomed in inaugurals, we have here to deal with a strong, clear thinker—a man with a vision—who grapples with those things that lie nearest to the heart of the nation. It is a great step forward to reach the conviction that right and justice should be put above all other considerations, and to confess that in our struggle for greatness and prosperity we have sometimes forgotten the early standards that inspired our forefathers, and which were the true source of all the real liberty we now enjoy. In solemnly dedicating the new administration to the service of the people, the President kept this clearly in view as the "high enterprise of the day," in carrying forward which he welcomed the aid of all honest, patriotic, progressive citizens.

President Wilson assumes his new task with the best wishes of the country and the earnest prayers of all good people that he may be divinely guided in the fulfilment of his work. Intellectually, he is the peer of any who has occupied the chair of Washington. He comes to the work at a time when a strong, moral, honorable, patriotic Executive is needed, with courage to do right and to check the forces of wrong. In his vision he has had a glimpse of the great possibilities that are open to an administration which deals with its tasks, not in the narrow ways of politics, but on the broader plane which seeks the good of the whole. It is a great trust the people have committed to him, and we pray that he may be made strong and wise and fearless for his work.

Heavenly Citizenship

I AM a stranger with Thee, and a sojourner, as all my fathers were." Thus sighs the ancient pilgrim on life's dreary path. We borrow his sentiment. We were not made to stay here. We are foreigners among the people of this earth. Our citizenship is elsewhere. A band of emigrants, we journey heavenward. We are fellow citizens with the saints, and of the household of God. We have a city here, built with men's hands. We cherish it, as the traveler cherishes the tent that shelters him on his journey. We love our country. We pray "God bless our native land." But neither home n fatherland engrosses our affections to such an exte as to cause us to lose sight of the mansions abo in our Father's house, prepared for us by Jes We know that this world shall pass away, and the glory thereof shall wither as a frail wild-flow The lust of the flesh and the lust of the eyes and t pride of life must not deceive us with a false sh of their worth and permanence. These things a crumbling fixtures in a doomed house. And th are cheats with which the foolish are enticed their ruin. Our citizenship is in heaven, fro whence also we look for the Saviour, the Lord Jes Christ. We have the promise of a home in a ci fair and high. Jesus has said: "Where I am, the shall my servants also be." Our faith looks wis fully ahead to catch the first glimpse of Jerusale the golden—the true Canaan toward which tho are tending who have quit the bondage of sin in t Egypt of this world's oppressions. As the ha panteth for the water brooks, so panteth my so after thee, O God. My soul thirsteth for God, f the living God: when shall I come and appear b fore God?

Heavenly Father, we come before thee, thankin thee for thy untold mercies and asking thy pardo for all our offenses against thy holy law and for ou feeble faith in thy holy Gospel. Thou hast fixe before us a bright goal in the glorious kingdom o thy Son. Suffer us not to perish on our wa thither. When we falter or faint, revive us wit thy right Spirit, and guide us into the way ever lasting, for the sake of Jesus Christ our Lord Amen.

What Do You Think of It?

IN VIEW of the present discussion concerning revival methods and "the decline of evangelism," we submit the following statistics of a recent revival there, taken from the Citizen of Columbus, Ohio, and forwarded to us by a subscriber who attended the meetings, as an interesting and timely exhibit:

Total converts	18,333
Offering for evangelist	$21,000
Collected for current expenses	$19,187.81
Collected for charity	$2,381.55
Collected for women of evangelist's party	$1,115.55
Total collected in campaign	$44,432.68
Tabernacle meetings	96
Total attendance	825,000
Average attendance per meeting	8,593
Sunday sermons in tabernacle	93
Children's cards (included in total converts)	3,224
Babes cared for in nursery	1,884
Total converts on last day	2,189
Revival opened	December 29, 1912
Revival closed	February 16, 1913

We make no comment on this, preferring that pastors, evangelists and our readers generally should do their own thinking and form their own conclusions. If any one raise the question "Does evangelism pay?" here is the answer. It "pays" one evangelist at the rate of nearly two hundred thousand dollars a year, which will prove (to some minds at least) that "godliness is profitable." With these figures as a basis, conversions cost something less than $2.50 per head. With such remarkable results in view, may we not look forward to the creation of an evangelistic trust in the near future? We do not doubt that souls were won, that evil resorts were closed and that churches were revived and strengthened, though in what degree the latter may be true must yet appear. What we submit for serious consideration is the suggestion of commercialism which this tabulated epitome conveys. In a spiritual sense, if we may accept its claims, it eclipses Pentecost, and puts the work of all the great revivalists of the past in the shade!

Moody had two peculiarities: he would never permit his photograph to be taken if he could help it, and he invariably declined to make any personal effort, on platform or pulpit, to stimulate the financial end of his Gospel enterprises.

And now, once again we ask: "What do you think of it?"

Livingstone's Centennial Celebration

ONE hundred years ago to-day in the little Scotch village of Blantyre was born a babe destined to become one of the most conspicuous and potential factors in the scientific, moral and religious history of modern times. David Livingstone came of good stock on both sides of the line. He was honored with obscurity and enriched with poverty. His parents were so poor that he was compelled at the age of ten to enter the factory as a piecer to help support the family. The boy had an insatiable thirst for knowledge. He spent a part of the first week's wages for Ruddiman's Rudiments of Latin, and pursued the study of that language with ardor for many years at night school. At sixteen he knew Virgil and Horace well. It was the atmosphere and tuition of a devout Christian home that made Livingstone great. The thirty years of as beautiful service as was ever rendered by mortal, the thirty thousand miles of travel opening up the Dark Continent, freeing slaves and purifying the people, can all be traced to the vital piety of that humble Scotch home. It was the appeal of Gutzlaff for China that led Livingstone to become a missionary. He set himself for his medical preparation at the University of Glasgow and worked in the mill vacation time to pay for his education. It was through the influence of Rev. R. Moffat, who afterward became his father-in-law, that the young medical missionary selected Africa as his field of labor. He did his work for God by travel, by geographical discovery, by fighting social wrongs, and by the blazing light of a noble life that illuminated darkest Africa. He made three principal journeys from 1841 to 1856, from 1858 to 1864, from 1866 to 1873. He added to the known part of the globe about a million square miles. He discovered Lakes Ngami, Schirwa, Nyassa, Moero, and Bangweolo, the upper Zambesi and many other rivers, and made known the wonderful Victoria Falls. In this centennial celebration the universal Christian Church rejoices in one hundred mission stations stretching across the continent where Livingstone found none. The greatest thing Livingstone gave Africa, or the world, or the centuries, was the simple, modest, Christly life. In Westminster Abbey there are few memorials oftener looked upon, or with intenser affection, than the slab bearing this inscription, "Brought by faithful hands over land and sea, here rests David Livingstone, missionary, traveler, philanthropist." The centennial celebration was a happy thought; it will inspire the hearts of the young with enthusiasm at the mention of the heroic deeds of this ideal missionary, the Christly man, and will be a challenge to the universal church to redouble its diligence in continuing his gigantic task of redeeming Africa. Of him the words said by another missionary hero can be truthfully employed:

I have fought a good fight, I have finished my course, I have kept the faith; henceforth there is laid up for me a crown of righteousness, which the Lord, the righteous judge, shall give me at that day. (II Tim. 4: 7, 8.)

Sleighing on Sea Bottom

THE newest invention in connection with diving is the submarine sledge. This is towed by a motor boat, and the diver, sitting comfortably in a shelter, is drawn along the sea bottom and is able to steer the vehicle both vertically and laterally. To the right and left of the driver's seat are tanks connected with a compressed air supply in cylinders. As long as the cylinders are filled with compressed air the sledge and driver float on the surface. When the diver wishes to descend he discharges from the tanks air which is replaced by water, or he may depress the elevator rudders at the bow. To return to the surface the diver raises the elevation rudders or forces the water out of the tanks with compressed air. The air-regenerating apparatus on his back contains a telephone set connected with the towing boat. This mastery of the depth of the sea seems almost as miraculous as the scene the prophet pictures:

Thou didst walk through the sea with thine horses, through the heap of great waters. (Hab. 3: 15.)

Pensions for Mothers

THE world is moving at so high a speed toward human betterment that one has to be swift-footed to keep up with it. In caring for the weak and helpless and those trodden down in the roadway of life, marvelous progress has been made in a generation. The idea of pensions is gaining ground rapidly; pensions not only for public servants, but for the aged, for faithful employees, for teachers, etc. Pensions for mothers are being provided by some States, and may be adopted by many others in a short time. Mothers who are poor and have no one to provide for them receive a monthly allowance so that they may keep their little ones in an unbroken band, and it is claimed that such a plan is far more economical than to give the children out to public institutions of benevolence, and that this sort of help is also in the interest of the morals of the children and the happiness of all. Illinois and Colorado now have State-wide mothers' pension laws, while in Kansas City, Mo., and in Milwaukee, Wis., provision has been made for their respective localities. It is likely that the laws will be enlarged to extend to the whole States of Missouri and Wisconsin. It looks as if it would not be long before mothers' compensation laws would be adopted by California, Iowa, Ohio, New York and Massachusetts. Such a proposition has strong advocates in Minnesota, Michigan and Tennessee. Mothers' pension bills have been introduced into the legislatures of Washington, Indiana, and Utah. It is a beautiful and just thing for the State to lift a portion of the heavy burdens that fall upon motherhood, especially when the husband is taken away by death or worse than death. It is an evidence of the progress of a good civilization as well as the expression of a genuine Christianity when society as well as the individual obeys the injunction:

Bear ye one another's burdens, and so fulfil the law of Christ. (Gal. 6: 2.)

Self-Punishment

A MAN in Los Angeles who had been well known and highly respected was arrested on a charge of forgery the other day, and in the desperation of remorse put out both of his eyes, saying he did not believe in suicide, but he deserved the severe punishment he inflicted and felt easier in mind than for a long time. It was a foolish, a wrong thing for the man to do. A strong resolve never to commit such a crime again, to make restitution, and an earnest prayer to Christ for forgiveness would have given a lasting peace to his mind. Remorse is a cruel thing for this or the next life. It is not necessary to endure it longer than to read with faith these words:

Though your sins be as scarlet, they shall be as white as snow; though they be red like crimson, they shall be as wool. (Isa. 1: 18.)

Mutterings of Mount Vesuvius

FOR some time Mount Vesuvius has been rumbling, and considerable alarm has been caused by the fear that an eruption might take place at any time. New cracks and fissures are to be seen and a great mass of basalt has rolled down the steep slope, contrasting against the white snow. Professor Morcelli, director of the observatory, and his assistant, Professor Mallada, have made an ascent of the mountain, and Professor Mallada descended into the crater, which has been dormant since the eruption of 1906. He found it filled with snow, and the lower strata showed no signs of melting, which indicates that the zone of the fire is some distance below the bottom of the crater and that the public may cease its alarm for the present. It is inevitable that the activity of the volcano will be resumed, but the professors think not sooner than from five to twenty years. The earthquake and the volcano were counted the expressions of the power of the Almighty.

He looketh on the earth, and it trembleth: he toucheth the hills, and they smoke. (Ps. 104: 32.)

GOD OVER ALL*

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON BY DR. AND MRS. WILBUR F. CRAFTS

WE HAVE had a quarter's lessons on Beginnings: the beginning of light, when God said, "Let there be light," and light was; the beginning of day and night, when God divided the light from the darkness; the beginning of the sky and the sea, when God divided the waters from the waters, and then there was water above, the sky; and waters below, the sea; the beginning of vegetation, when God commanded the earth to bring forth grass and herbs and trees; the beginning of lights, when God set the sun and moon and stars in the sky; the beginning of bird life and fish life, when by God's command the waters brought them forth; the beginning of animals, when God said, "Let the earth bring them forth"; the beginning of man, when God said, "Let us make man in our own image"; the beginning of the Sabbath, when God rested from all his work; the beginning of sin, when Adam and Eve were persuaded by Satan to disobey God; the beginning of salvation, when God promised that Satan should be bruised; the beginning of punishment of man, when Adam and Eve were forced to leave the Garden of Eden; the beginning of murder, when Cain killed his brother Abel; the beginning of God's covenants with man, when he designated the rainbow as the sign and seal; the beginning of God's chosen people, when he called Abram out of Ur of the Chaldees; the beginning of wickedness in cities, as in Sodom and Gomorrah; the beginning of man's perfect faith in God, when Abraham was willing to offer up his son Isaac at God's command; the beginning of resurrection, when Jesus Christ rose from the dead.

In reviewing the foregoing points in classes of young children, it will be well to show in turn the pictures of the large Bible Picture Roll, for nothing so helps the memory of a child as a picture. In classes of boys and girls from eight to twelve years of age, it would be a good plan to write (with a typewriter, if possible) on numbered cards the points made, one on each card. These should be given to the scholars on the Sabbath before the review, and each one should be requested to come prepared to say something about the matter on his card, or at least show a picture connected with it. In conducting the review with older scholars, the One Hundred and Forty-eighth Psalm should be read and considered in connection with the quarter's lessons.

The oldest thing in the world is light, but not the light of the sun. The glory of God shone upon chaos and penetrated it, and so from the beginning God was the Light of the World. "Existence forth from chaos, before time was—Thou from the gulfs of eternity didst call forth—And eternity before the birth of ages—Thou didst found in thyself; by thyself self-constituted—Of thyself, self-shining—Thou art the light from whence light streamed. Creating all things by thy single word—In thy new creation stretching out—Thou wast, thou art, thou shalt be."—Derzhavin's Ode to God.

We are reminded of a marvelous painting made a few years ago in Washington of the Lord Jesus Christ. The artist was not aware of anything unusual in his painting, but going one evening into his studio in the dark to get something he had left there by mistake, he was amazed to see the picture of Christ glowing with light emanating from it. It impressed him as supernatural, but that did not prevent him from a thorough investigation of the paint he had been using, a part of which was still on his palette. He thought he might find some element of the nature of phosphorus. Other artists were called in to help in the investigation, but still the picture glowed in the dark and did not reveal its secret. Then the picture was placed on exhibition in a darkened room, and the public was invited. We went, of course. The portrait stood out as if illuminated from behind, but we were permitted to walk all around it, as close as we could without touching it. The closest scrutiny of it revealed nothing to us concerning the light, and only served to impress us with its exceeding beauty.

THE LIGHT OF THE WORLD

From the painting by Holman Hunt, O.M.

The mystery still remains, but greater far is the fact that he is the Light that lighteth every man that cometh into the world.

How wonderful the sea which God created! It is a mirror which reflects heavenly truths to our minds and hearts. It is God's vastness and grandeur. From the deck of a vessel in mid-ocean, one looks up, and a voice within cries, "If I ascend into heaven, thou art there." You look down into the waters, and the voice cries, "If I descend into the deep, thou art there." Look abroad at the unbroken expanse of waves, and the voice whispers, "If I take the wings of the morning and dwell in the uttermost parts of the sea, even there shall t hand lead me, and thy right hand shall uphold m Our God is no pocket idol, no national hero, but God broader than the sea, and yet he dwells every meek and contrite heart.

"To measure the ocean deep—To count the san —Might be in the power of lofty intellect—F thee there is nc number or measure;—Powerle are the enlightened spirits—Though born of T light—To explore Thy decrees—So soon as Thoug dares to mount to Thee—It vanishes in Thy ma esty—As a passing instant in eternity."—De zhavin's Ode to God.

John saw God's mercy as a shoreless sea when cried, "Behold what manner of love the Fath hath bestowed upon us." That dying Christia saw it thus who whispered, "Oh, the ocean, oh, t ocean, oh, the ocean of the love of God!" And sim lar thoughts we may have as we gaze into the fat omless sky overhead with its cloud pictures, whi mirror the loveliness of God, and at other tim the wrath of God in thunder tones upon evildoer

And God set the sun and moon and stars in th sky.

"As sparks are showered forth and rush away- So suns are born from Thee.—As on a bright frost winter's day—the spangles of hoarfrost sparkle- So whirl, flash, shine—The stars in gulfs beneat Thee — Millions of kindled luminaries — Flo through infinity; Thy laws, they operate—Pou forth revivifying rays—But these fiery lamps- Whether piles of ruddy crystals—Or a boilin throng of golden billow—Others glowing—Or a alike worlds of light—In thy presence are as nigh before day."—Derzhavin.

A little child lay in its crib and sobbed becaus it was afraid of the dark. The father in the roor below heard the sobs, and came up to the side of th crib, and took the child in his arms, and carried i downstairs, and out into the summer night. "Oh father, what are those lovely things?" asked th child, as she looked up at the stars, seeing them fo the first time. "There are stars," said the father "those are God's little lights." "But why have never seen them before?" she asked. "Because yo are a very little child, and have never been out i the night before." "Can I see the stars only a night?" asked the child. "Only at night, my child." "Do they only come then, father?" "No they are always there, but we cannot see then when the sun is shining." "But, father, I am no afraid of the dark here." "No, child, the dark ness is always beautiful, if we will only look up a the stars instead of into corners. The Bible tells us that the darkness and the light are alike to God and we shall fear no darkness if only we think about him."

THE PILOT PSALM

The Lord is my Pilot, I shall not drift.
He lighteth me across the dark waters;
He steereth me in the deep channels,
And he keepeth my log.
He guideth me by the Star of Holiness for my own name sake.
Yea, though I sail mid the thunders and tempests of life
I will dread no danger; for thou art near me.
Thy love and thy care, they shelter me.
Thou preparest a harbor before me in the homeland of eternity.
Thou anointest the waves with oil; my ship rideth calmly.
Surely sunlight and starlight shall favor me on the voyage I take,
And I will rest in the port of my God forever.

JOHN H. ROBERTS.

And green grass and herbs and trees appeared at the word of God. And long ages afterward men took branches of palm and waved them as banners, and laid them in the way, and hailed Jesus as the Son of God. But all fruitful trees and all cedars,

OUR SUNDAY SCHOOL SUPERINTENDENTS' ROUND TABLE

—PLEASE TELL WHAT is meant by the "organized class" in the Sunday school.—T. L., Evansville, Ind.

The organized class has in addition to the teacher a president, secretary, and treasurer, all three of these being members of the class. Individual classes, in any grade above the primary, are thus formed into social groups. This is done for the purpose of developing friendships, and as a way to provide proper games and amusements. Many Sunday school classes have their own ball teams, athletic clubs, etc., and as a means for education some classes have courses in stenography, bookkeeping, etc. For the purpose of assisting in the benevolent work of the church, one class of young men for one year took entire charge of all the poor families in the church. A class of young ladies conducted a "crèche," where mothers could leave their babies while they were attending church. The organized class is specially good for boys beyond ten years of age, because they are possessed of the "gang spirit." If the Sunday school does not organize them, they are only too apt to organize themselves into an outside club which is difficult to control. The several organized classes of a school can be brought into harmony by having definite plans of benevolent work to which the organized classes can contribute out of their class treasuries.

"I WANT TO THANK you for rendering me such great help on the question of reviewing Sunday school lessons."—M. P. S., Brooklyn.

We will say further that Review Sunday ought to be made a Parents' Day, and appointed to be held in the church audience room. In this way there would be room for all parents, who should receive special card invitations to be present. R. S. V. P., four letters put in the lower left-hand corner, meaning "Answer if you please" perhaps it would be best to give the English form—would place upon parents the responsibility of giving heed to the invitation. Let Review Day be made a time for showing the parents what their children have learned. It would do much to bring about co-operation between the home and the Sunday school. It would add much to have the church decorated with flowers.

—"OUR SUNDAY SCHOOL is in the country, and all our scholars are country children. I would like any advice you could give me. Sometimes I hardly know what to do with so many restless children."—Mrs. L. W., Virginia.

Restlessness in children is like unused steampower; of course it makes a noise. It is heard when being rushed off from an engine standing still on the track. Depend upon it, restless children can not be made quiet by chiding, or by command; the difficulty will only be increased; they will become more restless. Give them something to do. Teachers might learn much in this line from the book Handwork in the Sunday School, by Littlefield (to be obtained through any bookseller). But an alert teacher can plan to have slates or pads of paper with pencil for use in the class by the scholars; or paper to fold. If the children are of the kindergarten or primary age. A sand map with pasteboard figures to place in position as the lesson proceeds will be both interesting and useful. On no account should a teacher do all of the talking. It is a physical impossibility for children to sit still and listen to a teacher. They must move, and it is up to the teacher to make plans to do things that are in order, and helpful to the understanding of the lesson. This applies to city children as well as to country children. It is said that "some boys are very restless and hard to handle while others are reciting." To this we would say: Do not have long recitations by individual scholars, and never have recitations in the order in which the scholars sit, so that they can count "their turn." It will help to keep them attentive not to know when they will be called on. It is well to have frequent recitation in concert by the class, in low tones, so as not to disturb those sitting near. In this way not only will all be interested, but they will be helped to understand what is being said.

DAILY MEDITATION

FOR EVERY DAY IN THE YEAR

BY REV. J. H. JOWETT, D.D.

SUNDAY, March 23. I Corinthians 15: 12-22. "Now is Christ risen from the dead, and become the first fruits of them that slept." Through his resurrection our own is assured. In Christ we see through death! Death becomes transparent. We gaze upon the other side. Death is not a terminus: it is a thoroughfare. Life does not finish in endless night, it goes forward to bright morning and endless day.

What manner of man ought I then to be? How shall I plan my life? How shall I build? Boats that are intended for little, land-locked waters are of one build. Liners that are purposed for the great deep are of quite another build. Lives that are built for three score years and ten are of one design. Lives that are built for eternity are of quite another design. I must build for the ocean, and not for the river: not for the creek but for the infinite!

I must, therefore, do my daily duty as a child of the Eternal. My purposes must be such that I can carry them through the narrow straits of death into the "endless life" beyond. "If ye then be risen with Christ," shape everything for the infinite.

MONDAY, March 24. Genesis 2: 4-17. "And the Lord God planted a garden . . . and there he put the man whom he had formed." Man was placed at the very crown of creation, and at the head of all things strong, and sweet, and beautiful. And his Maker purposed that nothing more noble and graceful than he should be in the garden. He should have a strength before which the strength of the beasts would be subdued. He should have a glory before which the beauty of the flowers would be almost eclipsed. His spirit should have a joy and a music before which the songs of birds would be only the first findings of melody. He was to be supreme in the garden! He was to be only "a little lower than the angels," and "crowned with glory and honor."

How is it now? Are we at home among beautiful things? Does our presence add a still greater glory to glorious things? Is a garden incomplete without man? Do we add new music to the sounds of nature, and manifold graces to her handiwork? Or has man lost his crown? Is he a discord in creation? Do the flowers put him to shame? Does a sunset reveal his moral poverty and squalor? Is he still "a little lower than the angels," or has he thrown away his crown? Let me thus question my own heart.

TUESDAY, March 25. Genesis 3: 1-12. Noble liberty always has its boundaries. Our movements in the garden of Eden have their limits: there is a forbidden tree. Unlimited liberty is license, and it destroys the health and discipline of the soul. It is always the devil's purpose to persuade us that fine freedom has no fence, and that we have the right to do anything and everything, and to go anywhere and everywhere. His offer is—life without a hedge or a wall: no trespass-boards: life as open as a prairie!

Thus he tempts us with freedom of speech. "You have full liberty! Prohibitions are only fictions! Your lips are your own! Say what you like!" But God says, "Thou shalt not bear false witness." And again he says, "Speak the truth in love." But we listen to the tempter, and we resent our restraint, and we give way to gossip, scandal, cunning, and falsehood.

Thus he also tempts us with freedom of thought. "It doesn't matter what you think so long as you don't speak it! Just think as you please!" But God says, "Whatsoever things are true, think on these things!" And we listen to the tempter, and we throw open the door of our mind to every comer, and we allow any unclean visitor a place at our table. So is the sin of Eden repeated to-day.

WEDNESDAY, March 26. Genesis 9: 8-17. "My bow . . . shall be for a token of a covenant between me and the earth." The rainbow is the shining token of God's good-will. It comes in the time of cloud and falling rain. The sunshine is flung upon the rain and transforms its dulness into amazing splendor. And this bow is the token of God's holy sunny grace which is ever waiting to mingle with all our rainy, tearful experience, with all our gray seasons of commonplace, and with the cold, cloudy days of disappointment and bereavement. Yes, God is always willing to send his sunshine upon our rain! "My heart leaps up when I behold a rainbow in the sky."

I will, therefore, seek to remember that every dull road may have its holy light. Every task may have its halo. Every scrub by the wayside may burn with sacred flame. Every grim workshop may have its shrine. Every sick-chamber may have its temple lamp burning. Every grave may have its angel of the resurrection!

The rainbow spans my life in all its varied relations. God's holy law is never separated from the holy grace. "There was a rainbow round about the throne."

THURSDAY, March 27. Genesis 12: 1-9. "I will bless thee, . . . and thou shalt be a blessing." God creates the spring and thus creates the river. He blesses us and we are able to bless. "We love him because he first loved us." Our lives become influential when they are joined to the fountain. "Out of him shall flow rivers of water." The reason why so many of us have no holy influence is because we have no sacred springs. Nothing flows out because there is nothing flows in! Our river-beds are dry because we have no "early and latter rains." We are unable to bless because we are not blessed.

Now Abram was to receive a blessing because of his obedience to the divine call. We always find our springs in the ways of obedience. God has no fountains in the unholy fields of transgression. But as soon as we turn our feet to answer his call the springs of his grace gush forth in our souls and we are divinely blessed. And when he sends life we can enliven, when he sends grace we can be gracious, when he sends love we can love. Yes, the spring makes the stream. "I will bless thee, and thou shalt be a blessing."

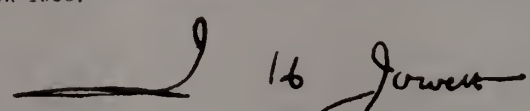
FRIDAY, March 28. Genesis 13: 1-18. Abram's pilgrimage was marked by altar-fires, blazing shrines of renewed consecration. We could almost have followed his track by his altars. We should have missed them in Egypt, and there he fell into moral disaster. But they are to be found again on the way of recovery. There is one burning just before the dispute broke out among the herdsmen. Abram was ready for earthly difficulties because he was in intimate communion with God. When strife arose he was in the mood in which peace is born. His ordinary habits prepared him for extraordinary occasions.

Lot was no altar-builder. We have no record of his way being lit up with sacred fires. No altars marked his journey to Sodom. He had such a tight grip of the world that he lost his "touch" of God. He was so "keen" that he lost his real discernment. When difficulties arose he settled them in the court of selfish ambition, and not in "the holy place of the Most High." He coveted "the rich plains of the Jordan": he ignored the rich benedictions of God. Lot only built "barns": he built no altars. He "increased in goods," he lost the blessing.

SATURDAY, March 29. Genesis 15: 5-18. God promised Abram a great inheritance, but it was not to come without conflict and tears. The road to it lay through affliction and pain. And so it is often with God's covenanted blessings. They are given to us at the end of a stiff and difficult road. God's blessings demand power of appreciation, and these are often attained only through discipline and sharp experience. The promised inheritance is sure. but God wants us to get the best out of it: and so there is often a preparatory waiting while our powers are being matured. "He waiteth in order to be gracious."

The Lord who promises the inheritance thus prepares us to receive it. He presides over the processes as well as over the ends. The period of waiting is not spent in orphanhood: we have the companionship all along the way. Our discipline never implies our abandonment. God is not only in the promised land of Canaan: he is in every step of the wilderness that leads to it. We have the blessings of preparation, guiding to the blessing of final inheritance.

These Daily Meditations will appear in each issue through 1913.



We Met Nine Skeptics

One day last December

Nine men who said that baked beans tasted all alike to them.

We sent out and bought 15 kinds of baked beans. And we served all without labels, including a can of Van Camp's.

Each of those nine picked the dish he liked best. And all picked the same dish without knowing who baked it.

That dish was, of course, Van Camp's.

Nine Million Men Would Do It

Any nine men, or nine million men, would reach the same conclusion.

For no other baked beans, in zest and flavor, even resemble Van Camp's.

Compare them yourself and see

Van Camp's BAKED WITH TOMATO SAUCE PORK AND BEANS

"The National Dish"

Van Camp's are picked-out beans, ripe, plump and even-sized.

They are baked in steam ovens, so they come out nut-like, mealy and whole.

The tomato sauce is baked with the beans—a sauce made of whole, vine-ripened tomatoes.

Van Camp's come to your table with the fresh oven flavor.

And able chefs, for years and years, have devoted their skill to this dish.

Just for curiosity, try these beans tomorrow. See what wins men to them.

WHAT IS "TRUE CONVERSION"?

THE OPINIONS OF FOUR PROMINENT PASTORS ON THIS INTERESTING TOPIC

DAVID JAMES BURRELL, D.D. REV. D. H. STEFFENS REV. WALLACE MACMULLEN REV. FREDERICK SHANNON

THIS week we present a second group of letters from well-known pastors on that absorbing topic, What is "True Conversion"? As in the first instalment of this symposium, wide ranges of thought are both covered and suggested by these definitions and opinions.

"Conversion a Right About Face in Religion and Ethics," Says Dr. Burrell

The word "conversion," in its religious sense, is defined by Webster as "a change of the ruling disposition of the soul involving a transformation of the outward life"; and by Stormonth as "a change of heart evidenced by a new course of life and love to God." But, as Christians, we turn rather to the Bible than to the dictionary for the meaning of the word. It is there used in three ways:

First, as an active transitive verb. Hebrew shub, meaning "to turn back." Ps. 19: 7, "The law of the Lord is perfect, converting the soul." Greek epistrepho, meaning "to turn about." James 5: 19, "Brethren, if any of you do err from the truth, and one convert him; let him know," etc.

Second, in the passive: Ps. 51: 13, "And sinners shall be converted (shub) unto thee." Also Isa. 60: 5, "The abundance of the seas shall be converted (haphak) unto thee." In Greek strepho, meaning "to turn." Matt. 18: 3, "Except ye be converted," etc. Also epistrepho, meaning "to turn about." Matt 13: 15, Mark 4: 12, John 12: 40; Acts 28: 27, "Lest they be converted," etc. Luke 22: 32, "When thou art converted, strengthen the brethren." Acts 3: 19, "Repent, therefore, and be converted," etc.

Third, as an intransitive verb: Hebrew shub. Isa. 6: 10, "Lest they should see with their eyes and hear with their ears and understand with their heart and convert and be healed."

The Scriptural use of the word, as thus indicated, must define its meaning for Christian people. If the foregoing references be put together they will lead to certain conclusions.

First, conversion is a reversal of one's natural attitude toward God, toward Christ who reveals God, toward the Cross by which the sinner is reconciled with God, toward all the great verities which center in God, and toward the Bible, which is our inspired, exclusive, ultimate and trustworthy authority respecting all things pertaining to God. In other words, conversion is a "right about face" as to religious truth and ethics: as in the case of Saul of Tarsus, who after his conversion loved the things which he had previously hated, and devoted his life to the service of Christ, in whom he had before seen "no form nor comeliness that he should desire him."

Second, conversion is an act of the sinner himself in co-operation with God. He is represented as converting himself (Isa. 6: 10) as well as being converted by the Spirit of God. This is consistent with all the teachings of Scripture as to the sovereignty of the human will. Man alone, of all the orders of life, is able to cross the benign purposes of God; he alone has power to violate the laws of his own being as well as divine law; he alone when God says "Thou shalt" can answer "I will not." For this reason his moral disposition can only be reversed with his consent. The prodigal was "converted" when he left the far country for home; but, despite his father's love, he would have continued for life in his rags and hunger had he not summoned resolution to say, "I will arise and go."

Third, conversion is more than a transient resolve to live a better life. It is a true saying that "hell is paved with good resolutions." The trouble with most resolutions is that they are made without any reference to our dependence on God. A good motto is that of the old Saxon knight, "Will, God and I can." Our turning is never "right about" unless God and our will co-operate. When the two work together a man is warranted in saying "I can!"

Fourth, conversion is not regeneration. The latter is exclusively the work of God. But we are clearly given to understand that whenever a sinner "converts" or turns about, God straightway regenerates him. He thus becomes "a new man in Christ Jesus." He passes "from death unto life" (John 5: 24). There is no more possibility of condemnation for him (Rom. 8: 1). He sees the kingdom of God and enters by its only gate (John 3: 1-5).

Fifth, the conclusive sign of both conversion and regeneration in any individual case is faith in Christ as the only Saviour and very Son of God (John 3: 16-18).

"Conversion Is Sorrow for Sin and Faith in Christ, Followed by the New Obedience," Writes Rev. D. H. Steffens

The writing of a strictly theological definition of "a true conversion," ponderous in thesis and antithesis, buttressed with proof texts and quotations, is a comparatively simple task. It has been done a thousand times throughout the centuries by theological teachers of every shade of belief and unbelief. So why do it again? To me, the interesting thing is this: All of these answers to this very simple question may be grouped under two heads, as they are given by Martin Luther or the Pope, by the Scriptures or the wisdom of men, by divine inspiration or by some form of philosophic thought. They make their appeal either to faith or to the understanding. They inevitably come back to the question which Erasmus selected for discussion when he desired to please the Pope by writing against Martin Luther without too much offending the great reformer, "the freedom of the will," the same question which Henry Drummond discussed in the chapter on "Biogenesis" of his Natural Law in the Spiritual World.

Assuming tht we desire to accept the Scriptural answer to this question, "What is a true conversion?" it will be well for us to remember that our definition is apt to be colored by our own individual religious experience. God does not deal with men en masse. Having regard for the sacred dignity of the individual as created by him, he "takes him apart from the multitude." There is in the religious experience of every man something apart, something individualistic, something between him and his God alone. If the answer is to be given by the religious experience of the individual, then it is to be feared that there will be as many definitions of true conversion as there are truly converted men, with the further danger that each man will insist upon making his own religious experience the measure of every other man's, utterly forgetting that in all unity there is endless variety, and that no genus can be defined by describing a single species.

To me it is deeply significant that the Holy Spirit should have recorded for our instruction in one chapter of the Acts the very different religious experiences of two very different converts, Lydia and the Philippian jailer. Their close juxtaposition almost compels comparison and study. With all outward difference determined by the character of the two converts and the circumstances of their conversion, the quiet, simple dignity of Lydia, the overwrought emotionalism of the jailer, the meeting for worship at the river-side, the shaking foundations and opening doors of the prison, the two conversions have this in common: sorrow for sin and faith in Jesus Christ. Both are wrought by the Holy Spirit working through the Word. It is the Lord who opens the heart of the jailer as of Lydia to "attend unto the things which were spoken of Paul," thereby working in them contrition and faith. This was their conversion. Its fruit and evidence was Christian kindness and well-doing, gracious, matronly hospitality on the part of Lydia, and eager solicitude for the well-being of his prisoners on the part of the jailer. Both experienced a "change of heart." The Holy Spirit sanctified their emotions, enlightened their understanding and directed their wills. They were turned around—converted.

As we compare their experience with that of other converts described in the Scriptures—the Samaritan woman, the Ethiopian eunuch, the apostle Peter—we always find these two things: sorrow for sin and faith in Jesus Christ, followed by the new obedience. Conversion and repentance are thus the same thing. Let us therefore simply say with the Augsburg Confession: "Concerning repentance it is taught, that those who have sinned after baptism, may at all times obtain the forgiveness of sins, if they repent; and that the church should not refuse to grant absolution unto them. And genuine and true repentance properly consists in feeling contrition and regret, or dread on account of sin; and besides in having faith in the Gospel and assurance that the sins are forgiven, and that through Christ grace is obtained—a faith which again consoles and pacifies the heart.

"Afterwards improvement of conduct should also follow, and abstinence from sin; for these should be the fruits of repentance, as John says, Matt. 3: 8, 'Bring forth fruits unto repentance.'"—From Art. 12, Newmarket Edition. D. H. STEFFENS.

"Conversion the Tap-Root of the Tree," Says Pastor F. F. Shannon

Conversion is the tap-root of the tree of Christian life. As a single sunbeam contains the seven primary colors, so conversion contains, in embryo, all the fruits of the Christianized soul. As birth comes before growth, so conversion comes before all permanently vital spiritual attainments. Attempting to live the Christian life without a thoroughgoing conversion is as incongruous as tying apples onto a branch of the tree. Apples must come through the vital processes, if they are worthy of the name. The Christian graces cannot be tied onto a soul. They must be born in, grown in, vined in by the Holy Spirit. We are laboring to-day under the burden of a misplaced emphasis. We have forgotten the center to whirl aimlessly about the circumference of Christianity. Conversion is the center; service is the circumference. A true center in Christian teaching and living makes a glorious circumference.

"Conversion Is to Reject Sin and Choose Christ as Saviour," Writes Rev. Dr. MacMullen

To reject all known sin, to choose Christ as Saviour and Lord, to receive his guarantee of acceptance is to be converted. In the life which issues from that, God is real and there is a quality and a service which make it easier for other people to believe in [illegible]. WALLACE MACMULLEN.

THE SUFFRAGE DEMONSTRATION IN WASHINGTON

THE great woman suffrage parade in Washington on the eve of the inauguration of President Wilson was attended by some disgraceful scenes on the part of mobdom and rowdyism, while the police remained inactive, making no effort to suppress the surging crowds of hoodlums that broke up the ranks of the women on their march through the capital. The passiveness of the police authorities encouraged the rowdies and doubtless the pageant would have had to be abandoned had not a detachment of the Fifteenth United States Cavalry rode to the rescue at full gallop and turned their horses against the jeering, hooting, clamorous insulters of the procession. A body of marines also assisted in dispersing the disturbers and the parade was enabled to continue its way along the streets, between tens of thousands of onlookers who jammed the sidewalks, many of them cheering the intrepid marchers as they passed.

The parade was probably the most ambitious yet attempted by the suffragists in this or any other country. There were fully ten thousand women in line, and with their bright dresses and many-sided arrangement of colors and flowers they presented an impressive appearance. They marched, too, with the precision and steady step of grenadiers, as if they had been trained with military exactitude for a full dress parade. What gave them great encouragement on the march was the participation in the procession of a score or more Senators and Representatives who had been won over either through wifely or sisterly persuasion, or perhaps through a sense of what they consider as duty in granting the same privileges to women as they claim themselves.

Those lawmakers who took part in the pageant promised to bring about an investigation of the disgraceful affair and the remissness of the police to do their duty in suppressing the rowdyism and transgression of the law. The matter is likely to be brought before Congress and the responsibility placed where it belongs. After the procession disbanded, what was to be a suffrage meeting in the general campaign for the cause was turned into an indignation gathering in Memorial Hall, at which fiery speeches of criticism were delivered, and resolutions passed calling for a Congressional investigation, and asking President Wilson to give his attention to the matter. There were hundreds of men in the audience who cheered the speakers, and promised them support in having their grievance brought to the right quarter. From the very beginning of the march, which started from the Peace Monument at the foot of Capitol Hill, there was trouble and annoyance from hostile onlookers, who indulged in indelicate allusions, flung facetious remarks, or made stinging comments on the leaders of the procession. Some of the more inexperienced of the women shed tears at the jibes and insults hurled from the sidewalks. At times the marchers had to fight their way and were not able to make ten blocks in an hour. It was not, however, until Pennsylvania Avenue was reached that the climax of hoodlumism manifested itself. There toughs and nondescript rowdies rushed into the procession, broke up the ranks and separated the marchers into stray detachments. Only for the timely arrival of the squad of cavalry, the women would have been compelled to seek safety in flight. When protection arrived they bravely fell into rank again and finished the march at the Ellipse in the rear of the White House lot.

Interesting features of the procession were many tableaux and floats bearing allegorical representations. Both the coloring and grouping were beautiful and dramatically displayed the symbolization of woman's aspirations for political freedom. Despite the regrettable rowdyism which marred it the parade was a success. The greatest ovation was given "General" Rosalie Gardner Jones, the little woman who led her band all the way from New York to Washington over rough roads, through snow and wind and rain, with a courage that many men, not to speak of women, would find it hard to emulate.

Among the Workers

ARRANGEMENTS HAVE been concluded for bringing Gipsy Smith to the Evangelistic Conference at Winona Lake, to be held during the coming summer.

—EVANGELIST SUNDAY is now in the closing weeks of his mission in Columbus, Ohio. One of our readers in that city writes that over 8,000 have made profession of conversion.

DURING THE LAST year the Moody Bible Institute of Chicago distributed 370,000 copies of the Gospel of St. John. In the nineteen years of its existence it has sent out 2,328,702 Bibles, Testaments and Gospels; 2,120,000 Gospels of John, and 3,245,713 tracts.

PASTOR M. N. POPOFF, of Samokov, Bulgaria, is about to undertake an evangelistic tour of the Balkans. He will write to any one who may address him at Samokov. The pastor visited the United States several years ago. He is a member of the Evangelical Society of Sofia.

MRS. E. E. COLE, of Conesus, N. Y., writes, including some lines composed by her mother, a dear old Christian of eighty-six years, who has lately lost her eyesight. She has been many years a reader of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, and now she has to have it read to her by another. One of the verses is as follows:

"Twenty years I have read your pages—
Read them o'er and o'er;
Treasured up their truths as precious—
God bless THE HERALD evermore!"

has happened? Mrs. Carter came in to see me a few minutes ago; she only stayed a minute, but she came to tell me that she is coming for us to-morrow, with her new machine, and—yes, Davie-Boy, she's going to take us to Easter service!"

The boy felt himself turning suddenly to ice. Never in all of his careful planning for her had such a possibility occurred to him. The little red house was so far away that "mother" had almost no callers, and it had been easy for him to fill her dreary hours with his gay little deceptions. She did not wait for him to reply.

"I asked her to cut the carnations and take them with her to save you the trip over. And just think, Davie-Boy! I'll see them myself this time. And at last I'm to see the little church that I built in memory of father, on Easter Day. There will be the prayers all together, and real music. Oh, little son, I wonder if I'll be able to stand the joy of seeing and hearing a real church choir again, marching in as they used to do in father's big city church. When they come in, it seems to me that father will be so near to me then that I shall hardly be able to bear the happiness of it!"

Still Davie-Boy said nothing; it seemed to him that he would never be able to speak again in all his life. His mother's rapt voice went on:

"I was reading in the paper just before Mrs. Carter came, about the grand service that the big Trinity Church in the city is going to have to-morrow. A choir of fifty voices, some of them famous singers whom they have sent away for, and who will make the musical service one of the finest the city has ever heard. But all that wouldn't be any more wonderful to me, Davie-Boy, than being able to go to our little service here in the mountains."

Davie-Boy got up at last and slipped away, murmuring something about the kitchen fire.

In the middle of the afternoon the rain stopped and Davie-Boy saddled the horse and started off to the station, as usual, for the paper. He never failed to go for it, for it was the one link that bound the red house to the wide outside world. He made a long detour in his trip this time and took the road that led past the church. In all his fifteen years of life his soul had never felt so full of misery. He hitched his horse, and stepped softly in at the open door.

The decorating was all done. There was no one about. For a moment he stood gazing at the pitiful festoons of evergreen and the one brave vase of white carnations on the pulpit. Then, with a wild sob, he fell upon his knees before the altar. "O God!" he cried, "I know it was a sin, but I only did it to make her happy. Don't take Easter time to punish me in. And don't punish me in any way that will hurt her too. Oh, send some miracle to help me, God. Send some miracle."

He repeated the last words of the prayer over and over to himself as he rose and stared about the bare building. "I wish they hadn't had quite so many miracles while Christ was on earth," he sighed. "I wish they could have been spread out over time more. Seems to me people need miracles more now than they ever could have needed 'em then."

He turned suddenly and stole away, unable any longer to endure the sight of mother's carnations lonely and cheerless upon the pulpit.

At the porch door he almost ran into a man who was shaking his umbrella. "Why, Davie, you here? Have you been decorating?"

Davie-Boy looked up quickly, and the misery in his eyes made the man's expression change swiftly.

"Why, what is it, David? Your mother isn't—?"

Davie had never felt that he knew the young rector well. He only came to hold services in the little church a few times a year, and the boy had never before talked to him alone. But that note of sympathy in his voice was too much. Almost before he knew it he was in the midst of his story. "She mustn't come!" he finished wildly. "She mustn't come!"

The rector laid his hand on his shoulder. "She must come," he said gently. "It will be wonderful."

They turned back into the church. For half an hour they talked together, sitting in the rough pine pew where mother would sit to-morrow. When at last they stood again outside the little church, the rector was speaking in his low, kind voice. "Your mother loves this church because it is the house of God," he said, "and because she built it in memory of your father. Those two things are what she will be thinking of to-morrow."

"I'll tell her," Davie-Boy promised wearily. "Yes, I'll tell her to-night." Then he went down quietly and untied his horse.

When, a few minutes later, he arrived at the station, he saw a crowd collected about the waiting-room, but he only glanced casually at them. It must be the Carters' automobile again. The through train, bound for the city, was in; some of the passengers were walking restlessly up and down the platform. Without heeding them, Davie-Boy made his way to the window for the paper.

"Guess this is the last one you'll get for some days, sonny," the postmaster told him. "Storm's washed away half a mile of track between here and the city."

Davie-Boy accepted the news quietly. It was only one more catastrophe in a horrible nightmare. He was almost grateful for the destructive weather. It was beyond his responsibility.

"There won't be any more papers for maybe a week, mother," he announced, as he came into the dining-room after he had finished the night chores. She accepted the news quietly. as he had known that she would, and after a moment of anguished silence he plunged into the midst of his confession. In broken, incoherent fragments it came out. No one but mother would have understood the meaning of the disjointed sentences, but Davie-Boy knew that she understood even though he could not look at her.

He stopped at last, abruptly, as he had begun, and a silence fell between them. "But the church is there, Davie-Boy?" mother said at last in a half-fearful voice as though she dreaded his answer.

"Yes," he answered dully, "the church is there and—that's all."

"And the flowers that I sent," she added eagerly, "they'll be there." A vision of them swam before Davie-Boy's eyes; a pitiful little cluster of brave blossoms on the pulpit. "Yes, there are—some flowers," he admitted.

She changed the subject then, and they tried during the evening to talk of other things. But that night after she was in bed, Davie-Boy came in and knelt down on the floor beside her. "Do you—have you forgiven me, mother?" he asked wistfully.

Her arms tightened about him. "Of course, Davie-Boy, and God will forgive you too. But never feel that you have to lie to save me from pain, dear. Sometimes, for a while, it may seem to be right, but in the long, long years of life it never really saves any one pain."

That night Davie-Boy lay staring into the darkness pondering her words, and struggling with a mighty question. He could not put his stalking doubts to rest. "How do people know when God has forgiven them? How can they be sure?"

Mother's forgiveness was such a sure, such a satisfying thing; he could hug it to his heart. In the little church he had prayed for a miracle—a miracle that would help him to escape from a hard confession—and in its place had come the rector, pointing with unwavering finger toward duty. Was that the way God answered prayer? "If he would only send me some sign to let me know that he has forgiven me!" he cried. "Everybody will be happy and glad to-morrow. Everybody but me!"

He was up early the next morning; there was much to do, and he had no desire to lie staring any longer into the dark. He did the chores mechanically, almost drowning the tall brown hen under lavish handfuls of wheat.

It was quarter to eleven when the Carters' machine, mud-splashed, but still showing streaks of red, rolled up to the door. Carefully Mr. Carter carried mother out and placed her gently on the broad back seat. She was so radiantly happy that Davie-Boy wondered if she had forgotten all about his miserable confession. "But where is Mrs. Carter?" she asked, as he climbed silently in after her.

Mr. Carter smiled as he cranked the big machine. "She went down to the church early," he answered. "She and the rector had some little things to attend to before the service."

It seemed to Davie-Boy that that first ride in an automobile was the most miserable experience he had ever endured. It went so fast and brought them with such merciless speed to the bleak little church.

Very close to the door Mr. Carter drove, and while two neighbors helped mother up the steps, he turned suddenly to Davie-Boy. "Buck up, son," he said; "it's Easter; the day of miracles."

Davie-Boy smiled wanly and followed mother, a cushion under each arm.

At the door he stopped, amazed. The walls were covered with greenery; soft, feathery greenery such as he had never seen before. Along the altar rail were banks of white carnations, long-stemmed, wonderful. But mother's vase still stood upon the pulpit. The chancel! At sight of it, Davie-Boy dropped both cushions and grasped the back of the nearest pew. They were lilies, real Easter lilies such as he vaguely remembered to have seen in a city church. From tall vases they nodded at him. The chancel swam before his eyes. Blindly he felt his way to the pew where mother sat waiting for him with shining eyes. She squeezed his hand as he fell on his knees beside her.

"It's a miracle!" he whispered hoarsely.

Suddenly the little melodeon began the hymn and the congregation rose. Still Davie-Boy knelt, afraid to look up. Then upon his ear burst a strain of music, carried by many voices. Mother was whispering to him to stand, and he almost staggered to his feet.

In at the door walked a tall, strange man, and behind him walked in stately procession a surpliced choir. Davie-Boy felt himself growing weak as he looked. But the last figure in the procession steadied his nerves. It was the young rector, his spiritual face aglow with the message of the resurrection.

Throughout the service Davie-Boy sat spellbound, mother's hand clasped tight in his. When at last it was all over, and he went out to the machine to place the cushions, he found Mr. Carter in conversation with the strange, tall man of the choir.

"Yes, it's been a great experience," the stranger was saying. "When we first heard that the train couldn't go on, we were all terribly upset, for we've had this engagement with Trinity for months. But it couldn't be helped, and the way your rector put it up to us—he's a man, isn't he! Why, he worked here half the night too, helping with the flowers. They're from Fontinelli's Nursery and were marked "Rush!" but that wouldn't get them over a half mile of washed-out track. A telegram sent round by the Gap made all the rest possible.

Mr. Carter nodded. "Old Trinity must have looked pretty bare to-day," he mused, "but when they hear about this they'll say it's the best Easter offering they ever made."

Davie-Boy was only half conscious of the words. A great peace flooded his heart, and over and over to himself he whispered, "Easter Day, and God did send me the sign."

Why Millions of Stockings Don't Need Darning

Thousands of mothers in thousands of homes have thrown away all of their darning material. For a million men, women, children and infants are now wearing "Holeproof" Hose.

We absolutely guarantee every six pairs for six months' wear. If even a thread runs in any pair, you get a new pair free. Don't you think them worth while, since they are as soft as any hose in existence?

FAMOUS Holeproof Hosiery FOR MEN WOMEN AND CHILDREN

Let the children play on their knees. If they wear through "Holeproof" in six months, send the stockings back and get new ones free. That is all there is to it. You are freed from darning, and the little ones' hose always look neat as a pin.

We use only Egyptian and Sea Island cotton yarn in these wonderful stockings. We pay for it an average price of 74 cents a pound. Common yarn sells for 32 cents. But our yarn is long-fibre, three-ply, and soft. It combines strength, light weight and comfort.

We maintain at the factory an inspection department that alone costs us $60,000 a year—just to see that each pair of these stockings is perfect. As we cannot afford to replace many pairs, we see that they have no flaws.

Buy six pairs of "Holeproof" stockings to-day. See how they are wearing six months from to-day.

"Holeproof" in cotton, for men, cost from $1.50 to $3 a box of six pairs. For women and children, $2 to $3 a box of six pairs. For infants, $1 a box of four pairs. All the above boxes guaranteed six months.

Silk "Holeproof" for men, $2 for three pairs. For women, $3 for three pairs. Three pairs guaranteed three months.

The genuine "Holeproof" are sold in your town. We'll tell you the dealers' names on request, or ship direct where there's no dealer near, charges prepaid, on receipt of remittance.

THE MIRACLE OF EASTER

BY EBEN E. REXFORD

BRING lilies fair wherewith we may adorn
The dear Lord's altar on this Easter morn—
e, spotless flowers, each one a cup abrim
h incense that the winds shall waft to him
o on that morn of mornings, through the gloom
t hung its pall of darkness round the tomb,
e like a sun that drives the night away,
l gladdened earth on that first Easter Day.

the white lilies by the altar tell e story that befits their lips so well:
w, when the autumn days were drear and cold,
ey died—or seemed to die—and in the mold eir graves were made, and we, who loved them so,
eved o'er their loss; and when the drifted snow
l the dead leaves that strewed their lowly bed, mourned them, and would not be comforted.

rough the long winter with its bitter frost
e flowers slept on whose lives we counted lost;
t by and by, when spring came o'er the hills,
d loosed the fetters that had bound the rills,
And warm, sweet winds blew up and down the land,
The flowers we missed sprang up on every hand,
And we saw God, in awed, glad wondering,
Repeat the earth-old miracle of Spring.

Then faith took wing, and, larklike,
soared and sang,
And through the gates of heaven the glad song rang—
There is no death! What seemeth so is sleep.
The grave is like a cradle, warm and deep,
Wherein earth's weary children rest and dream
A little time. Then comes the morn-ing's beam,
And they awake, as do the flowers in spring,
To new, sweet life and perfect blossoming.

Lift heavenward, soul, the eyes by doubt made dim.
Thy Lord is risen! Thou shalt rise like him.
Each soul's a flower, and from the earth's green sod
It grows to bloom in gardens of our God.
Be glad, be glad! In strains exultant sing
That death has lost the venom of its sting
Since Christ our Lord, who died for love of men,
This Easter morning lives with God again.

NDUSTRIAL SAVINGS AND LOAN INVESTORS

HE following has been sent out by the New York State Banking Dertment for the benefit of investors the Industrial Savings and Loan mpany and the New York Mort-ge Company:

"When the Industrial Savings and an Company of New York City iled last June with approximately ,500,000 of liabilities, there were e thousand shareholders located at ints in many States. Attempts ere being made by persons appartly representing the old officers or her real estate promoters to induce areholders to trade their claims for ares in new real estate propositions.

"Upon the attention of Superintend-t of Banks George C. Van Tuyl, Jr., ing called to these attempts, he ated that they were similar to hemes by which sharpers and adnturers had been able to prey upon e unfortunate victims of failed in-itutions from time immemorial.

"As soon as a moneyed corporation placed in liquidation, men willing speculate in the misfortunes of oths obtain from former officers and nployees as correct an idea as is pos-ble of the actual value of the claims, nd also obtain lists of the claim-
nts. Glib-tongued agents are then em-loyed, who go from house to house anvassing the claimants, and telling hem that their claims are practically worthless, but that they, or the persons whom they represent, have some special means of realizing upon them and are therefore willing to transfer some very valuable shares or other property for them. By this means the unfortunate depositors or shareholders have been frequently induced to exchange their claims for shares hardly worth the paper on which the certificates are printed. The department has investigated some of the present schemes, and, so far as can be ascertained, none of the trades proposed seem to be advantageous to the shareholders of the Industrial Savings and Loan Company.

"While from the very nature of the assets of the Industrial Savings and Loan Company, the superintendent says he cannot at present state even approximately the amount that would finally be paid to shareholders, there was no doubt that the shares had a substantial value and that he would certainly advise claimants to hold their shares rather than go into schemes of which they knew nothing except what was told them by the suave solicitors who were endeavoring to induce them to part with their holdings. He hoped at the very latest to be able to pay a first dividend to shareholders in the Industrial Savings and Loan Company some time next fall."

MOTOR CARS

Made in Chalmers Shops

"Pigs Is Pigs"

Likewise, also, "automobiles is automobiles." But in breeding either for the market, quality counts. It doesn't pay to run a poor machine any better than it does to breed "razor-backs." High class stock, and high class motor cars are cheapest in the long run.

The Chalmers "Thirty-Six" is built for practical men who want absolute dependability, ample power, durability, and economy of operation—who want all the substantial, solid qualities—for the man who sticks to standard breeds but will not pay for fancy markings.

You can depend on the Chalmers, winter and summer, on hills and on levels, on macadam and in mud. It will never balk, kick, or lay down. It has big wheels, strong axles, rigid frame, a sturdy steering gear, and is built to stand rough work. But it has the lines and finish of a thoroughbred—its strength is symmetrical. It has the style for Fifth Avenue and the stamina for the mountain road.

Note some of the features of the 1913 Chalmers cars:

Electric lights, Turkish cushions, nickel trimmings, improved springs. Chalmers self-starter, long stroke motor, 4-forward speed transmission, and many other refinements and improvements.

THE EASTER LILIES

O GOLDEN-HEARTED lilies,
Abloom in splendor rare,
To hearts bereaved and lonely
A message sweet ye bear
Of hope, and strength, and comfort,
A blessed, healing balm,
Till lift the grief-stilled voices
Once more a happy psalm
Of life o'er death triumphant,
All glorious and bright,
Through all the earth new-risen,
Aglow with joy and light!

And tear-dimmed eyes look upward
Beyond the grave and know
They are not there, the loved ones,
In anguish buried low.
For life o'er death is victor!
The grave has lost its might!
Since Christ our Lord passed through it,
It shines with fadeless light!
And he his own will quicken;
Our dead with him shall rise
To reign with him forever
Beyond these earthly skies!

Philippi, W. Va. IDA L. REED.

GOD OVER ALL

as well as the humblest plant that grows, have ways all their own in praising their Creator. "I just try to be the best little heartsease I can," said the flower, when some one asked her what good she was to the world.

And all animal life came into being at the command of God. What a lonesome world this would be, lacking these creatures!

"And God said, Let us make man in our own image."

"Thou art! The order of nature proclaims it—My heart tells me the same—My reason persuades me: Thou art; and I therefore am not nothing! I am a part of the universal All,—Established, methinks, in the reverend—Midst of thy Universe—Where Thou hast ended Thy corporal creatures—Where thou hast begun the heavenly spirits—And the chain of all beings is linked to me."—Derzhavin.

If we are created in God's image, then God must be like man, only infinitely greater; and man must be like God, only incalculably less. We think God's thoughts after him, and call them "our inventions." Let us give him all praise for all our good thoughts, for all our wonderful accomplishments; then we shall not become as Nebuchadnezzar, who exclaimed, "See this great Babylon that I have built," and who had to be reduced to the level of the beasts before he would give praise and honor to God (Dan. 4: 25-37). His conclusion at last was: "All whose works are truth, and his ways judgment: and those that walk in pride he is able to abase" (Dan. 4: 37). Cain murdered his brother Abel, and withstood God, and God punished him by making him a wanderer upon the earth. The wickedness of men was great, and God punished them all, except Noah and his family, who alone found grace in the eyes of the Lord, and were saved from the flood, while the rest perished. Abram, being a righteous man, was called by God to leave the habitations of idolatry and journey to a far-away land which God promised to him for his inheritance, and for his children, who should be as many as the stars in heaven. Abram did not disappoint God, but in all things yielded faith and obedience, even willingness to sacrifice his only son Isaac when God seemed to demand it of him.

Grant us thy truth to make us free
And kindling hearts that burn for thee;
Till all thy living altars claim
One holy light, one heavenly flame.

OLIVER WENDELL HOLMES.

AN AGED READER'S GREETING

I am in love with THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. I like the tone and spirit of the paper. It is a help spiritually. I have the pretty roses you offered last year, and have been giving them water this morning. I love flowers and good reading. Don't fail to hold up the standard of Bible holiness. Don't gloss over the experience of heart purity and sanctification. I am now in my seventy-eighth year, and rejoice in full salvation. MRS. S. J. WHITNEY.

NO IRONING

Ripplette—the all-the-year-round cotton fabric—has won its way into the homes of the American people probably faster than any other cotton fabric that ever went onto the market. The principal reason for this is that it requires no ironing and, consequently, saves labor.

It is a practical fabric for the clothing of every member of the family—from the little fellow with rompers, tiers and dresses, to the mother with house dresses, street dresses, kimonos, petticoats and other underwear.

Its splendid wearing qualities and its fast colors recommend it to every practical woman.

15 cents a yard, 28 inches wide.

Ripplette Bed Spreads are made from Ripplette especially adapted for spreads, and can be kept perfectly fresh with little effort, as they require no ironing and are light in weight. They are made in sizes to fit all beds, with plain hemmed and scalloped edges—both corner-cut and straight. They come in solid white and in striped effects in pink, blue, lavender, green and yellow. They are the same on both sides, giving twice the service before washing is necessary.

Important. Because of the genuine economic value of Ripplette many substitutes are on the market. There is only one Ripplette cloth and that is ours. If you buy a made-up garment don't accept it as genuine unless it has a Ripplette label inside.

If you cannot get Ripplette at your dealer's send us your name and address and we will send you our book of samples and tell you how you can get just what you want.

y not have some extra gowns and hats this spring? Tha this season are so simple that you can easily make any of at home.

e charmeuse dress you wore last spring can easily be made a gown just as pretty. Dye the material one of the new ng shades.

t down the brim of one of your old summer hats—usa some e silk in the dress and a bunch of flowers for the trimming.

This Gown on the Right

ke your last summer voile dress, dye it a delicate lavender e and trim it with buttons covered with material like the . For a hat to match use any straw, face it with black et, and dye a yard of satin ribbon lavender for the trimming.

Diamond Dyes

rs. R. L. Lea of Boston writes:
"I often wonder why my friends don't have more gowns. Few ses are really worn out and they can always be made over and n new life and beauty with Diamond Dyes. With the aid of mond Dyes I have many extra gowns, waists, hats, collars, etc."

here are two classes of Diamond Dyes—one for Wool or Silk, other for Cotton, Linen, or Mixed Goods. Diamond Dyes for l or Silk come in Blue envelopes. Diamond Dyes for on, Linen, or Mixed Goods come in White envelopes.

re's the Truth About Dyes for Home Use ur experience of over thirty years has proven that no one will successfully color every fabric.

here are two classes of fabrics: animal fibre fabrics, and etable fibre fabrics.

Wool and Silk are animal fibre fabrics. Cotton and Linen are etable fibre fabrics. "Union" or "Mixed" goods are 60% 80% Cotton—so must be treated as vegetable fibre fabrics. egetable fibres require one class of dye, and animal fibres ther and radically different class of dye. As proof—we attention to the fact that manufacturers of woolen goods ona class of dye, while manufacturers of cotton goods usa entirely different class of dye.

Do Not Be Deceived

For these reasons we manufacture one class of Diamond Dyes coloring Cotton, Linen, or Mixed Goods, and another class Diamond Dyes for coloring Wool or Silk, so that you may ain the very best results on EVERY fabric.

REMEMBER: To get the best possible results in coloring tton, Linen, or Mixed Goods, use the Diamond Dyes manufactured especially for Cotton, Linen, or Mixed Goods.

AND REMEMBER: To get the best possible results in coloring ol or Silk, use the Diamond Dyes manufactured especially r Wool or Silk.

a great part of what we might have used and have not stopped to conserve the exceeding bounty of nature, without which our genius for enterprise would have been worthless and impotent, scorning to be careful, shamefully prodigal as well as admirably efficient.

"We have been proud of our industrial achievements, but we have not hitherto stopped thoughtfully enough to count the human cost, the cost of lives snuffed out, of energies overtaxed and broken, the fearful physical and spiritual cost to the men and women and children upon whom the dead weight and burden of it all has fallen pitilessly the years through. The groans and agony of it all had not yet reached our ears, the solemn, moving undertone of our life, coming up out of the mines and factories and out of every home where the struggle had its intimate and familiar seat.

"With the great government went many deep secret things which we too long delayed to look into and scrutinize with candid, fearless eyes. The great government we loved has too often been made use of for private and selfish purposes, and those who used it had forgotten the people.

"At last a vision has been vouchsafed us of our life as a whole. We see the bad with the good, the debased and decadent with the sound and vital. With this vision we approach new affairs.

"Our duty is to cleanse, to reconsider, to restore, to correct the evil without impairing the good, to purify and humanize every process of our common life without weakening or sentimentalizing it. There has been something crude and heartless and unfeeling in our haste to succeed and be great. Our thought has been 'Let every man look out for himself, let every generation look out for itself,' while we reared giant machinery which made it impossible that any but those who stood at the levers of control should have a chance to look out for themselves."

President Wilson referred to the particular matters which "ought to be altered": the tariff; the banking and currency system; the industrial system, "which," he said, "take it on all sides, financial as well as administrative, holds capital in leading-strings, restricts the liberties and limits the opportunities of labor and exploits without renewing or conserving the natural resources of the country"; agricultural activities, with special reference to their scientific efficiency and credit facilities; undeveloped watercourses; unreclaimed waste places; untended and fast disappearing forests; waste heaps "at every mine." He continued:

"We have studied as perhaps no other nation has the most effective means of production, but we have not studied cost or economy as we should either as organizers of industry, as statesmen or as individuals.

"Nor have we studied and perfected the means by which government may be put at the service of humanity in safeguarding the health of the nation, the health of its men and its women and children, as well as their rights in the struggle for existence. This is no sentimental duty. The firm basis of government is justice, not pity.

"These are matters of justice. There can be no equality of opportunity, the first essential of justice in the body politic, if men and women and children be not shielded in their lives, their very vitality, from the consequences of great industrial and social processes which they cannot alter, control, or singly cope with.

"Society must see to it that it does not itself crush or weaken or damage its own constituent parts. The first duty of law is to keep sound the society it serves. Sanitary laws, pure food laws, and laws determining conditions of labor which individuals are powerless to determine for themselves are intimate parts of the very business of justice and legal efficiency.

"These are some of the things we ought to do, and not leave the others undone, the old-fashioned, never-to-be-neglected, fundamental safeguarding of property and of individual right. This is the high enterprise of the new day: to lift everything that concerns our life as a nation to the light that shines from the heartfire of every man's conscience and vision of the right. It is inconceivable that we should do this as partisans; it is inconceivable that we should do it in ignorance of the facts as they are or in blind haste.

"We shall restore, not destroy. We shall deal with our economic system as it is and as it may be modified, not as it might be if we had a clean sheet of paper to write upon; and step by step we shall make it what it should be, in the spirit of those who question their own wisdom and seek counsel and knowledge, not shallow self-satisfaction or the excitement of excursions whither they cannot tell. Justice, and only justice, shall always be our motto.

"And yet it will be no cool process of mere science. The nation has been deeply stirred, stirred by a solemn passion, stirred by the knowledge of wrong, if ideals lost, of government too often debauched and made an instrument of evil. The feelings with which we face this new age of right and opportunity sweep across our heartstrings like some air out of God's own presence, where justice and mercy are reconciled and the judge and the brother are one.

"We know our task to be no mere task of politics, but a task which shall search us through and through, whether we be able to understand our time and the need of our people, whether we be indeed their spokesmen and interpreters, whether we have the pure heart to comprehend and the rectified will to choose our high course of action.

"This is not a day of triumph: it is a day of dedication. Here muster, not the forces of party, but the forces of humanity. Men's hearts wait upon us; men's lives hang in the balance; men's hopes call upon us to say what we will do. Who shall live up to the great trust? Who dares fail to try? I summon all honest men, all patriotic, all forward-looking men, to my side. God helping me, I will not fail them, if they will but counsel and sustain me!"

AN EASTER SONG

WHAT vivid hues! What varied dyes
Unfold in bud and bloom!
What artist's brush can paint the blush
That's wrought in Nature's loom?

In every seed and bulb which bursts
From 'neath the vernal sod,
Is stamped the seal which doth reveal
The autograph of God.

From crannied cliff, and mountain peak;
Low in the bosky dells;
By purling brook and cloistered nook,
Their same sweet message tells.

Deep in the sunless solitudes;
Along the forest aisles,
Some vagrant flower, mid storm and shower.
In silent beauty smiles.

God willed that they, dumb choristers,
Earth's sweetest songs should sing
Of Him, once slain, who now doth reign
Our own eternal King..

THE REVIVAL AT JAMESTOWN, N. Y.

RECENTLY Evangelist Dr. William E. Biederwolf and his workers closed a very successful campaign in Jamestown, N. Y., the movement lasting through five weeks, and being participated in by seventeen different churches. As a result of these efforts over three thousand persons have professed conversion, and are fast joining the respective churches of the city. In every way the moral and spiritual life of the city has been mightily moved and uplifted.

After this campaign was closed, it was planned by the pastors and Christian workers here to try, with the Lord's help and blessing, to continue the work of ingathering, as it was known that many persons were greatly influenced by these meetings who had not come out with any definite decision for Christ. Right there a thing occurred which the pastors deem to have been in the nature of a decided hindrance to the work. After the close of these meetings, one of the local papers printed the letter from Rev. J. Wilbur Chapman, which appeared in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD of February 5, 1913, the evident purpose being to apply its criticisms to the work of Dr. Biederwolf and his associates. Mr. Alfred L. Furlow, a leading attorney of Jamestown, at the request of several Christian workers wrote a reply in which he stated that he had been identified with the Biederwolf campaign, and that there was nothing "in the quoted article written for THE CHRISTIAN HERALD by Dr. Chapman which in any way reflects upon Dr. Biederwolf and the methods pursued by him."

It need hardly be added that any attempt to apply Dr. Chapman's strictures to Dr. Biederwolf is gratuitous and absurd. Dr. Biederwolf is to-day among the foremost evangelists and has the respect and confidence of the most conservative leaders in Christian work, Dr. Chapman included.

and there, the buds are ready to burst." How tenderly beautiful are the births of the spring, and how manifold are the types of beauty: the oak, the lilac, the daffodil, the crocus and the fern! And when the soul comes into its spiritual springtime, it begins to put on appropriate beauty. "Put on thy beautiful garments." Moral ugliness begins to yield to moral grace, and boorishness passes away and is replaced by the gentleness of Christ. His grace creates graces, and his love makes people lovely. And everybody begins to note that something is happening, because the natural face is being changed. Beauty is taking the place of ashes, and the garment of praise has destroyed the spirit of heaviness.

Now if all these things are characteristic of the spiritual spring, and if these things really exist when the Lord is present, can we say that we are really in the sunshine? "The fruit of the light is love, joy, peace." And all these are superlatively beautiful things. Are they ours, and if they are not ours can we say that we are really basking in the fulness of the heavenly beams? "The beauty of the Lord our God is upon us." Is that the witness of our friends? Is it the testimony of those who dwell with us in our own homes? Or are our dispositions harsh and intolerant, and are we more like a blasted heath than a lovely garden?

Here, at any rate, is what Christ wishes to do for his people. He desires to make springtime where winter reigned. He purposes to turn the wilderness into a garden, and to make the desert rejoice and blossom like the rose.

For Painters

If you want to keep up with the times, ask for a free subscription to "The Carter Times." Every issue is full of good, practical things to help painters do better work and to get more work to do.

The Efficient Paint

We paint to beautify and to protect our property from decay. That paint is most efficient which looks best, wears longest and renders the service at the lowest annual cost. The cost of painting is, roughly—one-third materials, two-thirds labor.

It is then, but a small proportion of the total cost of painting that can be saved by using cheap materials, and as both beauty and durability depend so much upon the materials, it is important that care be used to secure paint that will give efficient service.

Pure white lead and linseed oil are recognized as the standard ingredients of all good outside paint. They possess a peculiar affinity for each other, uniting to form a tough, yet elastic paint film which accomodates itself to changes in temperature without cracking, scaling or peeling.

CARTER

Strictly Pure

White Lead

"The Lead with the Spread" is old fashioned white lead, but being made by a modern, improved process, is whiter and finer and free from any discoloring agencies.

Carter is such a clear, pure white that it has established a new standard of whiteness for white paint and given new life and beauty to colors mixed with it. It is so fine that it has unusual covering capacity and is most economical to use.

An experienced painter will mix Carter White Lead and linseed oil exactly to suit the varying conditions that paint must meet and will color it to any desired shade or tint.

Even figured by the gallon this paint is not the most expensive on the market and when the other tests of paint efficiency are applied nothing will be found that will give more satisfactory service or at lower annual cost.

In asking for any of the helps illustrated, please state whether you are interested in painting as Owner of Property; Architect; Painter or Paint Dealer.

THE GARDEN'S PERENNIAL BEAUTY

BY IDA D. BENNETT

IN ANSWERING the oft-repeated question of what to plant in the way of hardy shrubs, my advice is first to select those plants which most appeal to one's sentiment, either from association or from preference for a particular color or form or fragrance, and secondly to choose such forms as have most to recommend them in beauty of bloom, elegance of foliage and permanence of flower. These qualities, together with entire hardiness, constitute the chief claims upon our attention in this class of flowers.

Much, also, will depend upon the use to which the shrubs will be put. Naturally one will not make quite the selection for the adornment of a summer home which will not be occupied until June or later, when all of the early spring blooming shrubs are out of flower, that would be desirable in an all-the-year-round home. Many of the spring flowering shrubs have ornamental foliaged varieties which may be substituted for the plainer sorts, thus making the grounds attractive throughout the summer. The old-fashioned syringa or mock orange has a golden-foliaged form that masses very finely with dark green shrubs, and there is a wiegelia with a silver-edged foliage that is very good. The purple beech is a beautiful tree at all stages of its growth, but especially fine in early summer. The purple-leaved plum has much the same effect and perhaps carries its color somewhat better throughout the hot weather. If one has a summer home near the sea, then one should plant largely of the graceful tamarix, which stands the salt breeze better than most things, and is beautiful at all periods of its growth, whether in the feathery-green foliage of the entire season, or when clothed with its dainty pink and white flowers.

The new hydrangea, Hydrangea arborescens, is one of the very best of the summer flowering shrubs, coming into bloom late in June and continuing well into August, often meeting its later flowered kinsman, Hydrangea paniculata, which blooms through August and September. Another form of the first-named variety, Hydrangea arborescens sterilis, blooms also through the greater part of the summer and has a rounder ball of flowers, somewhat resembling the snowball. These three hydrangeas require partial shade and suffer severely if allowed to go without water. They make a very strong root growth, which is held close to the surface of the ground, so that the plants are susceptible to changes of temperature and humidity and are much benefited by a mulch in summer. Covering the ground about them with a heavy coat of old manure in the fall and removing only the coarser part of this in spring and, without disturbing the remainder, placing a few inches of good earth over it, supplies an ideal condition for the growth of the plant, as it provides the protection to the roots so essential, and the layer of manure retains the moisture and acts as a mulch. All hydrangeas should be pruned in late winter or early spring, removing at least a third of the last year's growth; this insures stronger blooms and a more compact shrub.

For late blooming one should plant freely of the altheas, especially the light varieties, such as Jeanne d'Arc, alba plena and tota alba. Altheas should be planted in the spring for best results, and not allowed to suffer for water during their first summer, but a deep mulch of old manure or lawn clippings will be found more beneficial than frequent light waterings. Little or no pruning is required by the althea, and that little should be done immediately after flowering, or very early in spring, this being the rule with all late-flowering plants. Spring-flowering plants should be pruned what little is necessary soon after bloom is over in order that they may grow the wood for the next spring's florescence.

For all-the-year-round shrubs there is nothing finer than the various deutzias; indeed, I put them at the head of all flowering shrubs and plant them wherever I can find room for them. Deutzia Pride of Rochester is the finest of the family, but one should plant all the varieties for a succession of bloom. Pride of Rochester grows into a large shrub several feet high, and is covered in June with graceful sprays of large double white flowers, sometimes showing a tinge of pink on the back. A strong-growing, graceful, beautiful thing.

When one can command an unlimited water supply, then the rhododendrons and azaleas may be successfully grown, but it is useless to undertake them where this is lacking. Even with abundant water, they require partial shade and a mulch about the roots to protect them from the hot, dry air. They seldom do well in a lime soil, or where there is much lime in the water used, but where they can be successfully grown their beauty repays the utmost care in their growth.

A quaint conceit for making attractive those shrubs which bloom only in early spring or summer is to plant among their roots some summer blooming perennials.

The rugosa roses and the sweetbriers should be used more extensively in shrubbery planting than they are. The double forms of the former are beautiful, and the foliage distinctive and handsome. The sweetbriers, especially the hybrids of Lord Penzance, are something quite unique in this class of plants, showing many beautiful orange and copper shades as well as the more common crimsons and blush. A few plants of sweetbrier will perfume all the adjacent neighborhood, but in planting these roses they should be given plenty of room to develop in a free and natural manner, and the bushes should not be pruned at all, or only enough to keep them in a not too restricted space. The Austrian or yellow briers are also well worth cultivating.

In the Middle and Southern States one may grow the beautiful Pterostyrax hispida, or Japanese silver bell, but it is not entirely hardy at the North unless in very favorable situations; but the beauty of its fragrant, creamy white flowers is well worth considering. Somewhat similar in its exaction of a favorable location, the cytisus or laburnum, with its wealth of "golden rain," easily dominates the part of the garden in which it grows, and challenges the admiration of all who behold it. It is hardy, growing more thriftily in the North than at the South, but requires a deep, moist, rich soil, and is benefited by a deep mulch during summer.

These are but a few of the many beautiful flowering shrubs available, but I have, in the main, preferred to mention those which I know from personal experience will succeed under the ordinary conditions of plant culture and give entirely satisfactory results with reasonable care.

It must be remembered in planting trees and shrubs that the planting is likely to be permanent and that the soil should be properly prepared before setting the plants. This means that the drainage should be perfect, naturally or by means of undertiling, or even by digging out deep holes and filling in a foot or more of broken stone; the soil should be rich and deep and thoroughly spaded up. Pack earth very firmly about the roots, lifting the shrub slightly so as to allow the earth to settle in between and under each rootlet, and press the whole firmly with the feet, then work the surface soil into a dry dust mulch. Fill the hole with water before placing the last layer of soil, if the ground is at all dry. If wet this will not be necessary. Over all place a mulch of coarse manure or lawn clippings or both.

ANSWERED PRAYERS

A MOTHER at Ithaca, N. Y., tells of special help received in answer to a request for guidance in disciplining a child. "The promise came," she writes: "'Ask and receive that your joy may be full.' I had asked so many times but not received. It then came to me that to receive was a command as well as to ask. I clung to God for help. I felt as though I had then received. I made new resolutions before I slept. Next day there was a great improvement in the child. One or two people happened in who said things that helped me. My prayer for wisdom is being answered."

Together with the many letters which tell of loved ones restored to health in answer to prayer come occasional letters expressing gratitude for special strengthening in times of bereavement. O. L. K. writes from Ericson, Neb.: "God has answered many prayers for me and given me a stronger faith. It was his will that my husband be called home, and he answered my prayers and gave me strength to bear up under grief and sorrow that would have been impossible without his help."

A letter with the sad black border comes from a reader in Tampa, Fla.:

"I have seen frequently in this column letters from people who have had answers to their prayers. So I would like to add my testimony to theirs in the hope that some doubting ones may renew their faith in prayer. Many times during my life God has answered my prayers, and during the last few days, when I felt as though there was no one I could go to in my sorrow, I opened my heart to him in prayer, and already my prayer has been answered, and he has blessed me wonderfully. Let me say to all who may read this, trust in God, and he will always be with you, an ever-present help in time of trouble. What a blessed privilege it is to be able to talk to our dear Saviour, and know he is ever ready to help us, and that his ear is open to our cry!"

M. J. P. writes, from Buffalo, N. Y.: "I am anxious to acknowledge the fact that God answers prayers in most wonderful ways. Very liberally has the writer been blessed with direct answers to repeated, earnest prayers, and it is my desire to make it known." L. M. H., of St. Louisville, O., writes: "I desire to thank God for answering my prayers by restoring me to health, also for the many other blessings he has given me." A Constant Reader from Indiana writes: "I wish to acknowledge God's goodness in answering prayer by sparing the life of one very dear to me."

A grateful daughter, Mrs. E. Q. K., writes from Syracuse, N. Y.: "I wish to call upon Christians everywhere to give praise to God for his marvelous power in bringing my dear mother back from the brink of the grave after her case was pronounced incurable. I consciously yielded myself unreservedly to God and claimed the promise: 'If ye shall ask anything in my name, I will do it,' and he gave me the blessed assurance of faith for her healing. I promised him I would make his goodness known, and do so with great gladness."

Not every prayer for the staying of death's hand can be answered. We and all our friends must go into the dim valley when the last summons comes. But "whether we live, therefore, or die, we are the Lord's." One prayer he never fails to answer:

In life, in death, O Lord, abide with me.

And the petitions rising from our hearts may be summed up in this:

Sweet will of God, still fold me closer
Till I am wholly lost in thee.

Acknowledgments of answers to prayer have also been received from: N. S., Sheridan, Maryland; A Reader, Jefferson City, Tenn.; L. E. H., Guilford College, N. C.; Mrs. M. R., Skagway, Alaska; H. A. H., Cook, Neb.; Mrs. E. M. B., Fountain Dale, Pa.; Mrs. D. A., Ohio; Mrs. E. S. C., Carthage, Mo.; An Interested Reader, Holland, Mich.; Mrs. M. E. R., Galesburg, Ill.; Mrs. K. H. D. Sangerties, N. MARGARET E. SANGSTER'S
Twilight Tales

MARGARET E. SANGSTER
Frontispiece to Twilight Tales

The demand for Twilight Tales has steadily increased since it was first published. A second edition was rapidly taken, and now a third is going fast. If you have not already secured a copy, NOW is the time to get it.

Twenty-four Delightful Stories of Love and Romance

When Buckwheat Bloomed	At Lonesome Ford	The Little Old Lady
Mr. Warriner's Transformation	The Romance of Marcia	Letitia's First Love
A Refrain in Lilies	Mrs. Christy's Beginnings	Sister Hannah
The Patience of Hope	One Easter Day	Barbara Graham
The Saving of Benjamin Ray	Cousin Mary	Golden Sunsets
A Bend in the Road	A Midsummer Meeting	The Peacemaker
The New Pupil	A Little Corner	A Reparation
A Long Lane	The Snowdrop's Message	The Opposite Shore

THERE is a thread of pure gold running through the Twilight Tales from which the reader may divine the author's purpose in writing the book. It is the line of God's protecting love and care which encircles all who trust Him, and the knowledge of which gives to even the smallest detail of everyday life a purpose and significance. She spreads before us the little daily dramas, the heartaches, the disappointments, the sweet surprises and unexpected joys, the separations and the reunions, the cares and consolations of the household, the "journeys that end in lovers' meetings"—all are unrolled like a moving picture, with the vivid action of life itself. Mrs. Sangster has crowded the best heart and soul stories of her whole career into this book. Love, romance, self-denial, ambition and the success that true character commands are here pictured with a fragrant setting of American home-life in town and country.

Questions and Answers

L. M., Utica, N. Y. 1. How many Jews in the United Kingdom? 2. Give the full title of the present king of England.

1. About 250,000; the great majority of these are in London, the remainder scattered through the large cities and towns. Strange to say, Belfast has quite a number, and many of the great stores and manufactories in that city are in Jewish hands. 2. "His Most Excellent Majesty George the Fifth, by the Grace of God King of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, and of the British Dominions beyond the Seas, Defender of the Faith and Emperor of India." This is but his kingly title; he has so many others in virtue of his position in the army and navy and in other capacities that it would require a small book to give them.

L. S., St. Joseph, Mo. Is it a fact that it is harvest time in some part of the world all the year round? What country has its harvest in January? When is it harvest time in China?

Yes, every month of the year has a harvest in some country. In January the crops are harvested in Australia, New Zealand, Chile and the Argentine Republic. The Chinese harvest is in May.

E. C. B., Monroe, Wis. 1. It is nowhere given in the Bible. 2. The passage in I Thess. 4 should be studied in connection with other passages on the subject of the resurrection. Paul was here speaking of the fact that the glory and chief hope of the church are not to be realized at death, but at the Lord's coming. Death is a calm and holy sleep, from which the resurrection shall waken them to glory. Death affects the individual; the coming of Jesus affects the whole body of believers. The teaching of the church is that at the death of the body, the soul, though conscious, has no appreciation of time or space, and the interval between dissolution and the resurrection will seem as it were but an instant. 3. The passage in Eccles. 12: 7 is to be taken in connection with the topic of the entire chapter, which tells of the advance of age and the decay of the mortal frame. In Ecclesiastes the immortality of the soul is dwelt on only incidentally. (See chapter 3: 17-21.) In the language used in the passage you quote, "The spirit shall return to God who gave it," there is an implication of immortality.

W. G. Z., West Branch, Iowa. What did the author mean by the words:

"Let those refuse to sing,
Who never knew our Lord."

Would this not be like a minister's saying: "You who are not Christians, please stay away?"

There is, of course, no such idea carried in the words you quote. It is by no means an exhortation to the unsaved to refrain from singing. It simply means that if they do keep silent their silence can be understood. They do not sing because, so far as Christian experience goes, they have nothing to sing about. They have a reason for not singing; the Christian has none. Explained grammatically this form of the imperative mode, made by using the auxiliary "let," may express entreaty, exhortation, proposal, desire, permission, or command. Evidently the author intended here to express nothing stronger than permission. No one has a right to command an unconverted person to sing Christ's praises; we must permit him to keep silent if he chooses.

E. H. J., Texas. 1. The Congregational Church in America is orthodox, in the general sense of Christendom, holding the Scripture as the only rule of faith and practice; not imposing a creed on its churches, and allowing a latitude in general interpretation which permits a wide variety of opinions. It holds, however, to the main essentials of the Christian doctrine. It uses sprinkling or affusion in baptism, although some churches permit adults to choose whichever they prefer. 2. Apostasy and backsliding are frequent subjects of warning in the Gospels and Epistles. It may be partial or complete. It usually occurs in cases where the work of the Spirit has not been fully completed, and where there has been no real regeneration. Peter backslid, although he was one of the leading disciples; but he repented immediately afterwards. There is a special warning in Heb. 6: 4, 5 against apostasy, which Paul regards as placing the sinner beyond human hope, implying that his restoration must be a supreme act of the divine mercy.

Reader, Texas. There is a young man in this city who gives a tenth of his income to worthy causes; he believes in God and the Bible; he hasn't a single bad habit; he studies and reads all the time; he attends church; he does not waste money and time; does not go to cheap shows nor operas; is a forceful talker in church societies; hates sin and hypocrisy in all its forms; treats people nicely, and yet he claims he is an unsaved young man. Do you believe, should he die in this state, he would be lost? Your views would be appreciated.

Scripture and experience alike teach that it is possible for one to have all the outward marks of religion, yet fail of possessing the real and vital thing. Saul of Tarsus was a most zealous man, trying to do the will of God, but after his conversion he felt that his former life had been very sinful, because he had not submitted himself to the will of God and accepted Christ's righteousness as his own. John Wesley's experience was similar, and countless others of this and earlier days. It must be remembered that it is not outward conduct that makes the real Christian; it is the inner life, the humility, the glad surrender to God's will, the warm love felt for God and for the souls for whom Christ died. The young man of whom you speak evidently understands the true nature of religion better than many church members and church workers of the present day. It is not our good works that save us, but a simple, self-forgetful trust in Jesus. This faith brings the life and love which constitute religion. Christ would doubtless say to this young man: "Thou art not far from the kingdom of God." A simple trust in the death of Jesus as the remedy for his sin, a simple acceptance of Christ to be his righteousness and his salvation would bring him the joy and power of a new life of real sonship of God and fellowship with Christ. See Rom. 10: 1-4; Phil. 3: 3-9.

L. A., Eau Claire, Wis. II Kings 17: 6 says: "In the ninth year of Hoshea the king of Assyria took Samaria, and carried Israel away into Assyria, and placed them in Halah and in Habor by the river of Gozan, and in the cities of the Medes." I do not find any further mention of these ten tribes in the Bible. What became of them?

The king of Assyria here referred to was doubtless Sargon (see Isa. 20: 1). The event was a fulfilment of prophecy (Isa. 7: 7-9; Hosea 13: 16 and Amos 1). Inscriptions on the palace ruins at Khorsabad (mentioned by Layard in his book on Nineveh and Babylon) state the number of captives at 27,280. "Halah" was about a day's journey from Nineveh and "Chabor" is a river in central Assyria, which still retains its name (Khabour) unchanged. "Gozan" (or Zozan) is the name of the Assyrian highlands which afforded plenty pasture for flocks. This was the second and last deportation of the Israelites.

R. B., Renfield, Wis. What is the oldest inhabited city in the world?

Damascus, where still may be seen the "street called Straight" (Acts 9: 11).

H. W., Yarrow, Mo. Is there any Scriptural authority for the existence of denominational churches?

Sects or divisions of the Christan Church were not unknown in earlier days. In the ancient Jewish church there were various sects, and we have evidence in the Epistles of the existence of divisions in the Christian Church in apostolic days, although these became more pronounced later. It is humanly impossible to get all men to think alike in detail on any one topic, however they may agree on essentials. Denominationalism in our day, however, has multiplied beyond all reason and has resulted in the weakening of the forces of Christianity, which, if united, would have made better spiritual progress than under present conditions. Christ wished all of his followers to ultimately become one flock with one shepherd. Now, while each of the divisions may hold to the truth in its teachings, the scattered wings are unable to accomplish what would have been possible for a great united church.

G. J. L. D., Shingle House, Pa. What do we understand by the term "casting lots"? What was used and how?

The word "lot" signifies pebble. The decision by lot, which was often resorted to among the Hebrews, was a mode of divination or ascertaining the divine will in cases of doubt. Several modes were practiced, but as to the precise manner of casting we have no certain information. Sometimes pebbles were employed; at other times inscribed tablets were put in an urn, which was shaken and the lots drawn out. Again, dice were used, and occasionally stones. The lot was resorted to originally among the Hebrews solely as a religious appeal to decide a difficult question; but in a later age it degenerated into a game of hazard, in which, as Josephus the Jewish historian tells us, human life was sometimes the stake.

J. W. J., Elkton, Va. Although before the dawn of Christianity there were nations who undoubtedly had glimpses of a belief in immortality, it was not until Christ came, "bringing life and immortality to light" (see II Tim. 1: 10), that the world began to realize the glorious future which was assured to those that love God and follow obediently the teachings of his Son. The Hindus, Egyptians, Chinese, Persians, and even the American Indians, Polynesians, Australian aborigines and Greenlanders believed in a future life, but all more or less dimly. The ancient Greeks had a clearer conception of immortality, which was well defined by Socrates in his last speech. There are hints of the same belief in the Jewish teachings also, although they are indefinite (see Gen. 5: 22, 24; 37: 35 and other passages). Jesus lifted the veil. Some, to-day, deny the inherent immortality of the soul, while admitting that it is conferred as the "gift of God" upon those who are accepted.

The church of Christ to-day, however, teaches immortality—a future life of bliss or of woe, to be decided at the judgment. The duty of Christians, therefore, is as Paul urges, to strive to win the prize and so to live that they may begin to live eternally here and now, in the realization of God's pardon and acceptance promised through his Son. The author of the book you mention does not teach the Christian doctrine, if his statements be as you have presented them.

L. B. M., Brockton, Mass. Who are the Camp Fire Girls?

The Camp Fire Girls of America is the name of an organization incorporated under the laws of the District of Columbia in March last year. Its object is to apply the power of organization to the promotion of such activities for girls as will most effectually make for physical vitality, personal efficiency, and spiritual and intellectual vigor, as well as to preserve the largest possible amount of beauty, inspiration and romance in their daily lives. The governing law is: "Seek beauty; give service; pursue knowledge; be trustworthy; hold on to health; glorify work; be happy." The watchwords are "Work, Health and Love."

S. M., Lincoln, Me. Is fortune-telling a misdemeanor in the United States? Is it forbidden in England?

In the United States fortune-telling is not prohibited, unless it is made a means of deception and extortion of money. In England any person who pretends or proposes to tell fortunes or who uses any subtle craft, means or device, by palmistry or otherwise, to deceive or impose is punishable under the Vagrancy Act as a rogue and a vagabond.

B. A. B., South Newbury, Vt., writes: "I read your paper with deep interest, especially THE MAIL-BAG. In a recent issue was a request that you say a word about unanswered prayer. What you say is good, truthful, comforting. I am now far in my ninety-fifth year. About fifty years ago I went through a similar experience and drank to the dregs the bitter cup of mental suffering and finally came out on the heavenward side, and according to II Cor. 1: 3, 4 am able to say a word of comfort to others in the same condition as I was. First, let me say their prayer was answered, only it was, 'Dear children, I cannot grant this request; it is not for her or your good.' (See Isa. 57: 1; Rom. 8: 28, and study with care.) I might tell many stories to illustrate this, but I will only tell this: There lived in New England in the last century a godly minister, who had an only son that was everything such a father would love. While in college he was taken violently sick, and near death. The father not only prayed himself, but asked others to join him in praying for the life of this son. He recovered, but very soon developed what was called softening of the brain and soon became an imbecile and lived such a life more than fifty years, and died in a public institution. The teaching of that father was for many years: 'Pray earnestly for such things as you want, but close with "Thy will be done." God is wisdom, God is love, and he hears and answers the prayers of his children. It would be sad if he always gave what they asked."

Miscellaneous

S. E. D., Greendale, N. Y. "Best bib and tucker" is a colloquial phrase, meaning one's best clothes.

T. S. B., Ithaca, Mich. These passages have already been fully dealt with in THE MAIL-BAG in recent issues.

W. H. N., Phillipsburg, Mo. It would require a poll of Congress to give the information desired. Write to the clerks of the Senate and House of Representatives.

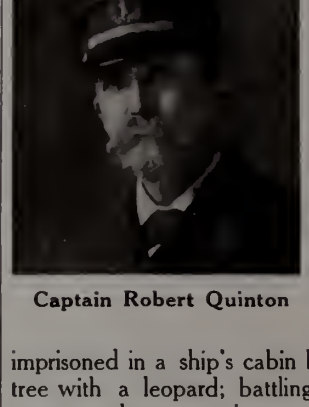
W. R. E., Easton, Pa. 1. The name of David's mother is nowhere given in the Bible. 2. The sacred hiding-place of the Ark of the Covenant constitutes one of the great mysteries of the Jewish nation. The Jews themselves believe that it is among the hidden things which the coming Messiah will reveal. It disappeared when the temple was plundered and destroyed by the Babylonians, and was either taken away or destroyed by Nebuchadnezzar.

R. G., Bartlett, Texas, and Mrs. J. Y. N., Jackson, O. 1. There is no specific statement made concerning the baptism of John, although some commentators assume that he may have been baptized by his own disciples, as was not unusual. 2. He began his mission in A.D. 25, and his death is believed to have occurred in A.D. 28. The baptism of Jesus took place shortly after the beginning of John's mission, presumably in the latter part of A.D. 25.

Reader, Richmond Center, Pa. A vow made voluntarily, the taking of which imposes a certain religious obligation, should be faithfully kept. It is different, however, with a vow forced upon a person under conditions which compel him to do a thing from which his judgment and better sense revolt. A religious vow, taken under great stress or in acute pain, would hardly be called a voluntary vow. We would advise you to consult with your pastor on the subject.

NOT FICTION, BUT THE TRUTH

STRANGE ADVENTURES of Captain Quinton



Captain Robert Quinton

The Strange Adventures of Captain Quinton is one of the most remarkable books of its kind yet published. It reveals a new world of adventure amazing to contemplate. More than all, it is true—is not a mere figment of the imagination. The things described really happened. Yet Stanley, Livingstone and Peary, all together, had not so many escapes from death as had this unassuming sailor-man, whose simple and convincing story is as the essence of truth.

Open the book at any place, and you will find him encountering one or more of innumerable perils—canoeing on a boiling lake; escaping under a shower of poisoned arrows; battling with cannibals; racing through the tropical night in a launch, pursued by crocodiles; imprisoned in a ship's cabin by a horde of monster devilfish; spending the night in a tree with a leopard; battling hand to hand with head-hunters; being pursued by angry monkeys; running a gantlet of war canoes.

WILL INTEREST WOMEN AND MEN ALIKE

These are sanguinary experiences which must be read with bated breath, yet they are not more thrilling in their way than are the exquisite descriptions of treasure-chambers in caves lurid and beautiful as a dream of the Arabian Nights; of a wave dance in which tribes of cannibals with an uncanny sense of beauty and rhythm represented with their bodies the ocean dashing high on imaginary coral reefs; of a silvery night spent in tropical tree-tops in order to witness the stately dawn-dance of birds of paradise. The very multiplicity of incident is overpowering, but it must be remembered that the experiences of over thirty years are crowded into this book.

It is a big book, too, 496 pages and 175,000 words, enclosed in illustrated binding, and with a frontispiece portrait of the author, this man whose life has hung in the balance so many times, and who yet has lived to tell the tale.

We will send you, postpaid, The Strange Adventures of Captain Quinton (handsomely bound in cloth), and THE CHRISTIAN HERALD for One full Year — both for only . . . . . $

E VOICE OF THE NATION ON ROME

Stultifying Federal Appointments

WHATEVER objections there may be to Roman Catholics holding public office (in view of the "higher allegiance" e owe to the Pope) it certainly e unwise to place them where they a represent the Federal Govern- e especially to people outside the u ry.

e United States as a nation does t acknowledge Papal supremacy, t spiritual or temporal; all its n amental free political "institu- " have been condemned by the a an; and before the world it a s for popular rule, equality of l en before the law, universal edu- n and separation of church and a , to name only a few items. tever the personal views of indi- l Catholics may be on these and ar things, their church is, so far atican official utterances go, op- l to all of them; so that such intments seem to place them in a what false position.

t of far more importance is the light in which the United States rnment may easily be placed; ely, that of posing as a tool in the l of the Vatican to restrain the n of Roman Catholics trying to w off the yoke of Rome (as in the ippines) or to place an ecclesias- f the Vatican in political control country, as just now in Santo ingo, where the placing of Arch- op Nouel at the head of the gov- ent was regarded at Washington, s despatches said, as a "triumph overnment diplomacy."

ersonalities are not in question at all; indeed, paradoxical as it seem, the higher the gentleman's onal qualifications and character more effectively may he, quite un- sciously—but none the less seri- y—misrepresent both our govern- t and his church. A Protestant on, for example, to whom he may ccredited, is naturally led to sup- e that the United States Govern- t by such action entertains little ard for its fundamental principles, use the papal condemnation of n is perfectly open, above board, known to all men; and although impression may perhaps be true certain politicians, it is not so of nation at large. In individual es, it will be regarded as a simple ossibility that such a man would ain within the membership of me for one hour, were its real mas and history known to him; so t the Roman Church is in his per- represented as much more en- tened and liberal than it really is, ile our government appears, in such appointment, either blind to, or orant of, the self-stultifying posi- n it assumes.

No Federal appointment could pos- ly be more self-contradictory in aracter than that of a man who ist of necessity (whatever his pri- te opinions may be) stand in public the Syllabus of Errors of Pope us IX and the Encyclical Immor- e Dei of Pope Leo XIII and the En- clicals Pascendi and Jamdudum of us X, to represent a government e fundamentals of which are writ- n in the Declaration of Independ- ce and the Constitution of the nited States.

There can be no doubt that to-day is government is looked upon roughout South America as at once dupe at home and a catspaw abroad r the Vatican, and its record in the ilippines and the West Indies sup- rts the belief that instead of help- g the various peoples to obtain the essings of civil and religious liberty hich it enjoys itself, it has invol- ntarily aided the Roman hierarchy its efforts to maintain that denomi- ation that has held them down for many years with such disastrous sults. For the Philippines, Porto ico and so-called "Catholic" coun- ries, the wisest plan would be to elect men without any religious affili- ations at all and instruct them to apply the nation's fundamental principles strictly in all cases in which any religious body was concerned.

Whether the official representatives of the Federal Government are personally "religious" men or not, they should, without exception, be entirely free from any association with any religious body the fundamentals of which are diametrically opposed to that of the nation whose official agents they are.

The Pope and the Press

THE Osservatore Romano, which is the official organ of the Vatican in Rome, published on February 1, 1913, a letter signed by Cardinal Merry del Val, the Pope's secretary of state, in which Pius X thanks a company of Catholic journalists in northern Italy, several of whom are editors of secular papers, for a letter which they had addressed to him. In this reply, the Pope takes occasion to "remind all that only by unconditional conformity to the directions received from the Pontiff" can the press be "sure of the blessing "of God and work with profit for the benefit of religion and society."

This letter reveals the fact that the Pope controls all newspapers in Italy that are edited by Roman Catholics. If he does this in Italy, is it not likely that, by means of his representatives, he exercises the same autocratic power throughout the entire world, including the United States?

Catholics in Congress

A BOSTON correspondent writes: "I hope you will keep up your anti-Roman fight, as the Catholics have now succeeded, through the division of the Republican congressional campaign, in obtaining a large increase in Congress. Connecticut sends a solid delegation of Catholics to Congress, and other States show a large increase in Catholic Congressmen."

A Nation Asleep

I HAVE seen your paper occasionally for some years, and always enjoyed looking over its interesting columns, but the special thing which decided me to subscribe for it was the sensible, firm, strong, uncompromising stand you take against the iniquities and stealthy encroachments of Roman Catholicism. That wicked and age-old power is a political machine, rather than a religious system, and it has long been trying to get dominion over this country of freedom and intelligence and prosperity. This great country seems to be asleep as far as the Satanic efforts of the Romish hierarchy are concerned, and unless it soon wakens to its peril, it will be like Gulliver, held tight and fast in the Lilliputian network of almost invisible cords, and unable to free itself and walk in the liberty it suffered so much to gain in its illustrious past. I hope you will continue to warn the people with no uncertain sound concerning the terrible danger that is marching so steadily upon them. MRS. F. D. N.

A Church Under a Ban

THE True Voice (Omaha), January 31, says that Archbishop Messmer, of Milwaukee, has placed St. Adalbert's Church (Polish) under an interdict, and ordered it to be closed till further notice. The archbishop's order says that violations of it will result in arrests for trespass.

This is the third Polish Roman Catholic church to be placed under a ban recently, the other two being in Pennsylvania. To people who believe that they can only receive the grace of God through "sacraments" and priests these bans must be very serious matters.

A Service to Patriotism, Truth and Religion

SOME one has kindly favored me with a copy of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD of January 8, containing your admirable article on the "prophecy" of a "prince" of the Roman Church. As a Christian minister, and as a loyal citizen of our country, I write to thank you for it. You do the cause of Christ, the cause of patriotism and the cause of all truth a real service by such writings. I wish you and your great paper all blessings. (REV.) W. W. ROYALL.

No-Rim-Cut Tires 10% Oversize

Our Average Profit $2.90 per Tire

Goodyear tires sell all the way from $15.55 to $104.95, according to size and type.

The most popular size—34x4—costs from $32.95 to $37.90, differing with type and treads.

And our average profit on all these tires last year was exactly $2.90 per tire.

This is why we tell you:

The worth of a tire depends, in large part, on what the maker puts into it.

Tires may be made at half our cost, yet the cost per mile is greater.

Tires may be skimped to increase factory profit, but the skimping shows up in your tire bills.

The best way to show what you get in the Goodyear is to state our profit, probably.

That's why you get tires built as we build them for what the Goodyears cost.

That's why, as this price, you get tires that can't rim-cut—tires 10 per cent. over the rated size.

That is why No-Rim-Cut tires, on legions of cars, have cut tire bills right in two.

And that is why Goodyears have come to outsell every other tire in existence.

We are the world's largest tire builders, yet our capital is only $10,000,000. We have no bonded debt.

Our mammoth output and our modern methods bring making cost down to the minimum.

What we save in these ways goes into tire mileage. And the meters on countless cars are showing what this means to users.

That's the only reason why our last year's sale exceeded the previous twelve years put together.

Write for the Goodyear Tire Book —14th-year edition. It tells all known ways to economize on tires.

Deal Gently With That Corn

Don't pare it. That's but temporary. And a slip of the blade often leads to infection.

Don't apply liquids. They often cause soreness.

Apply a Blue-jay plaster, and the corn pain stops at once. Then a wonderful wax—the B & B wax—gently loosens the corn. In 48 hours the entire corn comes out.

Not the slightest discomfort. One simply forgets the corn.

This invention makes it folly to have corns. A milllon corns monthly are now being removed by it.

Stop and think of that.

Why suffer from corns—why pamper them—when 15 cents will end them.

A in the picture is the soft B & B wax. It loosens the corn.
B stops the pain and keeps the wax from spreading.
C wraps around the toe. It is narrowed to be comfortable.
D is rubber adhesive to fasten the plaster on.

The Value of Preparation

THE Bulgarians were prepared for their spectacular struggle with the Turk, and they won a series of brilliant victories.

If you are to win the battle for your own financial future you should lay definite plans at once. Don't deceive yourself with the thought that everything will come out all right, somehow.

Things have a way of not coming out right at all unless you personally see that they do.

The best provision you can make is to start saving money systematically, and thus provide a competency for the future. You can invest $100 or any multiple of that amount, in the Coupon Bonds of the American Real Estate Company. They pay 6% interest and return principal in ten years.

These Bonds may also be purchased in accumulative form by instalments covering 10, 15 or 20 years, and paying 6% compound interest. Just note the possibilities of systematic savings invested in these bonds:

Annual Instalment	Term	Matures in Cash
$25.65	20 Years	$1000
$40.53	15 "	$1000
$71.57	10 "	$1000

Our Bonds have paid 6%, without loss or delay, for 25 years, returning to investors more than $11,000,000. They are based on the ownership of select New York realty, affording the best possible security.

Write today for booklets describing these bonds and new map of New York City showing location of our properties.

ANSWERS TO FINANCIAL QUERIES

MRS. N. O. H., NEW YORK. The Fonda, Johnston & Gloversville First Cons. Gen. Ref. Mort. 4½s, yielding at present price about 4.95 per cent., are considered a "good investment for a woman."

A. A. V., MASSACHUSETTS. Never buy land you have not personally inspected, and not then unless you have good reason to believe you will have a market if you should subsequently desire to effect a sale.

W. P. S., LOUISIANA. (1) I have no information regarding the value of the shares of the Amicable Life Insurance Company. Stocks of newly formed insurance companies are necessarily speculative and do not appeal to the careful investor.

C. J. W., NEBRASKA. The stock of the Home Gardens Company of Chicago has a book value of 30 per cent. above par, according to a statement the company makes. But the company does not state that your shares may be sold at this advance. I wonder if they could?

P. K. H., TEXAS. Your letter describing your home ranch, which you desire to sell, in no ways meets the situation expressed by our correspondent "C. E. S.," and I must decline to forward your letter. If I complied with your request by sending your letter, I would be virtually recommending a sale of your property, and this would be obviously improper.

MRS. A. L. T., NEW YORK. I am advised that the bondholders of the Columbia Real Estate Company are likely to receive about 3 per cent. of their investment when the affairs of the company are finally wound up. The Grantwood Real Estate scheme does not appeal to me as desirable. Hold on to your bond, and take what you can get. Don't send good money after bad.

W. VAN D., PENNSYLVANIA. Wood, Harmon & Co. tell me that the Greater New York Development Company was formed to better facilitate making out deeds to the many different parcels of real estate the firm sells, and that the development company acts as a holding corporation for the properties that the firm puts on the market.

MAJOR G. A. D., PENNSYLVANIA. You ask if Pennsylvania Railroad will pay 7 per cent. during 1913. It is my personal belief that such an increase in dividend rate is not likely during the present year. However, no one knows but the directors, and if they do know, they do not tell, and my personal opinion is merely based on the earnings reported in the company's statement, which are not encouragement for a greater dividend rate. Pennsylvania stock at 120 pays about 5.02 per cent. As an investment proposition you can do better. Six per cent. B. & O. at 100⅞ returns 5.96 per cent. Six per cent. Atchison at 102 returns 5.90 per cent. Seven per cent. Illinois Central at 123 returns 5.73 per cent. Seven per cent. Northern Pacific at 116 returns 6.05 per cent. Any of the above stocks, I believe, is preferable at present to Pennsylvania.

D. P. Y., KENTUCKY. You ask for a list of securities which will net an average yield, on an investment of $20,000, of about five per cent. The following securities are selected for their (a) safety; (b) income yield; (c) marketability:

	Yield Per cent.
10 shares Atchison at 102	5.90
10 shares B. & O. at 100	6.00
10 shares Chicago & Northwestern at 136	5.15
10 shares Northern Pacific at 116	6.05
1 N. Y. Cen. 1st and Ref. 3½s	4.05
1 Louisville & Nashville Reg. 4s	4.15
1 B. & O. Prior Lien 3½s	4.36
1 Boston & Albany 4s Oct., 1913	4.38
1 Atchison Adjustment Stamped 4s	4.55
1 St. Louis Southwestern 1st Cons. 4s	5.70
1 Int. Grent Northern 5s	5.95
1 Pueblo, Colo., Water 4½s	4.70
1 New York City 4s	4.00
1 New York City 4½s	4.25
1 Detroit Edison 1st 5s	4.80

G. R. F., DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA. (1) You do not specify which Pennsylvania R. R. bond you have under consideration. Of the Pa. R. R. Co. there are nine different bond issues; ten different issues of roads acquired, and all told, there are an even fifty issues of direct and indirect issues and issues of roads which the Pennsylvania owns in part or outright or controls through stock ownership. One of the popular Pennsylvania bonds is the 4 per cent. Consolidated Mortgage, selling at 101. (2) Southern Railway preferred presents an excellent speculative investment opportunity, and at 80 returns 6.30 per cent. The Southern has now put the preferred on a 5 per cent. basis and there is no indication that the road will find it difficult to maintain this rate permanently. The earnings for the past seven months of the fiscal year show an increase of over $600,000 with a tendency to further increase. Four per cent. is now being earned on the common stock, which, of course, is not paid, nor is the common stock likely to receive dividends soon. (3) At 108⅝ St. Paul returns 4.60 per cent. on amount invested. Since St. Paul reduced the rate on the common stock a year ago from 7 per cent. to 5 per cent., there has been much speculation as to the probable date of resumption of the former 7 per cent. rate. The present rate of payment may be increased to 6 per cent. or to 7 per cent. at the next meeting of the board in September, and if the increase is made those who had foresight to buy the stock at the present levels will have no cause to regret their action.

A. B. M., NEW YORK. (1) I do not believe you have any cause to fear a much further recession in price of your Wabash second mortgage bonds, which you state you bought at 108 and 109. These bonds are regarded as an excellent investment security, and have merely declined in price with the rest of the bond market. This is a comparatively small issue of $14,000,000, as against $33,900,000 of the First Mortgage 5s. I should not advise a sale at present prices—around 98¾. Wabash First 5s bring 105. (2) Yes, under certain conditions, Atchison common is a safe investment for a woman. One of the conditions imposed is that, if you buy this stock, you buy it outright and then forget all about the price paid for it. At present prices Atchison returns 5.90 per cent. (3) You need have no fear, I believe, for your Central Pacific bond, which you state you paid 100 for. These excellent bonds have, like the first named bond, receded in price (to 94¾) as nearly all high-class, low-income securities have done in the past five years. The lowering in price of bonds, of course, may be attributed to very many causes, but I believe one of the principal reasons is the demand of the investing public for higher income securities, and the subsequent popularity of public utility securities and industrial preferred stocks, which yield from 5 per cent. to 6 per cent. (or more); but you must understand that with the added rate of income a speculative element creeps in.

G. P. N., TENNESSEE. I do not recommend the insurance stock you ask about other than to recommend that you leave it alone, and that you put your savings into some form of investment security that possesses real worth. Investigate the offerings advertised on this page; you will not find insurance stocks included in the lists these firms send to inquirers. There seems to be a wave of insurance stock speculation sweeping the country. It has assumed the proportions of a craze. But then a new craze is due, and it might as well be in the form of insurance, for the susceptible public will grab at one kind of bait as quickly as another. We have had a mining craze—the most iniquitous of all; an oil craze; a rubber plantation craze; an irrigation bond craze; a Florida farm craze—fairly disastrous in itself; a eucalyptus craze; a magazine craze and many other crazy financial schemes, and now we see an insurance craze, which, before it spends itself, will have depleted savings banks accounts to an alarming extent. These schemes attract, mostly, the very people who can least afford to lose money—the very ones who should most carefully safeguard their slender means. Thanks to the activities of the government's postal officials, many of the inhuman leeches who formerly flooded the mails with alluring prospectuses advertising blue-sky schemes and who took in millions of dollars from people who could ill afford to be swindled, are now behind bars, and others are likely to go. There are still, however, many other avenues for financial adventurers. They avoid using the mails, but they send agents on the road to visit the victims who are so unfortunate as to have their names on a "sucker list." THE CHRISTIAN HERALD warns its friends to look out for the smooth talking stock peddler. The salesmen from the representative bond firms always have proper credentials.

KINDRED TO THE STARS

BY MARGARET E. SANGSTER, JR.

AT THE outset of my little talk this week in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, I wish to tell my young friends how much I appreciate all their kindness, as shown in their letters of welcome. You have won me by your cordial welcome and I thank those of you who have written to me as well as those who intend writing. I know that I must seem a rather vague personality to you just yet; but I am sure that no real friend of yours ever received a warmer or more loving greeting than you have given to me. And while I thank you because you have been so sweet, I am going to ask you to let me put in a few paragraphs from the letters you have written me, just to let others see how dear girls can be. And you must remember, as you read, that THE CHRISTIAN HERALD is a busy paper; that it travels from ocean to ocean, and drops into the smallest homes as well as the largest mansions.

One girl from the Middle West writes: "I have just finished your letter to girls in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD and it made me feel that I wanted to write at once. You seem ever so much more real to me because of your picture." I wish that I could see that girl for just a moment, so that I could give her a kiss to show her that I am quite real!

Here is another girl's thought. She seems just a wee bit doubtful: "I noticed your page in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD of this week. Do you really mean for girls to write to you?" I certainly do mean to have them write, if they will; and let me tell you a secret: I shall be mightily disappointed if they do not!

One of the dearest girls writes this: "To-day I received this week's paper, and came upon your new department —the 'Friendship Column.' As I read your lines the thought suddenly came to me: 'She will understand,' and here I am, writing to tell you that I do love you, and want you to be my friend." Don't you think that this world is a pretty nice place, when a girl from out of the unknown will write one a letter like that? And it was very sweet of her to call our little meeting-place the "Friendship Column." I hope her remark will prove to be a prophecy!

One of the lovers of the paper is also very anxious to be friendly. She says: "I am an ardent admirer of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, and while looking through its pages the other day, I read your talk. It seems as if I could really find a comrade in you."

A girl who lives in Pennsylvania is certainly the owner of a loving heart. She, too, likes our new department, for she tells us this: "After reading 'Concerning Friends' in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, it seems as if I must write to you to tell you that you will have a loyal friend in me!" And I want to tell her right now that she, with many other girls, will have one who will endeavor to be just as true a friend in me, I hope.

This next is from a dear little country girl. She is one of the youngest who have written to me, and I appreciate her letter because it is so obviously sincere: "I am only a little girl ten years old. I live in the country. I read your letter in the paper, and I did so want to write to you!" I am glad, dear, that you did just what you wanted to, because if you had not, I would have missed knowing a little girl whom I already love.

Another girl, who is some way off from the rush of the busy world, says: "I am a lonely girl living out of town. Although I have a younger sister and brother, I long for a dear girl friend." I rather think that the little lonely girl has a new friend at this moment.

One of the older girls, who writes many sweet things, starts in this way: "Perhaps you have already more friends than you can keep in touch with; but I want you to know that I am interested in you, and would like to be one of them." Dear heart, may I never have friends enough to make me forget you.

Perhaps I have already told you enough of these little messages to give you an idea of their delightful frankness. But no, here is one more I must tell you about. It is from an earnest girl with a big heart. She says very simply: "Do you know, there is an awful lot of meaning in the word 'friend'?" Indeed I do, and I only hope that all of my correspondents feel the same way.

Now, I have given you a little idea of my new friends. How I wish that I could put them all in, every dear letter; but if I did, it would nearly fill up the entire magazine. So just think some of the sweetest thoughts you can imagine and you will get a fair idea of the rest of the letters.

Maybe there are some who will look askance at this page, who will raise their eyebrows, and perhaps say: "What good can a letter do?" Well, I used to think that way myself, but I changed my mind. Let me tell you about it: I had a little friend—a schoolmate. We liked each other in a perfectly matter-of-fact way and kept up a jolly, carefree exchange of letters. Then, one day, in the midst of the flowers and sunshine and music of summer, Sorrow came and laid her hand upon my head while the shadow of death hung near. And while my eyes were hot and burning and my heart almost bursting, the postman brought me a letter. It was from my light-hearted acquaintance; but it was not one of those carefree notes of days gone by. It was a letter full of such comfort and sweetness that the tears fell as I blessed her!

Don't be afraid that you will ever have too many friends. Don't be afraid that you're too old, or too young, or that you live too far away. I have had notes from "married girls" and from tiny girls. The mail has brought me greetings from 'way across the continent, and little messages have popped up almost under my feet. There have been sad notes from girls who felt blue, some really tragic ones from troubled people, and weary messages from tired hearts. But every letter has been full of love and good wishes, and there has been a real touch of divine sympathy in all of them that seemed to lift these new friendships of mine out of the domain of worldliness and to give them an abiding-place among the sacred and beautiful things of earth and to endow them with a kinship to the stars.

EASTER FLOWERS

"I am come into my garden"

The night wind whispers of hyacinths,
Great clusters in white and blue.
They grow where the Thorn-crowned sleepeth,
Sweet hyacinths moist with dew.

Queen lilies and golden daffodils,
And violets for Him who died;
The soft wind beareth their frankincense
Right up to the Crucified.

The spell of the hour is upon me,
In the lure of its perfumed breath,
A sinner prepareth her spices,
And love overcometh death.

O fragrant blossoms all wet with dew,
Ye come from the vast unseen—
Does the Christ bear a lily each Easter
To the penitent Magdalene?

THE YOUNG PEOPLE'S MEETINGS

NOTES ON THE CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR, EPWORTH LEAGUE AND BAPTIST YOUNG PEOPLE'S UNION TOPICS

Sheep of the Other Fold*

YOU have all noticed the difference between reading about accidents to people you know and accidents to people you don't know. We look over the paper with its list of tragedies and troubles. Most of the items do not stir us deeply. But if our eye falls upon news of an accident to some one we know, or some one we love, it is a very different matter. A slight trouble to one individual whom we know rouses us far more than a great trouble to many individuals we do not know.

That is the real reason we are not more excited about this business of carrying the Gospel to the people of heathen lands. They are so far away, they are so unknown, it is hard to feel a strong, live personal concern about it. Not long ago that modern apostolic saint, Charles E. Parker, of Vikorabad, India, was visiting the writer at his home. Letters were forwarded to the missionary, and as he read them he was so stirred that he could hardly wait till the expiration of his leave of absence before returning. He needed the rest and recuperation here; there was work to do here that would help the work when he returned. But the cries of the people who needed him; their tales of suffering and wrong; their pleas for him to return were almost more than he could stand. They were people he knew, people he loved. So he wanted to be with them, saving them, helping them.

This is the way Jesus felt about "the sheep of the other fold." He longed for their safety, their happiness. "Them also must I bring," he said.

The most important thing to do in trying to help them and getting others to help them is to put ourselves in a position where we will care about it. We must let Christ touch and change and cleanse and fill our hearts, so that we shall long to help. Then we must try to find out about the real people and their needs. That is the way to make a missionary meeting interesting. Some one in your church or your town may have friends on the mission field, may be helping personally some worker there. Get one or two personal letters, fresh from the foreign field, and read them. Mention the names of some people there who have been converted and brought to lives of happiness. Make the people on the other side of the world seem real, and near, and human.

Hundreds of letters pour into THE CHRISTIAN HERALD office every year from workers on the foreign field. Some of them are very pitiful: stories of Chinese girl babies thrown out to die on rubbish heaps; stories of some of them discovered, rescued and taken to the orphanages where they are nursed back to life and cared for, many of them through the generosity of friends in America; stories of poor child widows in India and elsewhere, cruelly abused; stories of sick and suffering and starving people to whom the churches of America should send the Gospel and with whom they should divide their temporal bounties.

What finer task could an Epworth League chapter, or some earnest Christian family of your church find to do for Christ than to take care of one of these little ones in a China orphanage year by year? The cost to you would be very slight, but consider what it would mean to that life, and to all whom that life may reach.

But if you can't do this, do something to get into personal touch with the people in these other lands, the "sheep of the other fold." Go if you can; give all you can; pray constantly; love ardently; and do something to help somebody who has not heard the glad tidings.

* THE SHEEP OF THE OTHER FOLD. Epworth League Topic for Sunday, March 30, 1913. John 10: 16; Matt. 28: 18-20; Ps. 2: 8.

Educational Missions*

SIDE by side with evangelism must go education. The people of non-Christian lands are going to be educated; their appetite for learning is aroused as never before; they are determined to find knowledge. The question the church must answer is whether they are going to find that knowledge under Christian or under pagan auspices. There came a crisis in education in Japan recently when the medical courses were reorganized. The church should have sprung forward and manned those positions of professors of modern medicine with Christian men. In China the crisis was in the engineering schools. There should have been a flood of money to establish engineering courses in Christian colleges so that the new, gigantic railway system of China should be produced under Christian leadership. It is not too late for this now.

The schools and churches of missions stand together on the other side of the world to demonstrate the power of Christ to purify and ennoble life. Teachers, preachers, physicians, nurses, all are needed in the splendid army that is winning the foreign world to Christ.

Messages from the Congo†

TWENTY years ago there was not a church in one thousand miles of the winding Congo, from Stanley Pool to Stanley Falls. To-day there are ten mission stations in that territory, with strong Christian churches. This sounds encouraging, but Rev. Thomas Moody, of the Baptist Mission in the Congo, speaking at a conference of Protestant missionaries, held in that field, said, as reported in the Missionary Review of the World for March, that there are still in Belgian Congo sixty fields of 10,000 square miles each, without a missionary. But he calls attention to the fact that it is only thirty-four years since Stanley came out of the Congo. "Equatorial Africa is opened. The country is going ahead by leaps and bounds."

Conditions in the cocoa and rubber trades are much improved. It is to be hoped that the intolerable cruelties of the past are forever at an end. Just now the main problem is in relation to Mohammedanism. The Moslems are making a tremendous propaganda. It must be met by a still more stalwart campaign of the followers of the Cross of Christ.

* MISSION WORK AT HOME AND ABROAD. III. Education. Christian Endeavor Topic for Sunday, March 30, 1913. Acts. 18: 7-11.

† LATEST MESSAGES FROM THE CONGO. B. Y. P. U. Topic for Sunday, March 30, 1913. Ps. 67.

Young People's Question Box

Rev. A. H. B., Chesterfield, Mo. The idea is prevalent among the young people here that membership in a young people's society is identical with church membership. I have failed in two attempts to organize a society just because so many of my young people are reluctant to affiliate with the church. What do you advise?

Call the young people together and read to them the paragraphs in the constitution describing the conditions of associate membership. Point out to them the possibilities of helping the movement by attendance, by singing, by giving, by sharing in the charitable, educational and recreational parts of the work. It would, of course, be necessary to have a nucleus of church members for officers of the society. Sometimes it is advisable to start the movement in some other form, such as a reading or singing or athletic club, or a mission study class. In the meantime, of course, continue to work and pray for the actual conversion of your young people, so that they will be glad to join the church and take part in spiritual work. For details of organizing a society see answer to R. C. in issue of March 5.

veterate Tea Drinker Feared Paralysis.

Steady use of either tea or coffee often oduces alarming symptoms as the ison (caffeine) contained in these bever-es acts with more potency in some rsons than in others.

"I was never a coffee drinker," writes Ill. woman, "but a tea drinker. I was ry nervous, had frequent spells of sick adache and heart trouble, and was sub-ct at times to severe attacks of bilious lic.

"No end of sleepless nights — would ve spells at night when my right side ould get numb and tingle like a thousand edles were pricking my flesh. At times could hardly put my tongue out of my outh and my right eye and ear were fected.

"The doctors told me I was liable to come paralyzed at any time, so I was constant dread. I took no end of med-ine—all to no good.

"The doctors told me to quit using tea, t I thought I could not live without it that it was my only stay. I had been a a drinker for twenty-five years; was der the doctor's care for fifteen.

"About six months ago, I finally quit a and commenced to drink Postum.

"I have never had one spell of sick adache since and only one light attack bilious colic. Have quit having those mb spells at night, sleep well and my art is getting stronger all the time." ame given upon request.

Postum now comes in concentrated, owder form, called Instant Postum. It prepared by stirring a level teaspoonful a cup of hot water, adding sugar to ste, and enough cream to bring the color golden brown.

Instant Postum is convenient; there's waste; and the flavor is always uni-rm. Sold by grocers everywhere.

"POLLYANNA"

In Book Form

POLLYANNA, whose spirit of gladness affected every one with whom she came in contact, including many thousand readers of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, has been put into book form. It is wonderful what a hold this little girl has taken upon the hearts of CHRISTIAN HERALD readers. We have received literally thousands of letters asking how this popular serial could be obtained in book form, and we are glad to announce that Pollyanna may be obtained by any one who desires to have her in this permanent form. Though its title is Pollyanna, many persons have insisted upon calling it and as such it will take its place among the literature of uplift and happiness. Hear what one enthusiast says:

"The Glad Book"

Editor Christian Herald. TANEYTOWN, MD., February 19, 1913.

DEAR SIR: I want to thank you, and through you Eleanor H. Porter, for the beautiful story Pollyanna. I consider it a gem in its class; a story that ought to do a vast amount of good in the world. I trust that it will very soon be published in book form. There ought to be millions of copies of it sold. It should be in every Sunday school library in the land, as well as in thousands of homes where there are children. I want two copies of it right now; one for my own library, and one for the Sunday school of my church. Considering the fact that so many "nasty" stories are written these days, a story like Pollyanna is a real god-send to literature, and an evidence that decent stories can still really be written. Thank you and the author once more.

Pollyanna has been beautifully illustrated and handsomely bound in decorated satin finish cloth, making an ideal gift book, or one you yourself will place among your book treasures.

OUR SPECIAL POLLYANNA OFFER

WHITE ECONOMY

Is Actual Economy

THE small bore, long stroke White Engine introduced actual engine economy in gasoline and oil, into this country nearly four years ago.

Now that the need for economy is becoming absolutely necessary, White supremacy in the efficiency of its simple engine is recognized. And White economy goes farther. It includes in its scope wear, repair and tire cost.

Proportions of weight, engine power, and wheel base are carefully balanced to meet the requirements for which each model is specifically built. Add to this the wonderfully few parts in White Cars, and the care with which every piece of material is selected and finished, and White supremacy is acknowledged and White economy is the result.

Questions and Answers

W. R. H., Panama City, Fla. Did Jscob wrestle all night with the angel or just an hour before dawn?

Jacob had sent his family over the ford of Jabbok, while he remained behind, presumably for prayer and meditation. The work of transportation had already occupied some part of the night (see Gen. 32: 21, 22); indeed, it did not begin until after night had set in. Then, when all had gone, the angel visitor appeared and the struggle began which lasted probably from midnight until near sunrise. The passage in Gen. 32: 24 does not state how long he was alone before the angel appeared.

Mrs. C. P. S., Vergilina, Va. 1. The mother of Absalom was Maacah, daughter of Talmai, king of Geshur. 2. Your other question will be answered by mail.

B. A. H., Grapeville, N. Y. It is quite obvious that, in various instances, the Epistles have a purely local application, adapted to the special conditions of the time. This is the view held by the most competent experts.

A. B., Ottawa, Kan. 1. Is the Zionist movement making progress in regard to colonizing Palestine? 2. How many Jewish settlers in Palestine, and in what are they engaged? 3. Have they schools?

1. Yes, the movement is making progress, as is evidenced by the establishment of several organizations and the purchase of much land and property for industrial and commercial purposes. Jews have now some forty villages and own about 100,000 acres of the soil. 2. Ninety thousand, for the most part engaged in agricultural pursuits; there is a little manufacturing. 3. They have several schools. French, German and English Jewish societies have provided educational establishments at various centers. There are even trade schools, where the arts and crafts are taught.

A. R. D., Reeds, Mo. Please explain Mark 4: 12: "That seeing they may see, and not perceive; and hearing they may hear, and not understand; lest at any time they should be converted and their sins should be forgiven them." I especially want the meaning of the latter part.

They had deliberately preferred the darkness and obduracy of sin and worldliness to the light and healing which Jesus brought nigh to them, and now, as a result of such persistent refusal to hear and to follow the truth, the eyes of their understanding had become judicially sealed so that they, being dead in formalism and sin, by their own act had become incapable of discerning the truth or of being influenced by it. See Matt. 13: 10-17.

L. S. N., Prattsburg, N. Y. If babies of different nationalities were isolated and never allowed to hear other human voice would they speak their mother tongues? If not, in what way would they communicate?

Such babies would grow up in accordance with their surroundings, and speak no language intelligible to others, only a jargon of soundwords understood by themselves. As to language, man is largely a creature of imitation, the child simply repeating what it hears; thus is speech developed and language learned.

Constant Reader, Pittston, Pa. If a preacher's work be of God, it will stand; if not, nothing can make it endure. We have heard many criticisms, but have little personal knowledge of the matter. It is, however, a wise policy to let doubtful doctrines alone.

W. H. H., Miami, Fla. Concerning the origin and personality of the Spirit of Evil, all that is known, in addition to what little is revealed in Scripture, is from tradition. He is spoken of as a spirit, Eph. 2: 2; as the prince or ruler of the demons, Matt. 12: 24-26; as having evil spirits subject to him, Matt. 25: 41, Rev. 12: 7-9; as a leader among the angels who fell; as having rebelled and fallen from his first estate, II Peter 2: 4, Jude 6, and Luke 10: 18. The passage in 1 Tim. 3: 6 leads to the conclusion that pride or ambition—"the desire to be as a god"—was his sin. All the representations of him in Scripture show him to be bent on transferring the homage and service of men, which belonged to God, to himself. He is called the tempter, the adversary, the false accuser, the wicked one and the leader of a host of other spirits who do his evil work, Matt. 25: 41. His first offense in the garden, in the guise of a serpent, was to slander God to man (see Gen. 3: 4, 5). Every moment of yielding, every sin committed, makes man his servant for the future. (John 8: 34, Rom. 6: 16.) Jewish tradition calls him Eblis, and says that in revenge for his expulsion from heaven he resolved to procure the expulsion of our first parents from paradise.

Reader, Tamaqua, Pa. We cannot express any opinion concerning a church dispute of the details of which we know practically nothing. If such a division as you mention be founded on good cause, the matter could be settled at a meeting of the members.

A. C. M., St. Joseph, Mo. Rev. 21st chapter describes the new heaven and earth, the new Jerusalem. This earth was cursed for man's sake, but is to be redeemed by the second Adam. The scene is presented before our eyes as an actual experience. "No more sea" means that the ocean, which is a type of unrest and separation from our loved ones, will be no longer. The new Jerusalem, the "Holy City," is to be peopled with the redeemed. The new world is not to be merely a garden, like the paradise of Eden, but a realm magnificent with the glory of all that is stately and beautiful. No evil can enter therein, but there will be continual ingress for all that is good and pure. See verses 25, 26. In the succeeding chapter, the description of the heavenly vision is continued. The waters of life represent Gospel glory perfected and continually flowing from God, the fountain of life, assuring the redeemed of an uninterrupted existence filled with joy and perpetual vitality. John's vision of the transfigured earth is one of the most glorious things in Scripture. Every sentence is filled with meaning and comfort, and the climax is reached in verses 4 and 5, chapter 22, which describe the new relationship of the redeemed as members of the divine household.

Reader, Maine. God alone can judge the hearts of men. His mercy is boundless and we have no right to set limits to his forgiveness.

M. C., DeKalb, Mo. Is there any reason to suppose other worlds inhabited? If no other worlds are inhabited, then is our planet the most important in the universe?

We have no direct knowledge whatsoever concerning inhabited worlds outside our own, and we are not likely to obtain such knowledge. It is reasonable to think, however, that life prevails elsewhere than on our earth, though it may be very different from what we know it here. Your other question has been asked for hundreds of years, and admits of no satisfactory answer. Man is a vain creature, and believes himself "the end and aim" of all creation. Yet the earth, which to him appears so large and important, is but an infinitesimal speck on the cog-wheel of the revolving worlds of the universe. In fact, so small is our planet that the mind cannot grasp the idea of its littleness. It is not even as a grain of sand compared with the world of matter. The sun is 1,250,000 times as large and millions upon millions of greater suns than ours are whirling through illimitable space. Is it reasonable then, in face of the exhaustless, unbounded, impressive panorama of the universe, with its whirling galaxy of stars and suns and systems, to suppose that our little speck of matter is the most important? That our earth is the only inhabited place is, therefore, an unlikely supposition to be entertained by any one who is at all cognizant of the vastness of the universe with its infinity of worlds. But, as said, life may greatly differ according to place in the Great Plan.

I. G. N., Daytona, Fla. Why was it necessary for this country to make a treaty with England or any other foreign nation in regard to our building the Panama Canal?

Back of the building of the Panama Canal is a long story. Official notice was given by the United States of the intended construction of a canal across the isthmus in the instructions given in 1826 by Henry Clay, as Secretary of War, to the American delegates to the first congress of Panama, convoked by Bolivar. Not until 1846 did New Granada grant canal rights to the United States. Before a treaty could be drawn up Great Britain had got to work in Nicaragua and secured all canal rights in that country. This the United States considered a direct violation of the Monroe Doctrine. War would have resulted between England and the United States had not the Clayton-Bulwer treaty been signed in 1850. This treaty provided that neither Great Britain nor the United States should be entitled to exclusive control of any proposed canal; that neither country should be entitled to fortify the canal. Thus the Clayton-Bulwer treaty became a bar to this country's building a canal across either Panama or Nicaragua. Finally, in the Hay-Pauncefote treaty, the United States agreed with England to give "all nations" equal rights in using the canal and the older treaty was superseded.

R. B., Lenoir, N. C. Please give a list of the most destructive fires in history.

In 64 A.D., Rome burned eight days; 1086 the greater part of London was destroyed; 1212 another fierce conflagration almost wiped out London; 1666, a fierce fire raged in London for a week over an area of 450 acres, destroying fifty million dollars in property; 1794, a London fire in which 650 houses were d stroyed; 1812, Moscow, fired by its own peop when occupied by Napoleon's army, burned fro 14th to 20th of September, and property wa destroyed amounting to $150,000,000; 1835, te rible fire in New York, December 16, consumin $15,000,000 in property; 1842, Hamburg almo wholly destroyed; 1845, another great fire i New York; 1861, Tooley Street in Londo burned from June 22 to July 22, destroyin over $10,000,000 in property; 1871, Communis outrages in Paris, whereby the city suffered t the extent of $150,000,000; 1871, Chicag burned three days over an area of 2,200 acres 300 lives were lost, 100,000 made homeless, an over $200,000,000 in property destroyed; 1872 Boston had a fire which consumed value to th amount of $75,000,000; 1903, Iroquois Theater Chicago, destroyed with a loss of 575 lives 1904, great fire in Baltimore, over $70,000,00 in property destroyed; 1904, steamboat Genera Slocum with Sunday school party on boar caught fire in East River, New York City, ove 1,000 lives were lost; 1906, fire followed earthquake in San Francisco, destroying property valued at $500,000,000.

J. L., Cowansville, Pa. Explain I. Peter 3: 19, 20, also I. Peter 4: 6.

1. The "spirits in prison" (or Hades) mentioned in the passage referred to are presumed to be antediluvians who, although they might have repented when the flood came, were too late and so were shut out from the ark. No mention is made of their conversion. The language in the Epistle of Peter indicates that the preaching was the heralding or announcement of Christ's finished work, thereby confirming to those who heard it the condemnation of the unbelievers and the salvation of Noah and the believers. It is a passage concerning which there has been much difference of opinion, but the foregoing is the view held by leading commentators. 2. The "quick and the dead" is simply the "living and the dead." Peter is here plainly referring only to those who had come within reach of the Gospel, or who might have known God through his messengers and prophets in Old and New Testament times.

J. M., Independence, Kan. Is it a fact that the corn crop of 1912 is the greatest on record?

It is. The corn crop of 1912 exceeded the last record crop (1906) by over 200,000,000 bushels, and surpassed the 1911 crop by 593,258,000 bushels. The value of the crop, however, was less by $64,000,000 than that of 1911, the price per bushel on December 1, 1912, being only 18 cents as against 61.3 cents on the same date the previous year.

S. K., Rochester, N. Y. From where are the following lines and to whom do they refer?

"O mother of a mighty race,
Yet lovely in thy youthful grace!"

They are from a poem entitled "America," by William Cullen Bryant, and, of course, refer to America.

Christian Herald Famine Orphans Who Have Grown Up to Be Teachers and Preachers

THIS photograph is one that should gladden the heart of every CHRISTIAN HERALD reader who has had a share in the work of training the destitute famine orphans of India. Every one of the persons represented in this photograph is or was a CHRISTIAN HERALD India Famine Orphan. All are now grown to a useful manhood or womanhood, and engaged in Christian work. Rev. Benson Baker, of Ajmer, who sends us the photograph, writes: "You remember the last awful famine, and how your readers did so much for our people out here. Surely no finer work was ever done! The saving of these poor people in itself was a blessed thing. But how wonderfully God has honored that work! As you know, many of the boys and girls were gathered into Mission Orphanages. Schools were organized and these boys and girls were educated. Much of this we were able to do because you supported us in the work. About four years ago, forty of the boys in my school volunteered for Christian service, and this in face of the fact that they could get much larger salaries in other lines of work. Many of these boys have been sent out into the work. The enclosed picture is a group of our workers. Every man and woman in this picture is a famine orphan and every one of them is now a Christian worker—I mean a preacher, teacher, or Bible reader. They have all been through our schools." As was the case with these India orphans, so it is now with the 1,200 orphans in China who are being helped by the readers of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. Some have already reached self-support, and soon many others will go out into the world equipped for the battle of life—a thing which would never have happened had it not been for American generosity. "If we ever mean to capture the heathen world for Christ and civilization," wrote good old Bishop William Taylor, "we must begin with the children."

Miscellaneous

K. A. K., Wilmington, Del. Matt. 15: 16 deals with the miracle of the loaves and fishes, a demonstration of divine power which is corroborated by the other evangelists, though with some slight differences in detail.

G. F. F., Hagerstown, Md., and G. W. R., Rockaway, N. J. Send full addresses for answer by mail.

Mrs. J. T., Burton, O. As already stated in THE MAIL-BAG, "forgive us our trespasses" is simply a variant which some pastors employ in repeating the Lord's Prayer. It does not conflict with the clear sense of the original.

L. M. W., Michigan. "Purple patches" is a mere metaphorical expression to indicate lurid or highflown rhetorical language interjected into composition for the sake of effect. When the phrase was first used is uncertain.

W. H. H., Davon, Mo. The origin of the American Indians is a difficult ethnological question. Some authorities think they came from Asia over Behring Strait, and others, harking back to a remote interglacial period when Europe was connected by continuous land with Greenland, maintain that it was by this route the Indians came to America from Europe.

J. W. M., Peoria, Mo. Gen. 2: 9 mentions specifically two trees in the midst of the garden: the tree of life and the tree of the knowledge of good and evil. The first was a sign of immortality and the second a test of obedience by which our first parents were to be tried whether they would obey God or break his commands. See verse 17.

MOVING PICTURES IN THE HOLY LAND

THOUGH frowned upon and laughed at in its infancy, ridiculed or anathematized in the period of its development, the cinematograph and all its attendant interests are with us to stay. It is not far wrong to call "the movies" America's national amusement. Moving pictures, good, bad and indifferent, are witnessed every day of the year by millions of people from the Pacific to the Atlantic and from the new villages of Canada's far Northwest to the Mexican border. To meet the continuously growing demands of this vast business, firms of film-producers have sprung into existence in many lands and one need only visit the nearest picture show to learn that their lines stretch from the hearts of great cities to the very edges of civilization and beyond, round the world and back.

Making Pictures in the Streets of Jerusalem

On the screens of a thousand little moving-picture places the busy scene of noontide traffic past the Bank of England in historic Threadneedle Street or the mounting of the guard before the Summer Palace on the Neva is followed by a journey in the Himalayas, a leopard hunt in Africa or a missionary drama on the edge of the Sahara Desert. Into the production of some of these films there must go months of labor, thousands of miles of travel and many thousands of dollars. This bringing of the whole world to the darkened auditoriums of our village picture shows, to our school classrooms and church vestries is the reason why more and more of the reels each year are marked "Passed by the National Board of Censors." Then, too, the persons of the films are no longer nameless. The authors and the actors of our little "movie" dramas—both farce and tragedy—are becoming known to the public, and this marks an upward trend in the business of film production. History, geography, science, art and travel in the picture reels have won the final recognition, and to-day the once ridiculed "movie" is given an important place as a factor in education and culture as well as amusement.

A year or so ago a little group of actors and photographers plunged into the African desert to enact a stirring missionary drama in the midst of the most primitive and savage conditions. That venture is estimated to have cost upward of a quarter of a million dollars, and now at a still higher price a unique conquest has been made of the Holy Land by a party of Americans armed with no more dangerous weapons than moving-picture cameras. Among the historic journeys to this region none has returned with more interesting relics. In all three months have been spent in collecting moving pictures, working often under very trying, even dangerous conditions. As a result of the expedition, however, the Holy Land has been brought nearer than ever before. The picturesque life, the scenes so familiar to the imagination may now pass before our eyes. The American party included a score of people to enact the Bible scenes in their original settings, every one of whom was chosen for his or her ability and desire to carry out the work with intelligent sympathy.

A Typical Group Before the Camera in Palestine

Of course no matter how great the artistic and historic success of such a venture many will feel that an attempt to reproduce scenes from the life and times of our Saviour in the films of the cinematograph is dragging modern invention into a realm that is too sacred to be treated in this way. Such a question naturally arises in our minds as it did in those of the men who planned the whole expedition. Their discussions led them to believe it a subject on which there would always be a wide divergence of opinion, ranging all the way from utter condemnation through various stages of qualified approval to highest praise.

In many respects the difficulties encountered by this band of photographers were more baffling than those met by the crusaders of old. The heat, which is as intense to-day as in the Middle Ages, played havoc with the photographic films. It was necessary to make long journeys across the deserts by caravan to photograph the exact scenes famous in Bible history. Many of the natives regarded the mysterious moving-picture cameras with distrust or open animosity. At times permission to take photographs was flatly refused, and the work had to be carried forward under the protection of a troop of Turkish cavalry.

The success of the journey has been largely due to the active support lent by the United States Government. Instructions were sent by the President and secretary of state to all our consuls in Palestine to lend every possible assistance. Letters were also obtained from Turkish ambassadors to the governor of Palestine and the governor of Jerusalem. The Mohammedans believed that the Americans and their cameras worked an indignity to their religion. Like others, they did not believe in commercializing sacred things.

Nothing has caused such widespread interest in Jerusalem in recent years as the work of these Americans. In order to photograph some of the scenes prominent in New Testament history many parts of the city were visited, several expeditions had to be made by caravan and the moving-picture people were everywhere conspicuous. Although the natives of the more ignorant classes were sometimes resentful, the high officials took the liveliest interest in the work. It was common for the dignitaries of church and state to visit the studios or the scenes enacted and spend an entire day in watching the work. Among the most enthusiastic of the visitors were His Excellency General Abdul Hamid Pasha, civil governor ad interim of Jerusalem and military governor of Palestine; the secretary of foreign affairs, the chief of police of Jerusalem, and the chief justice of the civil courts. The difficulties of making pictures is well illustrated by the experience of making the films illustrating the incident of the Three Wise Men. It was decided to take these pictures near Bethlehem in order to obtain just the right setting. At the time the Turkish Government had sent a garrison of infantry to Medina to preserve order during the Mohammedan pilgrimage, while the officers commanding the troops in Jerusalem had used all their available camels to transport supplies and camp equipment for the men.

The New President and His Cabinet Ready to Settle Down to Business at Their First Meeting

THE early days of our nation's new administration at Washington have been watched, not by America alone, but by all the world, with keenest interest. The inauguration ceremonies were hardly over before the new secretary of state was advising the president of Cuba that a certain law which he wished to enact in the closing days of his term of office was so distasteful to our government that the placing of his signature upon the bill would mean the sacrifice of the friendship of the United States.

Then the course of events in Mexico called for the attention of the new President and his advisers, and within a week President Wilson made public a statement which outlined the government's policy of friendship toward the nations of Central and South America. To most Americans this statement read like a riddle, but those in close touch with Latin-American affairs knew that to the discontented ex-leaders, Castro and Zelaya, it would be a clear warning that any attempt on their part to start a revolution in Central America would be met with the most rigid enforcement of the policy of preserving peace, even at the point of the bayonet. It was generally stated by the despatches on the subject that Mexico, wishing to distract our attention from her attempt to conquer back into her union the seceded States of Sonora and Chihuahua, was secretly to furnish funds with which all Central America would be fomented to such a state that the United States would be compelled to preserve the lives and protect the property of her citizens there.

Some of the innovations of the new administration have come as great surprises to Washington society. A few days ago every one was discussing the abolition by President Wilson of the regular cabinet meetings on Tuesdays and Fridays. He feels that he is too busy a man to preside over these gatherings, which are purely a matter of form when there is no business to transact.

One of the Washington despatches on this subject said:

"The memory of the oldest inhabitant runneth not back to the time when the President did not solemnly enter the cabinet room in the White House at 11 o'clock on cabinet days and take his place at the head of the long table, with the secretary of state at his right and the secretary of the treasury at his left and all the rest streaming down the table. It made not a particle of difference whether there was anything to discuss or not. The cabinet meeting had to be held. When there was nothing to talk about the President, if he were Lincoln, told funny stories, and if he were McKinley he listened to John Hay tell them. After the proper length of time had passed the cabinet arose and put on its silk hats and went out, telling the newspaper correspondents that its lips were sealed."

The moving-picture company required half a dozen camels for the caravan of the Three Wise Men. The natives owned many camels, but these they refused to lend for the purpose for love or money because they did not understand. After many explanations that the Americans had nothing to do with the Turkish army, the natives finally agreed that if the Three Wise Men were actually produced, the camels would be forthcoming.

In due course the men who took the parts of the Three Wise Men arrived on the scene on donkeys, and finally, after much argument, the camels were produced. Throughout the time the famous Bible scene was being enacted just outside of Bethlehem, the natives stood about suspiciously, offering many protests about the treatment of their animals despite the exceedingly liberal fee for the hire of the camels. The appearance of the Three Wise Men in the streets of Bethlehem, by the way, produced a profound sensation. It was necessary for them to walk through the streets for about a mile to join the caravan. The curious crowd of natives became so great that the three actors were obliged to take shelter in a convenient shop. On their entering the room the proprietor of the store gazed thoughtfully at the group for some time and finally remarked, "If this were a couple of thousand years ago I would have taken you for the Three Wise Men from the Bible."

Issuing Special Costumes to the Natives Who Took Part in Some of the Important Scenes

A touching incident of the visit to the Holy Land occurred during the course of the trip to the Sea of Galilee. Sickness and poverty are perhaps as common there to-day as in Bible times, and any one who can give medical aid is implored to lend assistance. In the crowd of natives who pressed about to watch the operation of the moving-picture machine one day was a man whose hand had been badly lacerated by cactus thorns. The moving-picture operator, Mr. Hollister, who had a good knowledge of first aid to the injured, produced his medicine case and cleansed and bound up the wound. Instantly scores of sufferers from a variety of ills pressed forward imploring his attention. Meanwhile the news spread rapidly and the crowd of suppliants increased to a small mob. Soon the sheiks or head men appeared and explained through the interpreter that the "doctor" must remain to attend to the sick in the town, there being no physician. It was useless to argue. A conference was called and the moving-picture apparatus was soon hastily packed up and the party left the town to escape the throngs of sufferers for whom they could do nothing.

In order to secure the pictures at the Sea of Galilee a 246-mile journey across the country was necessary. This trip like several others was made on mules. At night the moving-picture caravan camped out in the open rather than trust itself to the chance accommodations of the native villages. The route to Galilee led the caravan through a wilderness infested by mounted bands of Bedouin outlaws. Throughout this journey all the men of the party traveled heavily armed, while a special military escort supplied by the governor of Palestine was continuously on guard.

The Holy Land is an especially rich field for the moving-picture man. The manners and customs of the people have remained practically unchanged for centuries. It is therefore a comparatively simple matter for the photographer to reproduce Bible scenes with marvelous accuracy. The general aspect of the country is exactly the same as when Christ was on earth. Despite the many masters the land has had since the days of the ancient Hebrew kings and notwithstanding the waves of invasion and conquest, the people still retain their individuality. There is no change, for instance, in the long loose robe of the peasant, the sheepskin coat of the shepherd, or the sandals and turbans of the orthodox Hebrews.

Throughout the country one still finds the one-handed, rough wooden plows. The same form of goad is still used for driving oxen. The same primitive method is still employed for making the "goolah" or earthenware jar which the women use for carrying water. The ancient houses are in many cases exactly as they were in Bible times. With such a setting it has been possible to reproduce Biblical scenes with marvelous historic accuracy. The moving pictures of the scenes from the New Testament which were secured as the result of three months' sojourn in the Holy Land reproduce with marvelous accuracy the historic settings and the moving throngs of twenty centuries ago. As many of the historic edifices have disappeared it was necessary for some of the scenes to erect buildings and prepare a stage with great care as to details in order to reproduce the original picture. The temple, for instance, has long since disappeared from Jerusalem, and so in order to reproduce the temple scenes a temporary structure was built reproducing sections of the original edifice as a great German archeologist has reconstructed it. During the taking of these scenes all those engaged suffered intensely from the heat. The camera box was badly warped and the light was so intense as to necessitate relining the camera with a special light-proof composition.

In taking these pictures it was often necessary to block off a street or gateway for some time, and a considerable body of police was necessary to keep the crowd in order. When the scenes before the Damascus Gate were being enacted and photographed, for instance, an enormous crowd collected. The Damascus Gate is one of the most important entrances to the city to-day as it was in Bible times, and all traffic was held up for several hours while the pictures were being rehearsed and taken.

The care exercised to reproduce the scenes on the shores of the Sea of Galilee illustrates the conscientious attempt at accuracy in these pictures. The shores of any other sea might have served the purpose, but the moving-picture company traveled to the Sea of Galilee and assembled there boats of native fishermen and secured nets such as have been used by the fishermen of Palestine from time immemorial. The films which illustrate the casting of the nets are believed to reproduce the fishing scenes of our Saviour's times as they were in every essential detail.

WHEN ten thousand troops were recently ordered to Galston General Wood reested the Young Men's ristian Association to nd a number of its my secretaries to acmpany the men. Many rilling tales could be d of Y. M. C. A. work the army, tales of rced marches made by retaries at night to reach camp ahead of the troops so that when the men rived the first sight greeting their eyes would be the Y. M. C. A. tent, stand- sturdily and invitingly open with games, magazines and promises of ving-picture shows; tales of hand-to-hand conflicts with the devil, as the renuous secretaries sought to save the soldiers from drunkenness and vice by allurements of religion, friendliness and clean sport, while "a mile and a lf of saloons" beckoned them outside the camp; tales of pledge-signing and ble study, and genuine conversions, for well over one thousand enlisted men the army and navy were converted last year under the influence of the M. C. A. and its strenuous and consecrated secretaries.

Even more thrilling and spectacular have been some of the details and incints of Association work in the navy. To all intents and purposes the M. C. A. secretary on board a man-of-war is the chaplain. Naval officials ve several times suggested that the secretaries take the rank of chaplain, but Association workers refuse to accept this honor. They go on board ship civilians, to be the friend and helper of everybody. An enlisted man must ute a commissioned officer, must stand at attention when speaking to him being addressed. The rank of chaplain would raise many such unpleasant ndicaps as this. The Y. M. C. A. secretary prefers to meet the men inmally, to find all sorts of unconventional times and places and means of tting at a man's heart and saving his soul.

Kipling sang of Fighting Bob Evans as "The man who has lived more ries than Zogbaum and I can invent."

There is a theological graduate at present ashore in New York, who has lived re stories, on sea and land, than many a clergyman or bishop. He is much a bishop as he is chaplain, for all the religious work of great organization of the Young Men's Christian Association the American Army and Navy is under his direction. He esn't look much like a bishop or a chaplain; he is a boyish, ink, modest fellow, but if you can start him to talking about work or can start some one who knows to talking about n you will have fascinating material for many a story. speaks in the most matter-of-fact way of the best thods of tucking in one's blankets in a Cuban camp so t the tarantulas won't creep inside. He tells of Bible classes conducted at sea eighteen feet beneath sea-level with tons of gun-cotton and "Explosive D" stored near. He laughs at remembering the automatic arrangement by which the whole compartment would be flooded in case the temperature rose above a certain point. So the boys took good care, he observes, not to get into too heated arguments over their Bible study in the submarine class-room. This man is the Rev. G. A. Reader, graduate of Garrett Biblical Institute and member of the California Methodist Episcopal Conference. He doesn't care very much about the "Rev." He is prouder of being known in naval circles as "the man who can shoot."

That is a story of camp-life in Guantanamo Bay, Cuba, where the jackies and marines go ashore in batches of a thousand for target practice. Mr. Reader was the first naval Y. M. C. A. secretary. He was appointed in compliance with a request made by President Taft four years ago that the Y. M. C. A. would do something more for the men of the navy, and was detailed to the battleship Nebraska. He had gone aboard equipped with libraries, magazines, games, pedagogical outfit for the elementary branches, a moving-picture machine, lantern slides for travel talks, a good supply of Bibles and song books, and an Estey folding organ—which he could play. But the story of what he did on shipboard must wait till the story of what he did ashore has been told.

Matters were a little dull in and about the Y. M. C. A. tent after the secretary had got it set up. He had found a way to interest the men at sea, but just what to do in a shooting camp he couldn't think for an hour or so. The men shied away from the tent. He could not find out what they were thinking about or wanted to do. He pondered the problem, watching the men. The next morning he went to the armorer's tent, and asked the loan of a rifle. "Do you know how to use a gun?" he was asked. The secretary said he thought so, adding, by way of explanation, that he used to shoot rabbits out on his father's farm in Iowa. "Well, here. This is my own rifle. It is the best in the shop. It will shoot where you point." Thus equipped, the secretary made his way to the rifle range, got a card and a number and took his turn. There was fun from the beginning. At 200 yards he made a score of 48 out of a possible 50; at 300 yards, 45 out of a possible 50; at 500, 45 again out of a possible 50; at 600, 42 out of a possible 50, and so on. There was no trouble getting the men near and into the Y. M. C. A. tent after that. Some one in a detachment marching by the tent shouted: "What's the matter with the Y. M. C. A.

THE SCHOOL OF AFFLICTION

*A SERMON BY REV. O. H. PANNKOKE

TEXT: The raising of the widow's son.
Luke 7: 11-17

WHEN the aged Jacob stood before Pharaoh, and the Pharaoh questioned him to learn from his experience, Jacob answered: "Few and evil have the days of my life been, and have not attained to the life of my fathers." Centuries afterward Paul sums up his life in the wish: "I have a desire to depart and be with Christ, which is far better." In one of the oldest poems of the Anglo-Saxon race, composed when our forefathers lived still in the primeval forest, following the call of the chase or the cry of battle, occurs the mournful refrain: "This he underwent, this also must I." And it seems as though through the succeeding generations the plaint has reverberated as an echo that haunts and will not pass.

This sentiment is not book-knowledge, but it is the knowledge of experience coming to all alike. The statement of the inspired writer has become commonplace in its wide application: Man was born unto trouble even as the sparks fly upward.

In this fact you have one of the gravest stumbling-blocks to Christianity. We say that God is a good God. Yet how can we honestly believe that in the face of the wrong, cruelty, injustice that meets us on every hand? We say that God is righteous and almighty. Yet how can we honestly believe that in the face of sin abounding? We Christians above all say that we are God's children; that he is our dear Father, who watches with more than a father's care to guard us from harm. Yet even our life is checkered with disappointments, trials, difficulties.

Some have said to this question: "God is good, but he lacks the power to enforce his good will and check the evil." How weak that answer and unfitting to God! If God is weak, then he cannot be my God. He must needs be a disappointment. Others have said: "God's goodness and righteousness could not be fully appreciated unless there were a background of evil to set it off." Just as you see the brightness of day much brighter when you enter it from darkness. Again, how empty, how disappointing this answer! It may satisfy the student; it does not satisfy the man in the midst of strife. A poor workman he who must mar his work to attain perfection!

God's School of Life

Many have despaired of life entirely, have said: "Life is evil through and through." The best is to step out, or as the Greek poet has expressed it: "The best thing would have been not to be born at all; the next best to die as soon as possible." It may seem incredible to you, yet at one time scores of men acted on this belief, and at the slightest turn of the wheel of fortune ended their lives, and were honored for it. We cannot find a satisfactory answer by pursuing this course. The warning of Paul to Timothy may well be repeated: "O Timothy, keep that which is committed to thy trust, avoiding profane and vain babblings and oppositions of science falsely so called." God has given us the answer, and has committed it to us in his word. Our Gospel lesson offers us an answer. Let us become acquainted a little with the school of God. Let us see the pupils. Let us see also the lessons and the instruction. But above all let us see the teacher.

At first glance we would feel disappointed, for there is only one pupil, a widow who has lost her son. But Luther has well said that nothing is written in this Bible which is not applicable and intended to be applied to every one who reads it. If you see one pupil, see in yourself the next. Again it seems strange that God's school should harbor such an old scholar, a widow advanced in years. But age is no limit. The golden locks of youth as well as the white hair of age sit shoulder to shoulder in the Lord's school.

Let us become a little closer acquainted with this pupil. She is a widow now. When she had her husband, her heart went out to him; her trust rested on him. Nothing could harm her; she had her husband. Then God stepped in and took the husband. Her only son was left. It seems to be written between the lines how she now turned her hope and confidence to him. He was her stay, the comfort of her fast-approaching old age. Then God stepped in again and took her son. She idolized what God had given her and God took it.

You would say, perhaps, she was an unschooled woman from the country regions of Galilee; she needed the schooling of the Lord. But what of David? A king over a great nation, strong and able. How grievously he went amiss! What of Peter? Trusted by his Lord, only to disappoint him sorely the next moment. What of Paul with all the knowledge of the synagogue and Gamaliel? No, as little as age counts in this school, just as little does knowledge or position preclude admission.

Learning God's Lesson

Mark draws us a picture of an evening in Capernaum. The sun is just sinking over the hills in the west; our Lord is sitting before Peter's home resting after the labors of the day. Then the people of the city, the country round about, bring in the maimed, the halt, the lame, the blind—a long procession. If we had the Lord's eyes looking through the cloaks of propriety we could see the same procession in the crowded city, in the country, the long procession of souls, lame, halt, maimed, blind, dragging along slowly with drooping wings.

These, my friends, are the pupils in the Lord's school. Age does not bring them together, nor common aspirations, nor class nor color distinctions, but only the common need for spiritual help.

What are the lessons to be learned in this school? We can easily point to them in this Gospel lesson. The woman forgot in the joy of earthly happiness that the Lord is over all, asking also for her heart and her full trust. We may say that lesson is simple and readily learned. Luther says: "That man had clear eyes and a deep insight who could see in everything the goodness of his God." Sum up, see whether the lesson is so simple. You have your family; do you thank God for it now, or will you wait until God begins to teach you? You have your livelihood in spite of the many complaints; will you acknowledge God's kindness now, or will you wait until God takes you into his school?

Martha had to learn the lesson of leaving earthly things and clinging only to her Saviour. The disciples had to learn the lesson of faith, especially in that dark hour when their Saviour had left and they were alone, knowing not yet the help, the light, the guidance which should come to them to fill the void in their hearts. In short, the lessons in the Lord's school comprise all the knowledge of God, all the faith and trust in the Saviour, all strength and courage to walk in the Lord's path.

Our Lord has a special way of teaching. He teaches, indeed, by his Word. But how few who would listen and follow! Then he employs his method: Trial, tribulation, difficulty. When the widow in this lesson would not listen to his word, he took her husband. When still she would not see, he took her son. What seemed dearest to her, he took it. What is dearest to man, so dear that life seems to stop short when it is taken, the Lord does not hesitate, when his lessons shall be driven home. God's instruction is no child's play. It cuts deep to the quick. Its object is no small object. It contemplates eternal treasures.

Strength Through Conquest

Peter calls this method the fiery furnace of affliction. He calls it that as much from the intensity as from the results. As the gold can be purified only by passing through the smelter's furnace, so the Christian can attain spiritual manhood only by having the foibles, the weaknesses great and small, burned out, cauterized, hurt though it may. It is to cure and not to kill. It is to gain eternal wealth by the loss of temporal possessions. Nor is the experienced Christian absolved from it. There is no vacation in the Lord's school. As little as the plant can stop growing without dying, just as little can the Christian hope to hold even what he has attained unless there is continual growth. Temptations and trials came to the apostles. Temptations and trials come to every Christian, and by them alone are the rough edges polished, by them alone is the heart cleansed and purified to its very core, until the full Christian life comes out in all its richness, its depth, its purity, leaving a bright ray of hope in its wake.

When the commander places out the guards in the outposts, he is careful to choose those who have been tried before. And he watches them to see whether his trust is misplaced, whether their courage is still with them. Our Lord is placing us at the outposts to see whether we flinch in the face of the enemy. They say of Alexander the Great that he knew the name of every common soldier who had proven courage in his battles. Our Saviour knows the history of his soldiers, his scholars, even better. Their names are recorded in the book of life.

We are climbing upwards. Heaven is our goal. In Switzerland the people in the lowlands, living at ease, lack the hardihood and strength bred in the mountains. Their neighbors in the Alps, through difficulties and hardships, have become strong to overcome. Their eye is clear, their step is sure, their spirit unshaken. God has made our path steep, has led it past precipices, has strewn it with boulders and fallen trees, that the farther we go the stronger we become, at every difficulty growing in our love and service toward him.

In this school the Lord Jesus is teacher. The Lord ranks first among great educators. We are told that when he drew near to the funeral, he had sympathy with the widow. Christ has the sympathy and interest of actual experience and suffering in his charges. The writer of the letter to the Hebrews well says: "We have not an high priest which cannot be touched with the feeling of our infirmities; but was in all points tempted like as we are." The Lord was human, the Lord was tempted, the Lord suffered, the Lord himself underwent all the pangs of human grief in its many forms. He has the sympathy of deep understanding, the closeness of like experience.

Without Cross, No Crown

In good times we turn to the butterflies of humankind, who have never been touched by suffering; are happy, light, and careless. Yet how little they can help us when trouble arises! They don't understand, they have no experience, their sympathy does not touch the wound where it is most needed. We turn instinctively to those persons who have passed through grief. We know that with them we'll find understanding of all our difficulties and sympathy that will reach our heart; for it has the ring of sincerity. They suffered themselves; they know. Our Saviour has suffered more than men. He knows our infirmities.

Christ has the sympathy and interest of personal possession in his charges. He suffered not for the sake of experience, but to redeem. He is not an hireling to whom the protection and guidance of the flock is a burden. But he laid down his life for the sheep. It is a strange paradox of the human heart that the child which caused the most anguish is closest to the mother's heart. She will deny herself again and again to protect it. The Saviour's anguish was real and deep. It led through Gethsemane to Calvary. Yet the burden of that great drama of redemption was the ever-recurring statement: "For us." Christ can well point to the man who left ninety and nine sheep to seek and find one that was lost. He was the man, and that one sheep was made precious by his own lifeblood.

Christ has the authority of all knowledge. When the people of Nain see him help the widow, they exclaim: "The Lord has visited his people." It is a prayer of thanks, indeed. But it seems to be more a satisfaction that the Lord is right in all his ways. They are satisfied to abide by the Lord's guidance, for they are sure he knows all. Even as the passengers on a ship that is nearing the straits in storm and fog become calm when the pilot steps on the bridge, so these people leave their fears when Jesus takes charge. They respond to his sympathy; they respond much more to his knowledge and ability, which are divine.

No, this world is not without hope, nor need we stumble at difficulties that beset our way. They prepare for a better home. We must through much tribulation enter the kingdom of heaven. Without cross, no crown.

THE CALL OF CENTRAL AMERICA

A Guatemalan Village and Volcano

Messrs. Hayter and De Roos with Native Workers in Guatemala

Guatemalan Colporteurs

AS THE date of completion of the Panama Canal draws nearer and as the general business and social interests of the people of the United States are knit closer with ose of Central America, the call of those coun- es for a wider and more effective missionary ser- e is impressing our people. The old statement at stable government can repose only on the foun- tion of a stable religious life seems well exempli- d in the little Southern republics.

The attention of Europe as well as America was ntered upon the little republics only a few weeks o when President Wilson made public his policy th regard to the administration's relations with em. The President said in his communication:)ne of the chief objects of my administration will to cultivate the friendship and deserve the con- lence of our sister republics of Central and South merica and to promote in every proper and hon- able way the interests which are common to the oples of the two continents.

"The United States has nothing to seek in Cen- al and South America except the lasting inter- ts of the peoples of the two continents, the curity of governments intended for the people id for no special group or interests and the devel-)ment of personal and trade relationships be- veen the two continents which shall redound to e profit and advantage of both and interfere with e rights and liberties of neither."

In the light of this restatement of our national elations with Central America a letter describing missionary work in Guatemala comes with added interest. A. Fern Houser, writing from Guatemala City, says in part:

"From our experience in speaking with people in different parts of the United States and England it seems that less is known of Central America than of any other mission field. When the work of the Panama Canal began, the commercial world began to open its eyes to the unlimited resources and possibilities of this country, and we as missionaries feel that the time has fully come for the people of God to cast their eyes upon the field that is already ripe and awaiting an abundant harvest.

"The colporteurs of the different Bible societies have been at work for twenty years sowing the Word of God. For fifteen or more years missionaries here and there have worked among the people until now small churches have sprung up in a large number of the towns and villages of Central America. The people are eager to hear the Word of God and the larger number of missionaries feel that the time for a great awakening has fully come.

"At the annual conference in Guatemala City last April we seemed determined to take something home that would give a new experience on the mission field. Many had come very discouraged. God met our needs most graciously in sending Mr. A. B. DeRoos of San José, Costa Rica. His morning talks were most wonderfully used in the uplifting of the missionaries and of native workers, and the evenings given over to evangelistic work resulted in a great number of conversions.

"Mr. DeRoos is a Jew, born in Holland. His father, during the days of Mr. DeRoos's training, was second to the rabbi in the Orthodox Jewish Church, so from his youth he was taught the Scriptures. He came to America at the age of about sixteen and encountered everything that a wide-awake foreign boy experiences. He was converted at the age of twenty-one, after many days and nights of searching to 'see if these things were so.' He was preaching the Gospel in the open air at seven o'clock the next night. He has been working among Spanish-speaking people in Central America and the Philippine Islands for fifteen years.

"The church in San José was practically dead when he went there a few months ago. The mission hall is now filled to overflowing, many have been converted, and seven prayer circles have been organized in different parts of the city.

"Mr. James Hayter, agent of the American Bible Society, Guatemala City, Central America, travels with Mr. DeRoos and helps largely in the meetings. They recently completed a tour through part of Guatemala. In every town where meetings were held, the seating capacity of the halls was taxed. In San Marcos, one of the most indifferent towns in the republic, over thirty were brought to a decision for Christ and the whole church took on new life. In Huehuetenango the mission hall was filled to overflowing every night except one when the rain came down in torrents. Large numbers from the best families have come to listen night after night with deep interest."

I'M HERE. By my two-dollar little watch I've been here exactly thirty-two minutes. I know—I know I promised, Lady You, not to "judge" anybody or anything for a whole hour at least. o I'm waiting, but twenty-eight more minutes are o many! I'm afraid I've got my judgment all eady to judge the instant my little clock strikes ixty. I'd wait two hours if I could—I'm thankful didn't promise.

I'll fill in my waiting with plain narrative. A Wrapper Woman down stairs "showed" me right up ere to my room. It has been my room thirty-six ninutes now—my painted bedstead, my bureau, ny little three-cornered washstand. It isn't my arpet on the floor because there isn't any carpet. For the same perfectly good reason it is not my asy-chair and they are not my curtains at the vindow.

I stopped at a flag station—that is its only name —and a very large man with a very small horse rought me and my trunk up here. The large man s the Wrapper Woman's husband; I don't know what relation the tiny horse is to her. But there are many Wrapper children. I counted all those n sight and those partly in sight and the baby's hirt on the clothesline, and it used up all my fingers and one thumb. Well, it was children I came here to find—why are you writing of them in that one of voice, Janet Yale? Did you want to teach middle-aged scholars? (Subsides Janet Yale.)

Fifty-nine, sixty! I've waited my whole hour. Now may I cry, dear Lady You? May I splutter and splurge and feel better? I didn't want to come here! I've inhabited the world twenty years, lacking a little month, and I never went to a place I wanted to go to. I never shall! I shall always go to the places I don't want to and do the things and eat the meals with the people I don't want to—dear Lady You, here is where you come in. This is what you are for. Would you mind laying down your beautiful fluff of knitting-work if you are knitting, and being sorry for me? Without your work, sorry—you can't be sorry enough, knitting.

I don't like the Wrapper Woman. Why must people wear wrappers with little belts that cross in front? I don't like that Wrapper Man nor any of the Wrapper children, in sight or partly in sight. I don't like anybody except the little clothes on that line. We passed forlorny houses, coming here —I don't like those. I know perfectly well there's a forlorny little schoolhouse waiting round the corner of next Monday for me. Lady You, oh, dear Lady You, I want to be pitied, and that is what you are for! Put out your dear white hand and rub my hair the wrong way—no one ever rubbed my hair the wrong way. Say "Janet, poor dear!" I think then perhaps I could primp at that foggy little glass across the room and go downstairs to tea. If you said "Janet, poor dear!" it would be like taking my hand and going down with me.

A little Wrapper Child came up for me. I heard a funny little scaredy voice at the door.

"Supper's ready. Ma says to mind the hole at the top o' the stairs. Las' teacher ketched her foot —my!"

I know what that "my" meant—las' teacher fell down stairs. Well, it would be a different way to go down. I almost wish New Teacher's foot had ketched. I'm in a mood for different things to-night. Lady You, for twenty years, lacking a month, I've kept right on doing the same things. I never even fell downstairs.

There were eleven of us at supper and we said just about eleven words. Mine was "Please." The Wrapper Woman said the other ten. She is the plainest woman I ever saw, and the ten words were plain. If she wears a wrapper Sunday, too, what shall I do? I haven't seen the baby, but if he wears one with a little belt crossed in front— He cried somewhere in another room while we were at supper, and it was a Wrapper cry.

"Janny, you go turn him over," I heard his mother whisper, and one of the Wrapper children went. Now what does 'Janny' stand for—does it stand for Janet? If it does—oh, Lady You, oh, Lady You, pity me some more! I'm silly and babyish to-night—come and turn me over. Is that what they do to babies when they cry out in their little sleeps? It sounds like a nice thing to have done to you, but I know no one ever did it to me. I always had to turn myself over. Perhaps that belongs with orphan asylums. Hear me whining! Be ashamed o' yersel', Janet Yale! (Here blushes Janet Yale.)

I'm going to bed. Good-night, my Lady You. It's nice to think of you in a beautiful bed, under a down quilt. I wish I knew whether to give you a lady's maid or not. I believe I'd better, and still—

This is Monday morning and I'm talking to keep my courage up. Not my carnal courage, but the

THE SEVEN CHURCHES OF ASIA

EPHESUS, THE CHURCH OF WANING ENTHUSIASM

BY REV. FRANCIS E. CLARK, D.D., LL.D.

Founder and President of the Christian Endeavor Society

ILLUSTRATIONS FROM PHOTOGRAPHS BY MRS. CLARK

I KNOW of no passage in all the Bible which is more important for the modern church to read and ponder than the message to the ancient church in Ephesus.* This church had many good points, and is praised for its good works, nor is it condemned unqualifiedly in any respect, as are some of the Seven Churches. But it had lost its first love. The fine enthusiasm of its earliest days when Paul lived there, and when Timothy, Aquila, Priscilla, Tychicus and Apollos helped to mold its character had evaporated.

This message was probably written some thirty years after the founding of the church by St. Paul. The luxury, the intellectual atmosphere of which the inhabitants were so proud, the spirit of criticism and unbelief, the natural accompaniment of such an atmosphere, the undue emphasis on Christian liberty, had all united to bring about a degeneration in the sturdy fiber of the early Christianity of the Ephesian church.

This church is the prototype of ten thousand to-day; churches that are active and zealous in philanthropies, whose benevolences are unstinted, whose patient continuance in well-doing is to be commended, yet they have lost their enthusiasm, their joy in service, their aggressive compelling power to awaken sinners and turn men to Christ.

In a recent article describing an attempt to evangelize a community where various social means were used to interest the people, and a Gospel address concluded the effort, the writer takes much pains to declare that there was "no emotion" and to repeat that "emotional excitement was entirely absent." I imagine the same thing might have been said of the church of Ephesus. It had left its "first love"; it had lost its emotion, and though it did good work, and labored with patience, it was not doing its "first works" with the zeal and love and holy joy of its earlier days.

The site of a church which has so much in common with the majority of churches of these latter days is of peculiar interest. To visit it we start from the great seaport of Smyrna, where was situated also, we remember, one of the Seven Churches of Revelation. The journey to Ephesus is by no means a long or arduous one. Indeed, so short and easy is it that more tourists by far visit the ancient site of Ephesus each year than all the other six together. We take the train at the substantial Caravan Bridge Station in the heart of Smyrna. A score or more of two-horse public carriages are hurrying passengers, each with a pile of miscellaneous baggage, to the station. Ragged camels, loaded with great panniers on either side, dispute the way with the modern landaus. On the railway platform boys are selling the morning papers; others tempt the passenger with large rings of bread hung upon a long pole, while others offer for sale rahatlakoum, or Turkish delight, or perhaps would refresh the thirsty traveler with booza, a concoction far more harmless than its name sounds, or with sílep, a drink made from orchid roots with a sprinkling of cinnamon and ginger on top.

Soon the train pulls into the station from Smyrna Point, and we take our seats in a comfortable car built mainly after the American style, though the train also contains some small compartments for English travelers who do not like to mingle with hoi polloi.

Our train may be said to start in a cemetery, for the Caravan Bridge Station is barely outside of a great cypress grove, which contains two large Turkish cemeteries, with their leaning and dilapidated and altogether disreputable headstones. A minute or two after leaving the station we pass the burial ground of the Jews, and another of the Christians, with beautiful monuments of white marble.

Every rod of the way has its peculiar interest to the traveler. Under frowning Mount Pagus, crowned with the ruins of the ancient citadel, the railway passes, and ascends a lovely valley, through which chatters a beautiful brook. A magnificent aqueduct built only two centuries ago, spans the valley, and higher up a far older aqueduct, which takes us back perhaps to Roman times.

At the first stop, four miles out of the city, the guard cries out "Paradise! Paradise!" We are not looking for Paradise in Turkey, but if any place in the Sultan's domains deserves the name it is doubtless this little station, for here are being erected the buildings for the International College of Smyrna, an American Christian college, manned by American teachers, and built by liberal donations of American money. Here will soon be gathered hundreds of students of different races and languages, to be trained not only in the lore of the schools, but in the higher knowledge which is "the beginning of wisdom." Every few miles we stop at some little Turkish town, but few of them have any special interest for the modern traveler, though each of them has a history that runs back thousands of years, and through each of them has passed, probably, victorious or defeated armies marching proudly in their triumph, or straggling dejectedly in defeat.

Everywhere are hills. The narrow valley through which we pass is by them guarded close on every side. Everywhere, too, at least when we made the journey, in the early spring, beautiful flowers, gorgeous anemones, scarlet and purple and white, some of the blossoms as large as a silver dollar, make the banks of the railway gay.

After two and a half hours, some forty-eight miles from Smyrna, "Ayasolouk!" is called by the guard with stentorian voice, and we find that we have come to the railway station of the Church of Waning Enthusiasm. Though still two miles from the site of the Ephesus that St. John knew, Ayasolouk, which means "Holy Theologian" (referring to St. John), is itself full of interesting ruins. Before we step off the railway train the great Roman aqueduct looms upon the landscape, an aqueduct so enormous that it can be seen when many miles away. In the wretched little village of Ayasolouk, which now boasts only a few hundred inhabitants, the pillars of this aqueduct, forty-five feet tall, stand high above the huts like enormous monuments, on the tops of which the storks

CHICAGO'S MEN OF TO-MORROW

A DOZEN years ago a passenger on an elevated train in Chicago had a vision. Looking out of the car window he beheld below him the wretched streets, filthy back yards and dirty alleyways of a slum section of the city—all of which swarmed with ragged, ill-kept children. Then came the vision—quite as distinctly as that which came to St. Paul as he journeyed Damascus-ward. It was that of a substantial building located in the heart of one of these plague spots, within which these street waifs could be given an opportunity to gain an outlook upon life other than that which would inevitably come to them in their natural playground of the streets—a place that should make good in a measure the deficiencies of homes that were the center for the most part of drunkenness, corruption, ignorance and crime.

The man to whom this vision came was J. F. Atkinson, founder of the Chicago Boys' Club. Fortunately, he lived to see his dream come true in a three-fold measure, for at the time of his death, less than a year ago, this organization possessed three such club houses in congested parts of the city.

The Chicago Boys' Club is different from most societies for juveniles. It is not so much of a playhouse as a workshop. Although the athletic and recreative features are present, they do not receive as much emphasis as the creative or industrial features. Best of all, the appeal to the spiritual side of these unfortunate children is not neglected, and many of these boys here become acquainted with Christ at the most impressionable period of their lives.

When the work was first undertaken, a few ragged "newsies" were gathered two or three times a week into one room of an old building near the corner of State and Van Buren Streets, in the Loop District. Here they were amused with simple games—the purpose being simply to provide a place where wild, reckless, undisciplined boys with little or nothing in the way of home influences could be kept off the street and given an opportunity to "let off steam." From such a beginning the work has grown until there are now three substantial buildings in various quarters of the city, each of them given over wholly to this work. One of them is in the upper North Side German district; the second is in the heart of the South Side slums; the third is in one of the worst sections of the city—the lower North Side, known locally as "Little Hell." This latter club house is in the center of the "Black Hand District," within a stone's throw of the fountain head of some of the worst Black Hand plots that have been unearthed by the police.

John H. Witter

Superintendent of the Chicago Boys' Club

Few realize that Chicago is so largely a city of foreigners. Roughly speaking, there are 1,750,000 aliens in this city of two and a half million people. The majority of them live in more or less congested centers, or "carbuncles," as they are called by social workers. Here it is that scores of thousands of future citizens form their ideals of life—ideals that are to govern them in later years and find expression in the life of city, State and nation. It is the aim of the Chicago Boy's Club to place a club house for these "men of to-morrow" in every congested center, and thus influence the welfare of the coming generation.

Each of the club houses now in operation has a carpenter shop, equipped with necessary tools, in the use of which the boys are instructed by a competent workman. Drawing, painting, wood-burning, lettering, are also taught, as are printing, basket-weaving, and other useful occupations. One of the most remarkable evidences of the interest and appreciation of these street waifs for the opportunities placed within their reach is the work in oils and water colors done by some of them. With the Italian children especially the artistic sense seems to be invariably present, needing only the proper touch to awaken it. Some of the pictures painted by these children are truly remarkable.

Each club has its gymnasium, library and lecture rooms. Gospel meetings are held one week-day night, and Sunday afternoon is given up to a little Bible school. Although the membership is composed of many nationalities and of many religious beliefs, the effort of the Chicago Boys' Club is to bring them all to know Christ as their personal Saviour and to take him as their Guide through life. Between sixteen and seventeen hundred boys are at the present time receiving the larger outlook upon life which comes through this most practical of uplift works.

THE SEVEN CHURCHES OF ASIA

have built their nests, and at the base of which they stalk about majestically, sure that their sacred character will protect them from harm.

Just beyond the columns of the ancient aqueduct we come to an ancient gate which leads to the ruins of the Church of St. John, whose enormous size shows how huge was the basilica dedicated to the writer of Revelation. Not far away are the well-preserved ruins of a great Turkish mosque.

But in the most interesting spot in Ayasolouk once stood one of the seven wonders of the world, none other than the temple of "the great goddess Diana, whom all Asia and the inhabited earth worshipeth," as Demetrius the silversmith proclaimed. This is the temple concerning whose goddess the mob that would have killed St. Paul cried out for the space of two hours, "Great is Diana of the Ephesians!" or more likely, it was an invocation to the goddess which they repeated vociferously for two hours: "Great Diana of the Ephesians!"

It is hard to realize, as one looks at the few marbles that are left on the swampy site near Ayasolouk, stones often covered with water, that this could have been the site of one of the wonders of the world, a temple that rivaled in magnificence, if it did not excel, the Taj Mahal of Agra, the most perfect example of ecclesiastical architecture that the world knows to-day.

We must hurry on to the ruins of the Roman city of Ephesus, some two miles beyond Ayasolouk. Here one who longs to follow in the footsteps of the saints feels that he is indeed on holy ground. Much of the ancient city has been excavated. On these marble pavements doubtless Paúl and Apollos walked, perhaps arm in arm, as they talked over the affairs of the infant church, and the progress of the kingdom of the Master whom they loved. Over these pavements too doubtless John walked in rapt contemplation of the things which afterwards he might reveal. According to the ancient legend, which, like many legends, has marks of verisimilitude, in his extreme old age the saint was carried through the streets of the city day by day, saying to his disciples, "Little children, love one another!"

The poet Eastwood has beautifully told this story in his lines about St. John the aged:

> What say you, friends?
> That this is Ephesus, and Christ has gone
> Back to his kingdom? Ay, 'tis so, 'tis so;
> I know it all; and yet, just now, I seemed
> To stand once more upon my native hills,
> And touch my Master. . . .
> Up! bear me to my church once more,
> There let me tell them of a Saviour's love;
> For by the sweetness of my Master's voice
> I think he must be very near. . . .
> So raise up my head;
> How dark it is! I cannot seem to see
> The faces of my flock. Is that the sea
> That murmurs so, or is it weeping? Hush!
> My little children! God so loved the world
> He gave his Son; so love ye one another,
> Love God and men. Amen.

In one of these side streets which lead out of the main marble thoroughfare very likely Priscilla and Aquila wrought at their trade, perhaps with Paul's help, during the long winter evenings.

There are so many places of supreme historic and Biblical interest about Ephesus that a volume might be written, as many volumes have been written in the past, about this most fascinating city. Here is the great Double Church, so called, where one of the important councils of the church was held. Here are ruins of tombs, one of which is called the Tomb of St. Luke, and the temples of many gods; ruins of the agora or market-place, of the great gymnasium, of the stadium where the Grecian youth exercised themselves, more in physical than intellectual life, somewhat according to the custom of the youth of our own day.

But perhaps the most interesting of these ruins is that of the great theater, capable of seating 24,500 people. As in all these old theaters, the seats followed the semi-circular excavation in the hillside. The marble slabs on which the people of Ephesus sat as they witnessed the games, have been taken away, though it is not difficult to mark their former position. In the proscenium are heaped together in endless confusion capitals and friezes and drums of columns, and architraves. Here it was that the mob shouted their praise of Diana for two long hours. Here it was that at last the town clerk of Ephesus quieted the people by telling them that every one knew that Ephesus was the "temple keeper" of the great goddess Diana, and of the image that fell down from Jupiter, and thus by his shrewd opportunism and appeal to their religious pride he quieted the people, assuring them that Paul and his companions were neither robbers of temples, nor yet blasphemers of the goddess, and that Demetrius, if he had anything against them, could prosecute them in the courts.

As we stand in the theater to-day we can hear in imagination the hoarse shouts of the angry mob, as they monotonously invoked the goddess. We can hear the politic words of the town clerk, and see Alexander the Jew vainly trying to gain a hearing from the people, who would not listen to a despised Israelite.

But the message in Revelation came to a church that had escaped its early dangers, and that likewise, as is often the case, had lost its early enthusiasms. In Paul's Epistle to the Ephesians there is no indication that he noticed any spiritual declension. His words are words of confidence and approbation, quite different from his letter to the Galatians and the Colossians.

But a generation had passed when St. John wrote the Book of the Revelation, and, though the works and the labor and the patience of the Ephesian Church and its reprobation of evil are still known, yet the Master had somewhat against it. It had lost its enthusiasm.

OUR EDITORIAL FORUM

Warning the Revolutionists

OUR government has no desire to become involved in the domestic quarrels of the Latin republics of America. At the same time, since Providence has placed upon us a certain measure of responsibility for the maintenance of peace and order along our own borders, and for the protection of foreigners residing in and having business relations with the Southern republics, we must accept that responsibility and carry it out in some practical, conservative way, if we do not mean to afford an excuse for interference by other Powers. Unfortunately, the revolutionary fever seems to be contagious in Central America, and there have been recent indications of a sudden outburst which might duplicate in more than one of the petty republics the Mexican scenes of lawlessness and riot. This situation was the subject of discussion at a recent cabinet meeting in Washington, the outcome of which was a public statement from the President, in which, while reaffirming the cordial and friendly relations existing between those republics and ourselves, he intimates very clearly that no countenance will be given by our government to any projects or movements that tend to disorder or the disregard of constitutional rights. Special emphasis is laid on the fact that "we can have no sympathy with those who seek to seize the power of government to advance their own personal interests or ambitions."

This is a fair warning to plotters who aspire to overthrow existing governments and set up as rulers, regardless of the wishes of the people and by means of methods which do not appeal to civilization. In these periodic disturbances, the "will of the people" is not considered. Every vestige of popular government is swept aside by a few bold adventurers, who, backed by a mere fraction of the population, march into power through blood and outrage and relax their grasp of the country's throat only when they, in turn, are dragged down by some new revolution. If the President's warning should result in averting even a single needless revolution, it will be a service rendered to civilization and humanity.

"Heartily—as to the Lord"

LIFE is often perplexing because we do not have a steady, unvarying principle of action, a never-failing, never-changing motive. So long as we are trying to please a number of people, or even one human being, ourself or another, we shall be apt to make costly blunders and failures. There is only one adequate, satisfactory, sensible rule of life—and that is to try to please God. It simplifies matters greatly when one gets that point absolutely fixed.

It is really wonderful how perfectly this rule of life can be made to fit every issue. To live for self; even to live for others without the thought of God; to try to do good work for gain or praise or to please or help another—all these fail of guiding to peace and to success. But to set out on an eternal mission with the steadfast purpose of pleasing God every minute—that makes life glorious. And on that basis we ourselves, and all whom our life and service touch, get a far better bargain. For God loves us and loves them infinitely better than we love them or can love ourselves. If we do our work straight out for him, he will see to it that we and they shall be well served. Every affection and obligation of life is made noble and holy and successful by being given over to God first. Our one and only business is to please him. Doing that we shall do all good things better.

"Heartily" means from the heart. To get this kind of service out of the heart something must first be put into the heart. That something is the grace of God. By nature we do not care for him; we are not willing to serve him; we are disinclined to trust him. But when we receive his grace all this is changed. We do love him then. We are anxious to please him. And "from the heart" we serve him gladly. For "heartily" also implies "with gladness." We are doing what we want to do—because we want to please him. So life becomes a jubilee, not a drudgery.

The promises to those who adopt this plan of life are very rich, not only for the next world but for this. "Seek ye first the kingdom of God and his righteousness, and all these things shall be added unto you." "My God shall supply all your need according to his riches in glory by Christ Jesus."

Can we refuse this gentle urging of our Maker and Redeemer? Does he not know best? Has he not earned by his eternal love and by the dreadful sacrifice his Son made for us the right to be loved and trusted and served? His yoke is easy and his burden light. There will be hard things to do, but we shall have joy and victory in the doing of them, so long as we work, "not with eye service, as menpleasers, but as the servants of Christ, doing the will of God from the heart!"

Remembering Old Sins

PERHAPS you can see them now as you look back into your past—words and deeds of guilty thoughtlessness, if not of wanton wickedness. Perhaps some companion of your younger life comes up vividly to memory's view, and seems to say, "I hungered for the bread of life—you made it seem a cheat; I thirsted for the living waters, but you commended them not; I wanted the Christian's robe, but you seemed to set no value upon it; my soul was sick, and you passed by on the other side."

Have not many of us such bitter memories? We remember, with shame and confusion, the sins which God has forgiven; and it is well to remember them, though we are not to carry the burden of them with us. Our Saviour bears that, blessed be his name! Yet for our good, for our gain in humility and watchfulness, he leaves the thorn in the flesh—the memory of sins past through the forbearance of God.

A poor, humble Christian died weeping over the recollection of old sins. The nurse dried the tear-wet eyes, and as the last breath left the body, and the pulse fluttered no more, wiped them again, and withdrew to some other duty. When she returned to the bedside she called the attention of a visitor to another tear on the cheek of the dead. Life had been extinct for some minutes; but the water gathered in the eye had dropped on the cheek in that last tear. The spirit was gone, but a tear remained behind, a sacred token of godly sorrow for sins forever past.

Only a life of love and well-doing plants no thorns in the dying pillow.

Reconstructing History

IN THE present controversy over the attempts of the Roman hierarchy to lay the foundations of papal temporal supremacy in America, we have occasionally invited attention to the rather dangerous expedient of distorting history, to which the Roman Church gives in practice frequent endorsement. We have shown how Rome has claimed through her priests, journals, and schools that she was the founder of religious freedom and the beneficent inspirer of all that is worth honoring and preserving in this republic. This amazing arrogance, however, is simply in line with the same policy of historical misrepresentation she has persistently followed in other lands. One of the latest illustrations of this character is found in the London Tablet of January 18, 1913, which prints an article on Thomas à Becket, Archbishop of Canterbury. English history shows that during the reign of Henry II the power of the Popes had risen to an arrogant height and disputes about investitures and the subjection of the clergy to lay jurisdiction in criminal matters were subjects of continual and bitter strife between the church and the crowned heads of Europe. When elevated to the See of Canterbury, Becket, who till then had worked in harmony with the Crown, was placed in a position where he must decide "whether he would have to serve the church or the state, and he declared for the former without hesitation." In 116 the Constitutions of Clarendon were adopted, the chief purpose of which was to assert the supremacy of the "ancient usages" of the kingdom (which had all the force and recognition of statutory laws) over the canonical laws of Rome.

When these were submitted to Becket for his seal of approval—the other prelates having affixed their seals—he refused, although he yielded afterward at the king's command. The Tablet refers to these sixteen provisions, ten of which were "condemned" by the Pope and six "tolerated," as merely the local form of a general issue, although it was really national and perennial. It was in effect a plain declaration of the supremacy of the State in all the affairs relating to the government of the country; yet we are told by the Tablet that Becket died "for the freedom of the church from state control," which is simply the opposite of the fact. Pursuing this line of argument, it reminds us that the Roman Church is a "perfect society," that is: having authority in the triple order: legislative, judicial and coercive. Finally it declares that "the true concept of the liberty of the church is freedom from what is foreign authority to her viz., that of the state"; also—and these are the Tablet's own words—that "the Roman Church is independent in her own sphere of governments parliaments and kings." There could be no clearer definition of the supremacy of the canonical law of Rome over the laws of any and every government in Europe, or over the laws of our own States, as well as those of the Federal Government.

Will Immigration Decline?

OUR enterprising contemporary, Collier's Weekly, puts on its prognosticator's cap and after scanning economic conditions on two continents, ventures the prediction that the "period of great immigration to the United States is over." It holds that overpopulation in Europe is a thing of the past, and this, together with the fact that the colonial projects of the various governments are drawing more and more heavily on their people, and that wages abroad have risen generally, it believes will combine to keep the working class at home. It seems to have overlooked one important factor in the case, however. Notwithstanding the expression of popular enthusiasm over the general army increase among the great Powers of Europe, there is little doubt that many thousands will desire to escape the compulsory military laws. Taxes will naturally rise in those countries where army service is forced upon the people, and the cost of living will mount in proportion. It is reasonable to suppose that such conditions will apply in Italy, Austria, Germany, France and Russia. In the Balkans, the new spirit of Slav solidarity may operate to restrict emigration; but looking at general conditions in Europe, there would seem to be little cause to apprehend any great falling off in immigration in the immediate future. It may change in its character, just as we have had in succession the rising and falling tides of Irish, Italian, German, Scandinavian and Russian immigration; but it would take the vision of a seventh son to predict with any degree of reliability what race or races will go to make up the next influx to the land of liberty. We hardly think that Ellis Island will be put out of business for some time to come.

Shocking Dynamite Disaster

BALTIMORE and the country for a hundred miles around was rocked as with an earthquake shock by the explosion of 343 tons of dynamite on board the British tramp steamer Alum Chine in the lower harbor off Fort Carroll on the morning of March 7, killing fifty persons and seriously injuring a hundred more, and destroying property worth $500,000. The Alum Chine and a loading scow alongside her were blown to atoms; the tug Atlantic was set on fire and sank, and the United States collier Jason, just completed and ready for trial, was raked to her deck and her armor riddled. At first it was thought that a stevedore struck a steel hook into a box of dynamite, causing the disaster. It is generally believed that a fire in the hold of the vessel, from which smoke was seen coming some minutes before, occasioned the fearful explosion. J. G. Reese of Cardiff, Wales, chief engineer of the Alum Chine, who had gotten away with others in the launch Jerome when they saw smoke coming from the hold of their vessel, gave this description of the catastrophe: "I was about 200 feet away. It seemed as though a great column of fire, fifty feet high and twenty feet in diameter, topped by another column of black smoke two hundred feet higher, came up from the sea, enveloping the ship. It was several minutes before the smoke cleared away and the sea became calm, but when it did there was no sign of either the ship or the barge. Both had disappeared, and not a sign of life was visible." William E. Van Dyke of Baltimore, captain of the wrecked tug Atlantic, lost his life in a heroic attempt to rescue two sailors from the Alum Chine. Captain Van Dyck took a number of men on board who had fled in panic from the steamer laden with dynamite, and smoking in the hold, and had gotten to safety when he saw two sailors who were on the fated vessel and crying piteously for help. The captain, knowing the danger, went back and got them. He had hardly gotten the nose of his tug into open water when the explosion came, killing him and many others, including one of the sailors he had gone back to save. F. J. Anesty, captain of the Alum Chine, was in the city of Baltimore on business at the time of the explosion. A catastrophe similar to this occurred in New York harbor not very long ago. Others of the kind have shocked many cities and communites in various parts of the country. At these times, when there is such demand for these explosives in removing the barriers to the roads and avenues of industry, it would seem that the scientific mind that could conceive and carry out such gigantic engineering enterprises might discover some chemical that would tame the warring elements of the explosives and hold them harmless until such a time that they should be intelligently set off to accomplish the work intended. There is not an element in nature, however useful and benevolent as a servant, that is not angry and destructive as a master. This tragedy preaches a little louder and more eloquently a sermon on life's insecurities from the text:

Be ye also ready: for in such an hour as ye think not the Son of man cometh. (Matt. 24: 44.)

Flagman Saves Train

PASSENGERS on their way to the inauguration at Washington on a train running past Princeton Junction, N. J., at seventy miles an hour would have been in a collision which would have resulted in a terrible loss of life if it had not been for the level-headedness and quick action of the flagman, John Schrenk. A freight train was running south at a good speed when, with a jar that threw Schrenk from the cupola of the caboose where he sat at lookout, the long string of cars broke in the middle and the rear section piled up against its head car, which was thrown across the outside or fourth track used for southbound passenger traffic. Schrenk had seen the headlight of the limited hardly a mile in the rear coming on at full speed on the outside track. Realizing the danger to the flyer, he ran down the track, got one torpedo on the rail, and not having time to place another, stood in the middle of the track, throwing his arms and lantern about, hoping that in the glare of the headlight the warning would be discovered. Though one torpedo is only the signal for slowing, the engineer of the train called down brakes, and stopped his train only a hundred feet from a freight car which was square across the track of the express. The wise and diligent heroism of this humble employee, which resulted in the saving of so many lives, is but another illustration of the many acts of heroism in all the callings, and especially that of railroading, which are only a part of the commonplace, everyday duties which are done loyally and with no expectation of medal or especial mention. We ought to be as ready to see moral dangers and do all in our power to save our fellows from their perils. The wise man warned against the dangers in the pathway:

Avoid it, pass not by it, turn from it, and pass away. (Prov. 4: 15.)

Ideal Sunday in Washington

THE people of Washington and of the country in general were curious to know what kind of a Sunday the first at the White House and at the capital would be under the new administration. Society circles of Washington were surprised, and the church people of the nation generally were delighted that the day was observed as a day of rest and of worship. Not an executive office of any of the departments was open. There was no work done at the White House. Secretary Tumulty told every one connected with the administration at the White House to spend Sunday at home. Had a bomb exploded it would not have caused more astonishment. President Wilson sent word to the executive officers that unless messages of the first importance came he did not want to see them until Monday morning. Secretary of State Bryan gave the same order in his department. The President and his daughters attended the Central Presbyterian Church. Vice-President Marshall and Secretary Bryan both taught classes in Sunday school before going to the church services with their families. Society, taking its cue from the White House, forswore morning paper chases, afternoon bridge parties, and dinner dances to form unusual additions to Washington church congregations. The reckless and wholesale disregard and desecration of the Lord's Day has become a national sin. It will be hard to calculate the moral effect of the example of Sabbath observance set by our leaders at Washington. The old promise of national prosperity to those who should remember the Lord's Sabbath holds good now in our land:

And hallow my Sabbaths; and they shall be a sign between me and you, that ye may know that I am the Lord your God. (Ezek. 20: 20.)

Ex-Bartender Student

A YOUNG man, who one year ago was a bartender in his father's saloon, is now a student on the honor roll at Princeton. He was a promising Swedish American boy and an enthusiastic friend of Princeton in all the games, and as he was ambitious and desirous of attending college the Princeton University Club of Chicago awarded him the scholarship in its possession, and he entered on his four years' course as a freshman last fall. The registrar's records show that young Larsen has been placed in the "second general group" for his first term. This in itself indicates high standing. In an interview he gave the credit of his success thus far to the ability and fidelity of his professors, and put a very high estimate upon the beautiful friendships he had made with fellows of intelligence and virtue. He said he was anxious to succeed for the sake of the men of the Chicago Club who had made his course possible as well as for his own. Young Larsen, a man of faultless habits, is one of the most popular of the hundreds of students at Princeton. He is to be congratulated on his resolutions and rapid progress in the development of a splendid manhood. The most perfect success will come to him in paying attention to this injunction:

Stand fast in the faith, quit you like men, be strong. (I Cor. 16: 13.)

Says Truth Doesn't Pay

THAT she scarcely ever told the truth, because so doing did not pay, was the confession of a young girl arraigned before Judge Barteime of the Juvenile Court in Chicago the other day. The girl was reticent about answering questions. Finally she burst into tears, and told the judge the story of her wrongdoing. "Are you telling me the truth?" asked Judge Barteime. "Every word is true," answered the child. "You are the only person I ever have told the truth to since I was old enough to tell a lie. I would rather tell the truth, but liars are better treated than truth-tellers." The judge said: "Mary, I am a friend of yours. I want to help you to be a good girl." "Don't see how you can be good on the square," said Mary. "If you tell just what happens you get into trouble with your mother and father. I don't want to be bad. I want to be good. I feel better now since I have told you, and I will be glad to have you help me to be a good girl." The tears and confession of the poor little girl in court and her declaration of her strong desire to do right were the gleams of light that revealed the divine spark and the hope for a reformed and beautified life. The girl was taken to the municipal juvenile home, where she will receive the shelter of a sweet charity and very likely grow up to be a well-educated, truthful, virtuous woman. If she shall only give herself up in complete faith to Christ, the friend of the child and Saviour of the wayward, she will grow up to beautify society and bless mankind. Both those taken out of the underworld at the start, like this little girl in Chicago, and those lifted out of it later by the hand of charity or of Christ will realize that

The wages of sin is death; but the gift of God is eternal life through Jesus Christ our Lord. (Rom. 6: 23.)

100,000 Beautiful Roses—Free!

Guarantee: We guarantee to replace free of charge every Rosebush that fails to bloom at the first natural blooming period after it has had a chance to become established, which in most cases will be the first season, but with the Climbing Roses especially will be the second season. This guarantee is made with the expectation that every one receiving Roses will not allow them to die from neglect or lack of ordinary care.

INSPECTED.—You will, undoubtedly, realize the importance of securing Rosebushes which are entirely free from either insect pests or fungous diseases. Every lot of roses that we send out will be carefully inspected and will bear the label of the Department of Agriculture, showing the stock in the Nursery to be free of all insects or diseases of any kind whatsoever.

OUR ROSES SEPARATELY LABELED.—The Rosebushes which we shall send out this year will each be individually labeled, so that you will have no difficulty from the very start in knowing exactly which rose is which. You can therefore select suitable locations for each of the roses at the time of planting; the climbers where they can climb and the other roses where the book of instructions advises you as the most suitable location.

ONE-YEAR-OLD ROSEBUSHES.—Every rosebush will be of one-year-old stock or older. They will have a strong growth of wood stems, 5 to 8 inches long. Still more important than top growth is the fact that each rose has a perfect root growth, so each plant has the body strength and vitality necessary to insure a shipment, transplanting and a good start in new soil.

HOW TO GROW ROSES.—We have had published a little booklet which will be of incalculable value to those receiving CHRISTIAN HERALD Roses. It contains instructions on every point necessary for the successful growing of roses. It is arranged in topical index form, starting in with "Treatment of the Roses on Arrival," "Soil," "Planting," "Time to Plant," "Where to Plant," "Mulching," "A Rose Bed," "Rose Enemies," "Pruning," "Winter Protection," etc. The directions are very simple and there is really very little to do in taking proper care of the roses to secure excellent results. You can be sure of success if you follow the simple directions that even a child can understand. This booklet is sent free with each Set of Roses.

$70.00 IN CASH PRIZES.—Many CHRISTIAN HERALD subscribers received roses from us during the spring and summer of 1911 and a good many more during the following year of 1912. We offer the following series of prizes for photos of CHRISTIAN HERALD Roses secured from THE CHRISTIAN HERALD at any time and blooming during the coming summer. The awards will be made by us on a merit basis, according to size, fulness and number of roses on any one bush, and the awards will be as follows: A first prize of $25.00; a second prize of $15.00; a third prize of $10.00, and ten additional prizes of $2.00 each. All photos must be sent in to us on or before September 1, 1913.

WE WILL HOLD ROSES FOR YOU.—If you live in the Northern States, where the season is rather late, you may send your order at once and we will hold the roses at the nursery and send them to you at the proper time for planting in your locality, unless you specify an earlier date at which you desire to have them sent. All rosebushes will be sent by Parcel Post, so that it may take as long as eight days to reach the far Western States.

OUR GUARANTEED ROSE OFFER

We will send the entire collection of Eight Guaranteed Rosebushes, inspected, labeled and carefully packed with instruction booklet, How to Grow Roses, by Parcel Post to any part of the United States, and THE CHRISTIAN HERALD for one full year, new or renewal—all for only $2.

OR*, We will send to old subscribers free, as a premium, the Eight Guaranteed Rosebushes, inspected, labeled and carefully packed with instruction booklet How to Grow Roses, postpaid, for sending us one NEW eight-months' subscription to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD for $1.00.

ADDITIONAL FREE SETS can be obtained by sending in additional new subscribers in accordance with the above terms.
EXTRA SETS.—If you cannot secure new subscribers and desire to purchase extra sets of Rosebushes, you may do so at the rate of $1.00 per set; but these Extra Sets may be bought only by those securing the first set with either a renewal or a new subscription.

5.—WILLIAM R. SMITH: Whether you live East, West, North or South, whether you wish one Rose or one thousand, here is a Rose which has our unqualified endorsement. It will thrive abundantly in almost any reasonable location. The flowers are large, full and double and most exquisitely formed. The petals are so firm they look like wax, softly curled, colored cream with flesh tint tips, buff yellow base and the center a heart of pink; perfect buds. The flowers are borne on long, strong stems, just right for making bouquets. Fragrance is delightful. Foliage is exceptionally fine, being toothed and firm like holly. It is a very dark green when matured, while the young growth has a rich garnet color. The whole plant, from young growth to full-blown rose, is beautiful beyond description.

6.—MME. EUGENE MARLITT: We unnesitatingly pronounce this one of the most fragrant, vigorous-growing, abundant-blooming Roses ever offered. The flowers are large, full and double and bloom in clusters. Color is a rich carmine-red, which does not readily fade out but continues bright a long time. The foliage is very handsome and dark. This is probably the most vigorous-growing, free-blooming red monthly rose in existence.

7.—PINK RAMBLER DOROTHY PERKINS: This is a grand variety, so hardy as to withstand the most severe winters with impunity. Grows ten to fifteen feet in a season. Flowers are perfectly double, with petals crinkled and color a clear shell-pink. They are borne in immense clusters that cover the bush for several weeks in the Spring. Blooms just in time for June weddings, and because of its abundance of bloom is a most valuable rose for cutting and decorating.

8.—EXCELSA, OR RED DOROTHY PERKINS: New, Hardy Climbing Rose. This rose is a distinct variety in form, color and habit. The color is intense crimson maroon, with the tips of the petals tinged with scarlet. Flowers are large, double, and produced in large clusters, thirty to forty on a stem, and almost every eye on a shoot produces clusters of blossoms. Foliage is small, dark, glossy and very ornamental.

JACOB AND ESAU*

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON BY DR. AND MRS. WILBUR F. CRAFTS

AS WE of the twentieth century A.D. study to-day people of the twentieth century B.C., how much like us we find them down under the superficial differences! The Bible is not only a revelation of divine nature but also of human nature. And everybody needs to know both. It was said by Dr. Henry Clay Trumbull that a Sunday school teacher should know (1) Christ, (2) the Bible, (3) human nature, (4) how to teach. The preacher needs still more to know human nature in order to bring it into saving contact with the divine nature. Hardly less is a knowledge of human nature of value to parents; and this knowledge is also essential to the success of the business man and the statesman.

Genesis pictures human nature wild, in its natural beginnings. Almost every type of human nature is pictured in Abraham, Isaac, Jacob and Esau. In every nation there are at the top of the human pyramid a few heroic Abrahams, men of initiative, that break away from old superstitions and foolish customs. Everywhere there is a large number of peaceful, harmless Isaacs, men and women who have fewer faults than the Abrahams but weaker virtues. Then come an equal or greater number of Jacobs, typical "business men," whether traders or farmers, whose conscience and acquisitiveness is ever wrestling; who desire to do right so far as it will not hurt their political or financial prospects. And at the bottom of the social pyramid is a great host of Esaus, who would "sell out heaven for something warm." Each of us should ask, "Which of these portraits is mine?"

Esau and Jacob were twin sons of Isaac. Esau being the firstborn inherited what goes to the oldest in lands where estates and titles are entailed, namely, the lion's share of the family honors and of the family property, and in Esau's case there was also a special blessing from God for both worlds. Esau did not care much for the future. He lived in the enjoyment of the present, so that these future and spiritual benefits were lightly esteemed.

Jacob was not without hope of getting these rights, for fathers could in those days put some younger son in place of the eldest, as David did when Solomon was made his successor. Besides, God promised Rebekah that in some way the headship of the family should come to Jacob: "The elder shall serve the younger."

They grew up, not as twins often do, "so alike you cannot tell t'other from which," but as opposites in almost every characteristic. For one thing Esau's body was almost as hairy as a beast, while Jacob's was soft and smooth. Mentally they were still more unlike. Esau was generous to a fault, Jacob was covetous.

These qualities appear in the story of what occurred when they were thirty years of age. Esau, returning from the hunt hungry and exhausted, found Jacob cooking some savory red lentils as a soup, and eagerly asked a portion. It is very likely that this was what the shrewd Jacob anticipated. He charged an amazing price for the soup. For fifteen minutes' enjoyment of his appetite, Esau was asked to pay Jacob his future honors and riches, his birthright, with benefits extending from time to eternity. And Esau took the bargain, first trying to make an excuse: "Behold, I am at the point to die, and what profit shall the birthright be to me?" It is about the most incredible story in the Bible, and yet no infidel questions it, for he knows that all about him are those who daily make such bargains.

The heart of the whole story of Jacob and Esau is the sale of the birthright for a dish of soup, future good for present enjoyment. Let us put it in a list of disastrous bargains: Eden in all its glory and beauty sold for a gratification of appetite. Joseph, a prospective prince, sold for "sweet revenge" and twenty pieces of silver, only to bring in exchange bitter remorse for twenty years after. The victory of Israel sold by Achan for the wedge of gold. The blessing of God sold by King Saul for a few fat cattle. The truth and God's blessing sold by Ananias and Sapphira for the hidden "part of the price of their land, as they sought to get credit for generous giving of what they were greedily withholding! Worst of all bad bargains, the Redeemer of the world sold for thirty pieces of paltry silver!

What mad, disastrous bargains are these! And yet they are all repeated daily all about us. When a son of Jacob or anybody else takes an unfair advantage of some brother man, he is "verily guilty" of selling a man for silver. When a man who marches in God's army as a church member lets his love of money hinder God's victories, it is Achan again selling God's interests for a wedge of gold. When a man gets money by questionable means, such as stock gambling or the sale of injurious articles, or of useful articles in short measure, or by charging his customers too much and paying his helpers too little, and then gives this "blood money" to hospitals or churches to save his reputation or his soul, it is King Saul again getting the fat cattle in disobedience to God and thinking to atone by giving a few of them for sacrifice. When men or women think to get a good reputation without paying the price in a good character, it is the blunder of Ananias and Sapphira repeated over again. When, for sinful pleasure or worldly gain, a man injures the cause of Christ by falsifying his Christian profession, he sells Christ again for silver and "crucifies the Lord afresh."

All that the world can give—the gold in all its mines, the honors of all its empires, the pleasures of all its banquet halls, are but "a morsel of meat" compared to our birthright of character here and heaven hereafter.

A careless, reckless sinner, in the midst of his wild career, was brought to repentance and reform. When the new life had fully begun and had excited the attention and admiration of his neighbors, one of his old associates met him one day and remarked, "I hear you have given up all your pleasures." "No," said the other, "I never knew what pleasure was till now, and as I have tried both the pleasures of sin and the pleasures of religion, and you have tried but one, I ought to be the best judge."

But there is another chapter in those early relations of Esau and Jacob in which again both were dishonorable. Notwithstanding Rebekah had God's promise that her favorite boy, Jacob, should become head of the house (and it was a sin for a mother thus to show favoritism between her twin boys—the father showed it to the other), she plotted to bring about the promised result by acted falsehood. When Esau had been sent out by his blind father, Isaac, then a hundred years old, to shoot a deer and get him a dish of his favorite venison, as a sort of sacramental meal at which his father would bestow on him the blessing and birthright, Rebekah set her arts to work to substitute Jacob. She was afraid God's promise would be thwarted and thought to help God by a lie. A tame kid was killed and its meat cooked to resemble the wild venison, and its hair was used to make Jacob's hands feel to a blind man as hairy as Esau's. "The hands are the hands of Esau, but the voice is Jacob's voice." However, Isaac allowed his suspicions to be overborne by Jacob's falsehood and gave him the blessing he intended for Esau, who, returning too late, was filled with sorrow and indignation, although he had sold his birthright long before.

There is nothing in the story to justify lying in word or deed, and Jacob paid dearly for it in the resentment of Esau that compelled him to flee and remain an exile from his home. The International Lesson Committee, by its selection of the Golden Text, suggests that we put emphasis on the fact that when we have a promise of God we may well wait for it, not seeking to hasten its fulfilment. "Jehovah is a God of justice: blessed are all they that wait for him." The question keeps coming up not only in Bible classes, "Is it right to lie to save life?" Ring it out as an eternal axiom, "Right wrongs no man." "Trust in God and do the right."

OUR SUNDAY SCHOOL SUPERINTENDENTS' ROUND TABLE

(Very interesting letters of inquiry and suggestion are coming to the Round Table. Tell your Sunday school superintendent about it and invite him to make some suggestion to help other superintendents, or make some inquiry to get help himself. Address Wilbur F. Crafts, 206 Pennsylvania Avenue, S. E., Washington, D. C.)

—ONE OF OUR CHRISTIAN HERALD Million Bible Class takes the Round Table to task for criticizing the graded lessons, and we therefore present more fully the reasons why we think superintendents and pastors and Sunday school boards should refuse to change from one uniform lesson, graded by Primary Junior and Senior Quarterlies, to the sixteen different lessons of the new graded series. Not denying that there may be some benefits in such a series, especially in schools where skilled teachers can be secured and where classes can be organized to meet twice a week, we name the things that are lost by the change, which we can not afford to lose and which are not offset by any benefits of the new plan. If we substitute sixteen lessons or even six in place of one, hard-worked mothers cannot find time to prepare their children. An earnest Christian mother, who earns her own living, said—and such a case is almost enough in itself to make our case against the new grading—"When my three children all had the same lesson, I could find time, busy as I am, to sit down and explain the lesson to them all; but I cannot explain three lessons to them every week." When there is one lesson, the pastor can help by teaching it in a teacher's meeting or by references to it in prayer-meeting and sermon; but he cannot teach sixteen lessons. Neither can the superintendent. And the chief incentive for union meetings of superintendents and teachers is gone when they do not have one common lesson to prepare for. If the new graded lessons displace the uniform lesson from a majority of schools, we shall lose the great help now given in weekly and daily papers, and no one lesson can have adequate treatment without greatly increased expenditure. When pupils are away from home for the summer they can no longer follow their studies wherever they go. These objections all hold to the graded series, as such, and we cannot find any gains that would half offset these losses, especially as good schools have always graded the classes and the teaching with one lesson almost as much as the graded series do—as much as is practicable in thirty minutes a week with unpaid and mostly unskilled teachers. There are other objections, such as a Presbyterian official committee has raised to the selections of the graded series, suggesting that as many objections may be made to the new as to the old. Fundamentally, we fear that there is too much pedagogy in the new series, forgetting that the schools have but a half hour for study, and too much oversight of the fact that the Bible, unlike all other books, has something in every page that Timothy could "know from a child" and by it be made "wise unto salvation."

THE LITTLE BLUE IMPS

BY MARGARET E. SANGSTER, JR.

HAVE you ever felt blue and unhappy when there is no earthly reason for it? When all the world seems bright and happy, and the birds are shouting their little heads off, and the sky is a sapphire, and nature seems to be dancing for some unexplainable reason? And have you ever wished, on such a day, that the birds were dead, and that the sky would cloud over and that the rain would pour in torrents?

Some time, when you feel that way, listen, and look hard through your magic spectacles. Then perhaps you will see them—your tormentors, the little blue imps! And when you hear the flutter of their wings, you must hide your feelings, and smile—smile though it seem to tear your face and crush your heart. For a smile will banish the blues, the most annoying imp of them all.

Margaret E. Sangster, Jr.

I had my first and most cruel fit of the blues long ago. I remember the day well, for it was my birthday. Do you know what I did? I sat for two solid hours on the bottom step of the hall stairs and cried with great, breathless, gasping sobs, while I dug two chubby fists into two red-rimmed eyes. For I felt, deep down in my heart, that I was growing old. And I was only six! As for the imps, why, they were very happy, and they fluttered about on the step above me and chuckled in their glee.

I have known children of melancholy dispositions to have regular weekly fits of the blues. They would very realistically plan out an exciting death and a beautiful funeral; and they would finally dissolve into tears as they gazed at their own still faces from among the ranks of a sorrowing family.

ONCE I came upon a morbid little mite of a girl of ten seated upon the floor, weeping softly to herself.

"What can be the matter, honey?" I asked as I dropped down on the rug beside her. But she lifted such a tragic face and such brimming eyes that I drew back, startled.

"Why, I just drowned myself," she murmured between sobs, "but the water took the curl out of my hair, and I looked horrid when they brought me home!"

As I kissed and comforted the foolish child (all the while restraining a wild desire to shake her), I wondered what literature she had been reading, and how much precious time her mother spent with her.

There is another kind of blueness that people have—the "nobody loves me" kind. When a person has this feeling the mouth droops down at the corners, and the eyes gaze up at the sky with a dying-martyr expression in them. When a best chum says gaily: 'What's the matter, dear?" one feels hurt, and indignant, and answers: 'Nothing. Leave me alone!" And the blue imps kiss each other with delight.

Many hopelessly blue girls escape criticism on the grounds of the long-suffering "artistic temperament." I have heard more than one tired-looking mother say, as she excused the rudeness of her daughter to the chance guest: "You mustn't mind my little girl, she's so temperamental," or, "Marie is so full of her music that she doesn't realize how she acts," or even this: "The poor child has inherited her father's artistic temperament." Strange to say, a mother often seems proud to talk like this; while the poor little remnant of artistic temperament that may be lingering in the girl's soul may be said to weep and gnash its teeth in agony.

SOME people have a propensity for the blues that they conquer in time. One dear lady, the most charming, cultivated, and talented woman of my world, once said to me:

"When I was a little girl, I used to get terribly angry and sad and annoyed at what I romantically termed 'The indifference of the cold, cold world.' And often I would go up to my room to relieve my tortured feelings. This is what I always did: I had a large mahogany bed—one of the family heirlooms—for my very own, and when I wanted most to scream, and to cry, and to say unkind things, I would stand in front of that bed and bite it hard! And when my teeth began to ache, my blues began to disappear. My bed will always have little dents in it, but, my dear, each dent stands for a victory!"

A young man was telling me about a girl who had been the sensation for a short time of his little college town. He said: "For a little while she was very popular, this girl. She was mighty pretty, with a wistful-eyed, sad-mouthed kind of beauty. I went to see her twice myself; I even listened and agreed when the other fellows talked about some 'hidden sorrow.' But quite soon the thing began to get on my nerves. I was always afraid she might collapse on my shoulder and weep. All the boys stopped calling there after a while, except one. He finally married her. Poor chap!"

The last two words were eloquent with a very deep sympathy. And I understood, for I had known the girl, and many others like her.

MELANCHOLIA is a disease that must be overcome, not by pills and powders and tonics, but by smiles and songs and laughter. For if the little blue imps find that it is easy to pound lines into your face and turn your heart into lead they will stay with you always. And when they come in at the door, blotting out the sunlight with their cold, thick wings, love and light and happiness disappear from your home.

Two friends of mine have framed mottoes hanging in their rooms. One says in disagreeable black type: "Life is only one cross after another!" But the second motto sings happily in red letters four inches high: "Laugh if it kills you, and you'll die with a smile on your face."

Which motto is the best?

Now, friends of mine, let us all make a vow together. Let us say: "When I feel blue, I will laugh, even though the tears blind me; and when I feel neglected I will do something for somebody, and when I feel alone in the world I will think of Our Father."

For where God is, Love abides; and where Love lives, the little blue imps shrivel up in the sunlight and die.

Picture puzzles are amusing to most people and have been especially popular during recent years. They may be purchased at almost any price. An ingenious young lady, when traveling abroad, bought picture postcards, cut them up, enclosed them in envelopes and sent them to her friends, and they had great fun in matching the pieces together.

Prof. Anderson's Quarter Billion Meals

Last year, the hosts of users ate 250,000,000 dishes of Puffed Wheat and Puffed Rice.

Prof. Anderson's foods, steam-exploded. A few years ago such foods seemed impossible.

This morning, perhaps a million people woke to find them on the breakfast table.

Why this immense popularity?

Some first bought them on their doctors' orders. For these are scientific foods.

All the millions of granules are blasted to pieces, so digestion can instantly act. Whole grains are made wholly digestible.

They are the best-cooked foods in existence.

But most users somewhere ate a sample dish. It tasted like toasted nuts.

The crisp, porous grains, thin-walled and airy, melted in the mouth. They woke to the fact that these Puffed Grains are fascinating foods.

And who ever stopped using them?

There are millions of breakfasts served without them to-day, but that's because folks don't know. Did you ever know a user of Puffed Wheat or Puffed Rice to go back to lesser foods?

Puffed Wheat, 10c
Puffed Rice, 15c
Except in Extreme West

These grains are eight times normal size.

Inside of each grain there have occurred at least a hundred million explosions.

The trifle of moisture inside of each granule has been turned into steam and exploded.

Myriads of cells are created, surrounded by thin toasted walls. And the walls melt away at touch, almost, into almond-flavored atoms.

Serve with sugar and cream.

Mix them with any fruit to give it a delicious blend.

Or serve like crackers in a bowl of milk—airy, whole-grain, toasted wafers.

Use as crisps in soup sometimes.

Scatter them over a dish of ice cream. It's like mixing nutmeats in it.

Boys eat them dry, like peanuts. Girls use them in candy making.

Any hour, from breakfast to bedtime, there's some way to serve Puffed Grains.

If you haven't tried them, telephone your grocer to send you a package of each.

DAILY MEDITATION

FOR EVERY DAY IN THE YEAR

BY REV. J. H. JOWETT, D.D.

SUNDAY, March 30. Genesis 22: 1-19. Supreme loyalty to God is ready for supreme sacrifice. Our devotion is worth little unless it is prepared to bleed. Bloodless discipleship contributes no energy to the cause of the kingdom. Such discipleship is only a "playing at soldiers"; no terrible campaigns are fought and won. But loyalty that is sacrificial, faith that ventures everything, love that lays its all upon the altar—these take the kingdom of heaven by storm.

The quality of our piety may be gauged by the quality of our sacrifices. Let us drop our fathom-line into our sacrifices; are they shallow or profound? Are we ready to give blood, to surrender "the utmost for the highest"? "God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son!" What will our love give in return? Do we only offer him trifles, the smallest coin in the purse, the lame sheep in the flock, the wearied moments at the end of the day? Or can we humbly but eagerly say, "Body, soul and spirit, all we yield to thee"?

"God . . . gave his only begotten Son." "They gave unto the Lord of that which cost them nothing." Is that our contrast? Or . . . ?

MONDAY, March 31. Genesis 27: 1-10. There is something very sacred in the requests of those who are growing old and are preparing to die. The simplest call for help has a very holy significance. To render them common comforts is like offering at a shrine. They are so near the mysterious country that something of its mystery and awe seems to fall upon them. And hearts grow very tender as the hour of separation draws nigh. We become extraordinarily alert to detect needs even before they have been verbally expressed. Their requests define our privileges. "Isaac was old and his eyes were dim," and he asked a kindness of his eldest son.

All this must be remembered when we think of the conduct of Jacob. Apart from everything else it was sacrilege. It was like the desecration of a holy shrine. It was a trampling upon some of the choicest and rarest flowers in the field of human life. It was brutal deception where the most open affection should prevail. It was the quest of selfish privilege at the expense of an old man's rights. Jacob took advantage of the blind and served his own ends.

TUESDAY, April 1. Genesis 27: 11-21. So Jacob made himself like Esau, but the likeness was only skin-deep! He imitated the skin of another man, while beneath the skin the life was all his own. He practiced deception, presuming to be what he really was not. He wore an artificial skin to cover his natural skin: beneath the apparent was a quite different reality.

Our Lord had something to say about the wearers of artificial skins. He says "they wear sheeps' clothing but inwardly they are ravening wolves." A wolf in a sheep-skin! In the old nursery tale the wolf put on the outer garments of little Red Riding Hood. The wolf wearing the skin of innocence! And our Lord says there are people "who devour widows' houses and for a pretense make long prayers." They wear the skin of piety while within is the passion of greed.

We are all prone to put on artificial skins. We adopt fine manners while within we are ignoble men. We "appear unto men to pray," and all the time we are plotting mischief. We kneel and offer God the outer skin of devotion while our heart is far from him. From all untruth, artifice, and guile, good Lord, deliver us!

WEDNESDAY, April 2. Genesis 27: 22-29. One deception demands another. One lie requires another lie to confirm it. It is a black, ragged regiment that marches in support of falsehood. Jacob began with a false purpose. Then he put on a false skin. Then he uttered false speech. "Art thou my very son Esau? And he said, I am." So runs the dark sequence, adding link to link in the awful chain of evil bondage.

So does one lie call other lies to its defense. That is the subtlety of evil. We cannot rope in an evil deed, and say, "In such and such an area shall its influence be confined!" The devil laughs at all these idle limitations. So soon as we have determined that a false act shall be the limit of our deception he calls for a false speech, and our frail limits are submerged as sand castles are by the incoming sea. No, if we once begin to do the devil's work he will attend to the succession. Give him an inch, he wants a yard: give him a yard, he demands the mile.

There is nothing more prolific than falsehood. It breeds an awful progeny. And worst of all, falsehood will speedily develop into a habit, in which we become unconscious of deception, and we wear the artificial skin as though it were our own. "God gave unto them the spirit of a deep sleep."

THURSDAY, April 3. Genesis 27: 30-40. A lie had been practiced and spoken, and the springs of family life were befouled. We cannot introduce deception into a household and keep the fountains pure and sweet. A lie is like an unclean germ which can sour the sweetest milk. "And Isaac trembled very exceedingly." "And Esau cried with a great and exceeding bitter cry." And all this the outcome of a lie! Falsehood insinuates itself, like a pointed knife, into the most intimate joints and pries them asunder. Wherever falsehood intrudes the most delicate fellowships are broken.

If only we could see the sore and bitter consequences of falsehood we should more probably live in the truth. But one of the subtlest elements in our deception is that we deceive ourselves. We refuse to look ahead: we live in the transient triumph. Satan sees to it that we keep the blinders on our eyes. "Ye have eyes but ye see not." When a man lies his eyes are immediately sealed by his own deceit. "Thou knowest not that thou art blind."

Let us steadily realize the awful dominion of a falsehood. Let us steadily contemplate the black and awful retinues that follow in its train.

FRIDAY, April 4. Genesis 27: 41-45. "And Esau hated Jacob." We are still among the foul progeny of falsehood. One evil thing begets another, and when we encourage one vice as a pupil we soon have a school. Avarice begat falsehood; falsehood begat hatred; hatred begat revenge! "I will slay my brother Jacob." So does the spirit of deception create a hotbed in which troops of other vices breed and make their home.

It is of the utmost moment that we should remember this. We have isolation hospitals for fevers and smallpox, but we cannot isolate a vice. Wherever a vice is reigning, it is like a foul refuse-heap, and nothing can prevent it becoming the breeding-ground of a moral plague. We cannot isolate falsehood, or avarice, or vulgar pride. If we cherish one vice we are bound to make room for others.

"Cleanse thou me from secret faults." So prayed the psalmist, for he knew that even a secret uncleanness invited germs of moral malaria. And so may we all make his prayer our own, that God will cleanse, and that no plague may come nigh our dwelling.

SATURDAY, April 5. Genesis 25: 27-34. "For one morsel of meat Esau sold his birthright." The cravings of hunger made him barter his inheritance. For a carnal satisfaction he forfeited the noble privileges of sonship. For a feverish present he sacrificed the spacious things of the leisurely morrow. "I am hungry now: what counts tomorrow to me?" The smell of the pottage was too much to him, and he let his birthright go!

So also is it with men who are driven by the craving for drink. Anything for a drink! Family life, social life, religious life: they will barter all for carnal satisfaction. They sell their future for an immediate carousal. For the present hour they sacrifice eternity.

But we are all in fellowship with Esau. We have all preferred the seen to the unseen, the moment to the eternal, the immediate feast to "the unsearchable riches of Christ." We have chosen some fleeting happiness to "the joy of the Lord." We have chosen some ignoble ease to "the peace which passeth understanding." We have asked the world for its "mess of pottage," and we have forfeited "the bread of life." We need the power of God's Holy Spirit to "set our minds on things above," that the things below may not tempt us to our destruction.

These Daily Meditations will appear in each issue through 1913.

SANITAS

THE MODERN WALL COVERING

For the family health, for the clear, clean air so important to your well-being you must have on your walls the absolute cleanliness of Sanitas.

Wipe it with a cloth and it is clean and fresh and new.

Stuffy wall coverings have gone out of fashion. The house that reaches today's ideal has Sanitas on its walls, as it has open plumbing and a white enamel bath tub.

Sanitas isn't a paper, and it isn't a paint. It is a cloth foundation finished in oils. Its colors cannot fade; it practically never wears out.

Sanitas is made in the softest, most exquisite designs and colors for every room of the house.

LADY YOU

courage of my cowardly little soul. You are so calm and sweet, my Lady—so calm and sweet and dear. Are you looking ashamed of me? But when I begin this morning, in a little hour from now, I shall have to keep on. Right on whether I want to or not—on and on. How must it feel to be able to want to or not? My last "place" was not so bad, but there I couldn't keep on. When you want to keep on you always stop, and when you want to stop you always keep on. I ask, dear Lady You, if that is playing quite fair? The always of it?

I had Rogie in my last "place" and when he read his lesson his little best I could kiss him. He never minded, if I would promise not to tell Roger Senior, his father. He had the softest, the coolest little cheeks. I'd never had the chance to kiss anything before. Why must they suddenly decide to educate Rogie abroad? I could have taught him all the little French he needed. What did he care about accent!

That Wrapper Child downstairs—she stands for me, Lady You! Janny—Janet; it is only too true. I heard the Wrapper Mother talking to her yesterday and I found it out. It was rather queer what I heard her say: "You got your nice pattern now, Janny. All you got to do is cut yourself out by it—snip, snip, a little to a time."

And what Janny said was queer: "Will you Janet me, mother, when I'm all cut out? I want to be Janet-ed."

I must go to my forlorny schoolhouse. Some time this morning, dear Lady You, will you lay down your work and spend your time just being sorry for me? I know! do it at half past ten! May I feel you're sorry for me just that very minute?

In the night I half made up my mind to promise you something. I'm going to promise it now, before I start for school. A solemny, keep-it little promise. I won't come to this little book and tell you my troubles for a week. I'll stand 'em alone as long as that. Good-by.

Week's up! Here I am, but I'm not sure they are all troubles. One of 'em isn't, anyway. I discovered somebody that looks a little like Rogie the very first day, and when I got back "home" I found him at the supper table! He's a Wrapper Rogie! Lady You, here is where you may smile and say "I told you so. I said there would be compensations. Only can anything very tiny, six, freckly, patched-uppy, be as fine a thing as a "compensation"?

He let me take hold of hands coming home to-night. I shouldn't dare to kiss him—not yet a while. The Janny child watches me continually at the table. I heard her say, "How'm I doing, mother?" yesterday, and what her mother answered back took my breath away. It scared me. Dear Lady You, can you get your mind round to thinking of Janet Yale as a pattern?

"You're doin' great, Janny. You never put your knife in your mouth but once to dinner to-day—"

"Twice, mother." She is an honesty little thing.

"Well, but twice then, an' you're rememberin' your finger-nails beautifully every mornin.' "

"You—you didn't see—I don't s'pose you saw me eat slow, mother, an' not grab—"

"I saw you, Janny! First you know I'll be callin' you Janet. 'Janet, do this,' an' 'Janet, come here!' " They both laughed then. I've discovered that mother's and daughter's laughs chord.

My, but it's good to get back to you, dear Lady! The week without you was a month long. How did I ever manage before I invented you, dear, out of my very own head, to be the One I Never Had, the One I Wanted—my Ideal One? But oh, my lady, but oh, my Lady You, while I was about it, why didn't I invent you alive?

I went straight to bed in the middle of last night's wail, and this is to-night. I couldn't keep on talking to you because something got on the track in my throat and stopped me. I don't really believe I can ever have been a baby, but if I ever was one, it was last night. I lay in the dark and—cried. And before I got very far—right in the middle, it seemed—I had the most wonderful dream. (Of course it was a dream, Janet Yale!) I thought that some one came into this little room and right up to my bed, in the dark, and—cried, too. With me—two of us together. I could hear us both crying, and, oh, it sounded so kind and friendly! Together is such a beautiful thing! The lonesome ones that aren't set in families—the Janet Yales—miss all the togethernesses, don't they?

I just lay there and had a lovely time dreaming it. Was it you that came, Lady You? I wish I could believe it was—did you steal away as softly as you came? Did you—no, I don't suppose, now, that you put out your hand and smoothed my quilt, did you? That part of the dream doesn't fit you quite, for the hand in the dream roughed me instead of smoothed. I could hear it rasp softly on the cloth. So it could not be your velvety Lady-hand. Whose hand could it be? Dreams are queer things. I would like that dream again to-night.

It came again—oh, almost the very same! Only I was not crying to-night, so the One Who Came did not cry either. To-night she whispered two words, in the dream. You know what they were if you were the One Who Came—do I need to tell you? They were just two little breaths of words: "Poor dear!" No one ever came in a dream, or out of a dream, and said any kind of a dear to me before.

It is not so bad at Forlorny School now. We sing a little song to begin, and every now and then, all day, I look at Rogie and Rogie looks at me. (You will kiss his little cheeks yet, Janet Yale!) The Janny-child looks at me, too. I called her Janet to-day, and her face—the little homely face of her! She is the little wrapper image of her mother—she only lacks the wrapper.

I found my supper up here in my room to-night when I got back from the woods. I tramp off by myself after school; it is better than suppers. But I had both to-night. It was a nice little supper, on the prettiest china! And—will you hear this, Lady You?—there was a rose with it! You know the picture of the little maiden Christian Martyr in the arena, picking up a rose: "Some one has thrown me a rose"? Who "threw" me mine? Was it Janny? I don't think Janny. I don't think Rogie. So, dear Lady, it must have been you! Oh, but that little red rose on my plate has set me up! If you hear any one singing it will be New Teacher—hark!

The Wrapper Woman is so shy—she wears wrappers even on her eyes. But they are gentle, nice eyes. I saw them through the door looking at the Wrapper Baby. If I knew that anybody ever looked at me like that—nobody ever did. In orphan asylums you are put to bed by machinery and dressed and fed and looked at by machinery. Happy little Wrapper Babies!

I cried again for nearly an hour, after school to-night, all alone in Forlorny School. Terribly silly in me, for I might have warded it off by coming home and grumbling to you! I've warded off half a hundred cries that way, dear Lady You. Why did I cry to-night? Well, in any other New

Teacher it would have been homesickness, but you couldn't expect Janet Yale to be homesick! I think it was because I wanted another rose. My eyes must have been red enough at supper. Rogie looked at me suspiciously. The Wrapper Mother never seems to take much notice of me. I was thankful not to be taken notice of to-night.

Do you know what I'm going to do now? I'm going to bed and lie perfectly still till you come to me in Dream Two! I'll be good if you'll come—you, or (if it wasn't you that came) the One Who Came Before.

You came! Some one came and tucked me in. I felt it and I think I heard "Poor dear!" again. Dream Two was as beautiful and sweet as Dream One. All night I dreamed and redreamed it, and this morning I woke up so warm! Forlorny School was so easy to-day! We sang, to begin and to end. The children were dears. I heard one of them say to another: "I like New Teacher best." Poor Old Teacher!

I'm beginning to be happy. The Wrapper Baby lets me hold him. I brought him up here to my room after school to-day and we played on the floor. I told that baby my two dreams! Lady You, he had a serpenty-wise little look in his eyes as though he could have told me who came! I believe he knows.

Rogie and I are going fishing some day, and Janny is going to teach me how to heel stockings! The shy little Wrapper Woman smiled at me at supper—almost as if I were a Wrapper Child. Oh, yes, I'm beginning to be happy.

Another flower! A beauteous peony in a tumbler. I found it here on my table. If it was you did it, I'll find you out! I'll find out the One Who Did! If dreams can happen like these wonder-dreams of mine, why not miracles? Why not You, dear, in the flesh and blood?

When I created You out of my lonesome, starving brain it was because I couldn't stand it any longer—I must have folks. So if I ever find folks they will be You! It works both beautiful ways! Perhaps you won't be at all as I've pictured you, but you'll be my Lady of Love. I shall see you and hear you and know what kind of a dress you have on and how you do your hair, and if you are short or tall. I dare you to step down from your pedestal and come to life, my statue Lady You!

You came! You are alive! It was in the dark You "stepped down," but the moon sent a little candle in for me to see You by. A moon candlelight surprise—oh, such a surprise! For all the things I had imagined you were, you aren't! I thought you wore silky-soft dresses and it's a wrapper you wear! I thought your hair would be silver and fluffy and soft and it's a little tight brown knot! You are tiny and shy and sweet, but your heart is big. You came and you tucked me in and cried with me and said "Poor dear!" I put my hand out and touched you! You were warm and alive—I saw you in the moonlight.

I am happy—not beginning nor ending, but in the beautiful middle. I love this little Forlorny Place, I love Forlorny School, I love You!

There's a beautiful tree in front of my window. I never discovered before how softly the hills blur the horizon, nor that little silver streak o' river way off to the south. I never knew the sky could be so blue! I never knew Forlorny Places could be beautiful.

Now I'm going downstairs and help get supper. I'm going to help wash the dishes—perhaps I'll help put the baby to bed. I'm going to kiss Rogie, I'm going to kiss the Janny child, and —I'm going—to kiss—You!

"Standard" GUARANTEED PLUMBING FIXTURES

NO matter how inexpensively you plan your new home, the selection of the equipment for your bathroom should have the most thoughtful consideration. "Standard" guaranteed fixtures, because of their assurance of sanitary safety, should be specified always. Their installation will make your bathroom a constant source of comfort and satisfaction.

Genuine "Standard" fixtures for the Home and for Schools, Office Buildings, Public Institutions, etc., are identified by the Green and Gold Label, with the exception of one brand of baths bearing the Red and Black Label, which, while of the first quality of manufacture, have a slightly thinner enameling, and thus meet the requirements of those who demand "Standard" quality at less expense. All "Standard" fixtures, with care, will last a lifetime. And no fixture is genuine unless it bears the guarantee label. In order to avoid substitution of inferior fixtures, specify "Standard" goods in writing (not verbally) and make sure that you get them.

THE MODERN INTERIOR WALL COVERING IS WALL BOARD

The pioneer chinked the cracks of his log cabin with mud. White washing the interior was a step further. Then came lath and plaster. Now comes—

UTILITY WALL BOARD

It may be placed by either novice or expert. Once up you are done with cracked walls or ceilings.

Set either plain or paneled; papered or stenciled, its cost is lower than lath and plaster.

It will neither warp, crack nor shrink; is fire resisting and impervious to heat and cold. It will endure as long as the building.

Send for sample and book which gives many plans for pleasing interiors. For homes, offices and store buildings.

"And Yet Our Nation Sleeps"

HE Church of Rome still speaks vith authority. Her phalanxes are roken. Her dream is to make erica the leading Catholic country the world. Discredited and ban- d from European countries, with ent-like stealth she is quietly hing out and seizing the reins of our governmental authority. She is dreaded and feared by our politicians. She is arrogant, boastful, blasphemous. With her mouth she speaks of holiness, but in her train follow poverty, ignorance, misery, and despair. That nation is dwarfed and blighted which is under the shadow of the cross of St. Peter. To-day Rome sits at ease in the high places of our nation. An increasing number of senators, governors, congressmen attest the growing influence of this powerful organization. Ere long Rome hopes for a division of the school moneys, and chuckles as she sees the Bible excluded from our public schools, and yet our nation sleeps!—Pentecostal Herald, March 5, 1913.

An Ex-Priest on Rome's Intolerance

IN YOUR paper I have read an article by Dr. Alexander Robertson on "How Italy Fought the Papacy." It is really a magnificent exposition of the facts, which should be known wherever the American flag waves. It should be spread in pamphlet form all over the world in different languages. Enclosed please find the first dollar for such a purpose, and I also offer my services to translate the two articles into Italian for distribution.

Dr. Stephenson, Methodist Protestant minister of Detroit, in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD of February 12, writes of cases where Roman Catholic priests have wrought family confusion, saying that marriages performed by Protestant ministers are "no marriages." Let me say that the same trouble exists wherever I have been pastor. A priest in Yonkers told me, a few months ago, that only the Roman priests under the Holy Father are the real priests, and that the Protestant ministers do not belong to the true religion at all. They say the same thing to the children of my Sunday school: "That is no priest." Before being a Methodist missionary, I was a Roman priest in the Capuchin Order, and was converted in the Methodist Mission of Rome, and I can testify that the Roman Church holds that non-Catholic, non-papal marriages are a sort of concubinage.

To-day, I happened to be reading the history of St. Bartholomew's massacre in 1572, and my soul was distressed to think that there are Protestants in America who will refrain from doing certain legitimate actions through fear of the Romanists, who are more bold-faced and assuming, though generally more ignorant. To have fear of Romanist pressure in Italy would be the same as for the birds of heaven to fear a black rag hanging on a dry stump.

We must have legislation in this country to check any cardinal, bishop, minister, priest or patriarch who dares to bring forward the Ne Temere decree, or to say that the Roman Church alone can truly perform the marriage tie. JOSEPH VITAL.

Mission of the Saviour, Yonkers, N. Y.

The Catholic Federation in Politics

ARCHBISHOP MESSMER [Milwaukee] addressed a representative gathering of Milwaukee Catholics and affiliated societies of the Catholic Federation on January 31. He gave a comprehensive view of the work being done by the national federation throughout the country. The federation has an affiliation of over 3,000,000 Catholic members. He outlined the work of the federation on the question of politics with the United States Government in the Philippines, and the success of Catholic interests as a result. Bishops have acknowledged the great help received through this society. Also the question of the Catholic Indian schools has been favorably settled with the government. Books and newspaper attacks against Catholic causes have been suppressed by the postal authorities and legislative action suggested, etc.—The Catholic Universe (Cleveland, O.), February 7, 1913.

Appreciates Dr. Robertson's Article

WITH great interest did I read the letter by Rev. Alexander Robertson on the Catholic Church in Italy in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. I wish the entire letter, or whatever Rev. Alexander Robertson may yet write to enlighten the people, could be printed in pamphlet form and be distributed throughout the United States. My first order would be $3 worth. I would give away and sell just so they would get among the people. J. L. HOLTZMAN.

An Ohio Pastor's Hope

I HAVE just read the latest CHRISTIAN HERALD and feel encouraged by its attitude on the Roman Catholic question. You are doing a great and good work in the information you are giving. I feel that the Christians of our beloved, free country need to call upon God in prayer, and that he is already hearing our call and starting movements to overcome the enemy.

For this lack of their earlier and most fervent zeal the Ephesian Church is warned to remember from whence it has fallen, and to repent and do the first works, or else the Master will come quickly and remove the candlestick out of its place. This threatened penalty has been understood to mean not the utter destruction of the church of Ephesus, but as indicating that the church would be removed to another spot. Grotius interpreted it, "I will cause thy population to flee away to another place."

Sir William Ramsay characterizes Ephesus as the "City of Change." And truly it has seen marvelous changes and its inhabitants many removals. In the days of St. Paul and St. John, Ephesus was a city of the seacoast; the waters of the Ægean lapped its busy wharves; now the traveler to Ephesus can scarcely imagine that he is near the sea. To all appearances he is as far away as one of our inland prairies. The Cayster during all these ages has brought down mud and silt from the mountains until now Ephesus is miles from the seashore. Even in St. John's time the port was kept open only by strenuous effort and constant dredging. These changes wrought by nature have compelled frequent changes on the part of the inhabitants. The original city was built not far from Ayasolouk, and "the whole Ephesian Valley was an arm of the sea dotted with rocky islands and bordered by picturesque mountains and wooded promontories," we are told. As the sea receded, in the course of the centuries the population moved with it, until the Roman city, the city of St. Paul and St. John, was some miles from the original site. At last this port became impossible, and the inhabitants moved farther back, nearer to the site of the more ancient city, where to-day the few inhabitants that still remain are found.

In its government as well as its situation Ephesus has been a city of change. Among the earliest inhabitants the Phœnicians introduced their religion, and the people worshiped the symbol of the moon as the goddess of the sea; the priests were named "king bees," and the priestesses "bees," and bands of armed women as well as men, for suffragettes then had all their rights, formed the temple guard.

Then came the Ionians a thousand years before Christ, who had to fight with the armed virgins, afterwards known as Amazons. Following them came the Greeks as conquerors, who in turn were conquered by Crœsus, and then by Cyrus the Great, and later by Xerxes. Then Alexander the Great, as the ruler of the world, made Ephesus one of its chief capitals. Octavius Cæsar with Mark Antony, after the battle of Philippi, were the rulers of the city. Under all these monarchs Ephesus maintained its pre-eminence, and the great temple of Diana was its chief glory.

In Christian times it was important ecclesiastically and politically, and in the Middle Ages the Church of St. John at Ayasolouk was almost as famous as the old temple of Diana, and its annual revenues amounted to nearly $100,000. Then came the Turks in the twelfth century and there they have been ever since. Truly it has been a city of change in every sense of the word. The Lord's prophecy has been fulfilled, and the "lamp of the church," as the "candlestick" should be translated, its light and glory, has been removed out of its place.

ANSWERED PRAYERS

THE Answered Prayer correspondence shows that the application of prayer to human life is as wide as life itself. Nothing that concerns us or interests us is too small or too great to be referred in trustful prayer to God. A young man writes from Philadelphia acknowledging special help from God in passing a difficult examination. That was a perfectly legitimate prayer. It would not be right for a student to neglect preparation, relying upon God for miraculous aid. But after he has made the most thorough preparation possible he may ask God to keep his nerves steady, his mind clear, calm and alert, so that it will work with strength and precision to reproduce the information that has been stored away beforehand by hard work.

Scores of letters bear testimony to the fact that

The great Physician now is near.

C. T. and wife write from Louisiana: "We want to acknowledge, through the columns of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, our thanks to God for sparing the life of our baby boy, who has been very sick. We feel that God has been wonderfully kind to us." J. G. McL., of Caledonia, N. Y., writes: "I promised God if he would spare my dear child who was very ill I should acknowledge it through THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. He speedily did, and oh, how happy we are! God surely answers our prayers." T. S. writes from Omaha, Neb.: "I wish to acknowledge God's answer to prayer in restoring me through his love and kindness from sickness to perfect health and strength and work."

Mrs. H. B. of Otego, N. Y., writes: "God has answered several of my special prayers. I prayed to him to help my daughter who was sick, and he has answered my prayer. He has also made me better of my complaint and given me strength to wait on myself and help my loved ones." Mrs. A. P. writes from Monroe City, Mo.: "I want to acknowledge God's goodness in restoring myself and two children to health through prayer." Mrs. H. C. S., of East Bloomfield, N. Y., writes: "Our son was brought safely through a critical operation, all in answer to prayer, I am sure. I must give God the glory and praise. This instance is not the only one. Many times I have had direct answers to my prayers." Mrs. L. C. K. writes from Syracuse, N. Y.: "I wish to acknowledge the recovery of a dear friend in answer to earnest prayer. God is more willing to give than we are to ask."

A good letter comes from Ohio, signed L. R. B.: "I think the Answered Prayer column is strengthening, and would like to say that the love of Jesus grows sweeter and sweeter each day. He becomes dearer and dearer to me and fills the soul with sunshine 'more glorious and more bright' than can come from any earthly joy. He has answered many prayers for me. For one in particular I was very thankful."

Acknowledgments of answers to prayer have also been received from:

"I believe Sanatogen would help you, mother"

THE inspiring confidence that has led thousands of men and women to suggest Sanatogen to the weak, the tired-out and the nervous, has marked the turning-point on the cross-roads of ill health for multitudes of nerve sufferers.

Sanatogen is offered as a rational, scientific nerve-food. In its combination of purest protein and organic phosphorus it furnishes the weakened, debilitated nerves with their own food elements—in a form easily and readily digested—without causing any harmful stimulation.

If your nerves have given way under the depressing pressure of overwork, worry or illness—leaving you with disturbed digestion, restless, dream-laden sleep, insomnia and an utter lack of vim and ambition—consider whether Sanatogen will do for you what these grateful thousands have written it did for them.

And Sanatogen has received the tribute of written endorsement of its helpful, revitalizing powers in nervous exhaustion, from over 16,000 physicians who have watched its results in their daily practices.

Do your nerves need the help of Sanatogen?

Write for a Free Copy of "Nerve Health Regained"

The work of a physician author, beautifully illustrated, which tells you some really interesting things about your nervous system, facts which vitally affect your well-being and which therefore you ought to know. This book also tells the story of Sanatogen convincingly, from the point of view of a physician, but so that any layman can understand it.

Sanatogen is sold in three sizes, $1.00, $1.90, $3.60

Get Sanatogen from your druggist—if not obtainable from him, sent upon receipt of price by

The Bauer Chemical Co., 26 F Irving Place, New York

The Right Rev. The Bishop of Southampton writes:
"It gives me pleasure to bear my testimony to the value of Sanatogen as an invigorating tonic and restorative."

Charles D. Sigsbee Rear Admiral U. S. Navy, writes:
"After a thorough trial of Sanatogen, I am convinced of its merit as a food and tonic. Its beneficial effects are beyond doubt."

Lady Henry Somerset the prominent social reform advocate, writes:
"Sanatogen undoubtedly restores sleep, invigorates the nerves and braces the patient to health. I have watched its effect on people whose nervous systems have been entirely undermined, and I have proved Sanatogen to be most valuable."

His Grace The Most Rev. Archbishop of Bombay writes:
"I use Sanatogen every now and then, under my doctor's advice, and always derive great benefit from it."

A BRAVE GOSPEL FOR BRAVE MEN

secretary?" "He can shoot!" was the unconventional though hearty and truthful response.

Camp was on a war basis, so the only lights were candles. This was somewhat cheerless, so Reader went to the nearest and only "city," Caimanera, and bought all the lanterns in town, which was six. These he strung up in the Y. M. C. A. tent, rolling up the sides so the light would stream out. The men crowded inside and outside, those who could not get in sitting on the ground, or lying flat, pushing their books and papers as near as possible to the light.

Next year the association secured the use of a government building for its work. Now an appropriation of $30,000 has been made by Congress for the erection of a permanent Y. M. C. A. building on the ground. The United States has purchased the spot for a naval base, for the purpose of guarding the Panama Canal.

To return to that Bible class. After Mr. Reader had been aboard the Nebraska a couple of weeks he went to the executive officer and said he wanted a place where he could conduct a Bible class for about twenty-five men, a place where they would be sure not to be disturbed. The officer ordered one of the electricians to take him around the ship; the electricians know every inch of deck, sides and mast space. Eighteen feet below the water-line they found an ammunition pasage way, well lighted and artificially ventilated. Two tons of gun cotton floated in tanks just forward of the spot; tons of "Explosive D," the most deadly explosive known, were piled up in magazines on either side; casks of detonating caps were piled in the compartment just aft. And here Reader and the sailors sat and studied the Bible. The number grew from fourteen to thirty-one. The average attendance was twenty-eight. Some men were converted down there. One member of the class is now preparing for the ministry.

Sunday morning service was announced by the ship's bugler, and during it the church flag floated at the masthead above "Old Glory." From 175 to 200 men would attend this service, held in what is called the "crew's space." If the ship were at anchor, service was held outside, on the quarterdeck. Moving picture shows were given on the main deck when the ship was at anchor. It was found difficult to use the machine and screen successfully while the vessel was under way. Eight hundred men watched these "shows," sitting everywhere, perched on guns, on rails, on ropes, on capstans, turrets, and lifeboats, fore and aft, on deck and aloft.

Results? Who can say? But this will help to something of an answer. In the army and navy together there is an Enlisted Men's Bible and Prayer League numbering 13,000; within the last eighteen months nearly 3,500 men signed the total abstinence pledge, becoming members of the Enlisted Men's Abstinence League; last year 844 men were converted in the army, and 1,000 in the navy.

It would seem futile to comment upon such magnificent achievements. Also it is rather difficult to characterize Reader and these other army and navy secretaries. Perhaps nothing better could be said than that they have shouted an eager answer "I!" to this invitation:

> The Son of God goes forth to war,
> A kingly crown to gain;
> His blood-red banner streams afar.
> Who follows in his train?

AMONG THE WORKERS

—A SUCCESSFUL CAMPAIGN was recently conducted at Haviland, O., by Rev. and Mrs. Stith, of Ada, O., and Professor and Mrs. Edwards, of Barlow, Ky.

—DR. W. R. MOODY and Dr. G. R. Stuart, of Knoxville, Tenn., delivered useful addresses at the City Rescue Mission Conference recently held at Grand Rapids, Mich.

—A REPORT FROM Chestertown, Md., says that two hundred persons have professed conversion in that town during a revival conducted by Evangelist Lewis Sheliborn, of Ashland, N. J.

—DURING A TWO weeks' visit of the Rev. Thomas Houston, the blind evangelist, to Bridgeport, Pa., thirty-two persons were received into the Presbyterian Church on confession of their faith. Of these twelve were men.

—THE LAITY LEAGUE for Social Service, Mr. Orrin G. Cocks, secretary, 200 Fifth Avenue, New York City, issues a list of one hundred topics for meetings on subjects of moral and social interest.

—MR. EDMUND A. LARSON, a former Moody Institute student, has recently left Grand Rapids, Mich., to take charge of the old Wheeler Mission at Indianapolis. He has had about five years' experience in mission work, and has rendered good service at Pittsburg, Pa.

—A LARGE NUMBER of persons professed conversion during a union tabernacle revival at Holton, Kan., under Evangelist Hart and Magann, of Fairbury, Ill. The students of the college and high school attended in large numbers, and many of them found Christ.

—THE TWENTY-FIFTH anniversary of the Brotherhood of Andrew and Philip is to be celebrated in Philadelphia on May 4. During the year 1912 measures to widen the program and to raise funds were successful in starting the association out this year with bright prospects. International headquarters have been established at 701 Hale Building, Philadelphia, Canada, England, Japan and the West Indies are among the foreign countries possessing branches.

—REV. ALBERT G. SHEPARD, pastor of the Friends' Church, Glens Falls, N. Y., writes, after a three weeks' series of meetings led by Rev. H. D. Sheldon, of Auburn, N. Y.: "Mr. Sheldon has done a work in our church that is invaluable. Evils have been dealt with that the pastor sought long to eliminate. Dead church members have been quickened into genuine zeal for God and the church. Many have been converted, and the young have been instructed in vital principles of the Christian life. Seventy cards of consecration have been signed."

—MR. CHARLES TAYLOR and his son, a lad of twelve, conducted a fortnight's mission in Phœnixville, Pa., with such remarkable success that although they went to that place entire strangers, the Rev. Robert M. Green, D.D., pastor of the First Baptist Church, has assumed the responsibility of booking them for all next year. Dr. Green's church was revived and edified, and nearly one hundred persons confessed conversion. Congregations "were stirred to the profoundest depths by the singing of the boy."

—CLEVELAND, OHIO, has experienced an effective spiritual awakening. The churches of the entire West Side, including Lakewood, united under the leadership of Evangelist Milford H. Lyon and his corps of six assistants, in a six weeks' tabernacle campaign. Despite inclement weather crowds from all sections of the city and surrounding towns thronged the tabernacle. That such a campaign should, within four weeks, set in motion forces that penetrated the heart of the city government, changing the attitude of many officials toward law enforcement, is evidence of the force of the movement.

—THE GOLDEN WEDDING of Rev. and Mrs. J. H. Burrows, of Cainsville, Mo., was celebrated recently at their home, Oak Lawn Farm. More than two hundred friends joined in the festivities of the happy occasion. Mr. Burrows has been not only a clergyman, but a legislator as well. He was three times a member of the Missouri House of Representatives, and served a term in Washington as member of Congress. He has been for forty-five years a Baptist clergyman, and served for many years as clerk of the West Fork Baptist Association. Mr. Burrows, besides his successful work in church and politics, is also a business man of good standing, and has been for some time president of the Cainsville Bank.

—SIXTY-FOUR YEARS as a Bible teacher is a most unusual and honorable record of service. It is held by Mrs. Caroline Gallup, of Victor, N. Y. When Mrs. Gallup, who is now 87, was 80 years old, her friends rallied together to do honor to their friend, and celebrated with her not only her birthday and the completion of sixty-four years of service as a teacher of the Presbyterian Sunday school, but also the thirtieth anniversary of the organization of the Woman's Missionary Society, of which she is a member. On this occasion Mrs. Gallup's friends presented her with a silver loving cup. The great love that all hold for her is seen in this tribute of one of her friends. She is now 87 years of age, but time has dealt most kindly with her, and a life spent in loving deeds of charity has left only the imprint of a gracious soul within.

THE KNOW HOW

To Feed Children and Get Good Rest

There are more nervous persons made by undigested food lying in the stomach than the average individual would suppose.

If food remains undigested in the stomach, it begins to ferment, set up gas and a large portion is thus converted into poison.

That's why imperfectly digested food may, and often does, cause irritation of the nerves and stupor of the mind—both and nerves are really poisoned.

"My daughter had complained for some time of a distressed feeling in the stomach after eating, which set me thinking that her diet was not right," writes an anxious and intelligent mother.

"She had been fond of cereals, but never tried Grape-Nuts. From reading an account of this predigested food, it seemed reasonable to try Grape-Nuts for a case.

"The results were really wonderful. The little brain that seemed at times unable to do its work, took on new life and vigor. Every morning, now, before going to school, she eats the crisp little morsels and is now completely and entirely well, she seems to have a new lease on life, no more distress in the stomach, no headache, but sound and well everyway. THE YOUNG PEOPLE'S MEETINGS

Real Humility*

WHAT is humility? We can best get at the answer by going beneath the surface and finding what it is that makes a man humble. Uriah Heep was humble outwardly, but within full of a dastardly pride. That was not humility. Nor is bashfulness nor timidity real humility. A soldier or a king may be humble without losing one whit of his courage or his authority.

Back of real humility are truthfulness, earnestness, love. If we are truthful we cannot think highly of ourselves; if we are earnest we shall not think too much of ourselves and of our rights; if we have love in our souls we shall want others to have their way rather than to have our own.

Humility is the crown of the Christian graces, because there is in it the very heart and spirit of Christianity. The Christian plan of life and salvation is that a man gives up his self-will, his pride, anything of which he might boast, and submits himself to Christ. "Except ye be converted and become as little children," Jesus said, "ye shall not enter into the kingdom of heaven." "Where is boasting then?" asks Paul. "It is excluded." (Rom. 3: 27.) The Christian has nothing to boast about except the greatness and the power and the love of Jesus. "The way up is down." A good deal of fault has been found of late years with an old Gospel hymn that might well be restored and put to frequent use:

> Oh, to be nothing, nothing;
> Only to lie at his feet!

The lesson story is a sad one, yet almost humorous as well. James and John had as yet no conception of the real nature of the kingdom of Jesus. They wanted high seats with great authority and honor. There are no such seats for those who seek them. The highest seats are to be for those who have forgotten self most completely, who have loved Christ most ardently, who have worked the hardest in self-sacrificing toil for those whom Jesus died to save.

The way to get humble is first of all to look at something big. A man feels very humble looking at Niagara or the Matterhorn. A soul feels very little as it looks at Jesus. And so long as it looks at him it will be kept humble. Then, a great love will expel pride. There can be no selfish pride in love. The heart that truly loves wishes to serve and honor the friend that is beloved. So love for Christ saves us from pride and gives us humility. Most of all, the power of his death, the grace of his atonement may cleanse away the pride that hinders and spoils our service, so that in meekness and lowliness of mind we may each esteem others better than ourselves and, watching and loving Christ, follow day by day "in his steps."

The Indignation of Jesus†

IT SEEMS an odd coincidence that on the same evening that the members of two great young people's organizations are talking about "Humility," another society is studying "Indignation." Yet there is after all nothing incompatible in these two terms. A humble person can be indignant; an indignant person can be humble.

But indignation is a rather dangerous word. Very often Christians become self-willed and unkind and even unrighteously angry, and justify themselves by saying that they are righteously indignant. We must be extremely careful about this. It is true that Jesus was angry at times, though the definite statement that he was angry is made only once: Mark 3: 5. He doubtless felt indignation when he drove the money-changers out of the temple. And on the occasion of his delivering the stern arraignment against the Scribes and Pharisees which we study especially to-day there must have been back of the scathing words an anger that was terrible.

Jesus was the incarnate God, and all the statements made about the wrath of Jehovah are true of him. Even at the last, when the tenderest symbol is used to designate the Christ, there is in connection with that term of tenderness a term of anger, for the Revelation describes "the wrath of the Lamb."

That is the kind of anger that God has, the kind that Jesus had—the wrath that has back of it great love. Moses was angry with the people when they committed idolatry, because he loved them. He was meek like Jesus, but he was capable of indignation. Paul was humble enough to call himself the slave of Christ and to deny that he had any goodness except what Christ had given; yet his words flared out against the teachers who would lure his spiritual children away from the simplicity of faith.

Two practical points may well be kept in mind. An anger that leads us beyond self-control is always and dreadfully sinful. "Be ye angry and sin not," Paul counsels. Whatever anger the Christian may feel must be under the will's control. Then, too, righteous anger must be kind. If anger leads us to feel like hurting another, if anger passes to hate or even to temporary ill-will, we have sinned. How striking is the fact that with almost the same breath with which Jesus ends his fierce denunciations he can give utterance to that tenderest and gentlest cry, so full of yearning heartbreak: "O Jerusalem, Jerusalem, thou that killest the prophets, and stonest them which are sent unto thee, how often would I have gathered thy children together, even as a hen gathereth her chickens under her wings, and ye would not!"

Young People's Question Box

Mrs. E. H. F., Brownsboro, Ore. I am seeking advice as to how to carry on the young people's meeting and make it interesting. Can you suggest a way to conduct it so the young people will like to come and not get tired of it? I would also like some suggestions for little folks when they attend these meetings.

It should be remembered in the young people's work as well as in all the departments of church life that the most interesting thing is real religion. Do not be afraid of making your meetings too spiritual. A few people who really love Jesus, who love to talk about him, who know that he has saved them from sin, will find that others will want to come to listen to the singing, the prayers, the Bible study and testimony. Good singing is a tremendous help. Try to find some one who plays the organ or piano in a bright, spirited fashion and also some one to lead the singing heartily. Organize a special young people's choir. If any one can play a cornet or violin make use of these instruments. But even if you can't find these helpers, start in bravely with prayer, singing, testimony, the reading of the Scriptures, and real stories of Gospel work in mission or evangelistic fields. Work all the time in co-operation with the pastor and under his direction. Get the others who are spiritually interested to join you in prayer for the conversion and consecration of the young people. Make the little folks feel welcome; find brief stories to read to them; get them occasionally to sing a special song for the rest. If possible, however, organize a separate junior society. Keep everybody at work. Find something for each one to do so that he will feel not only that he is getting help and pleasure, but that he is helping some one else. Make the society feel that it has a definite work to do for the church, the community, the denomination, and also, by prayer and gifts and personal interest, on the foreign field.

"AT GRANDMOTHER'S"

When the circus comes to town, it is not the show alone that fascinates, but the immensity of numbers, the quickness of movement, the sureness of operation and the efficiency which keeps everything as bright as new in spite of the soil of travel and weather. For instance—

Is it not surprising how the gilded figures and scroll work on the menagerie and parade wagons are kept so brilliant? It is evident that circus men know how to clean gold leaf without injury.

They use Ivory Soap and nothing but Ivory Soap.

Because it is mild and pure and free from alkali, Ivory Soap does not hurt the gilding. And because it contains no free oil, it is rinsed off easily, leaving the finish beautifully clear and bright.

With the circus people using Ivory Soap for this purpose all through the season, the housewife may be certain that there is nothing surer or safer for cleaning gilded articles in the home.

Here is an Excellent Way to Clean Gold Frames

Shave half of a small cake of Ivory Soap into a pint of water and boil for five minutes. When cool, apply this jelly with a very soft brush or sponge. Then, with a clean soft brush or sponge, apply cold, clear water and let dry immediately in a warm place.

THE NEW SOCIAL REGIME IN WASHINGTON

MISS MARGARET WILSON MISS JESSIE WILSON MISS ELEANOR WILSON

WHEN the coming of a new President brings in a new political party, as was the case when President Wilson was inaugurated a few weeks ago, the changes in every branch of the government and in the personnel of the social life of the capital are most marked. It is usual for the outgoing President and his wife to serve a luncheon on inauguration day at the White House for the incoming President and his family, to which the political friends of the latter are invited. This luncheon always registers unmistakably that "the king is dead! Long live the king!"

To illustrate: Some weeks before the last inauguration President Taft wrote Mr. Wilson a letter and told him that it would be the pleasure of Mrs. Taft and himself to give a luncheon for the new President and those he should like to entertain on the day of the inauguration, inviting him to send a list of those he wished to have asked to the luncheon.

After the inaugural ceremonies at the Capitol were completed Mr. Taft returned to the White House with President Wilson and with the utmost cordiality and graciousness received all the guests and made them as welcome as he could have done had he been the incoming rather than the outgoing President. As soon as this ceremony was over he slipped out of the south door of the historic old mansion and was hurried away in an auto to the railway station to join Mrs. Taft, who had left the White House in the earlier hours of the morning.

"Not a familiar face have I seen here all this day," almost wailed one of the women servants in the cloak-room that afternoon, nor did she exaggerate the case. His friends had passed when the king was gone. His friends flocked in when the king arrived.

But such delightful new friends as they are! Republicans as well as Democrats can be proud of the new President, the scholarly, Christian man who has become the chief executive of the nation. His splendid inaugural address won the hearts of the people in every section of the country, and his conduct since has strengthened the good impression it created. "He is my President too," Uncle Joe Cannon, for so many years the opposition leader of the House of Representatives, said of him to the newspaper men at the White House when he called to bid Mr. Wilson good-by before leaving Washington. And that is the feeling the new President gives to all who talk to him.

"They are the homiest people, the whole family of them, from the President to his youngest daughter, that I have ever seen in the White House," said one of the oldest guards of the Executive Mansion. "When that great bunch of relatives were here during inauguration week they all seemed like one big family who were having the happiest reunion you ever saw, and now that the family are here alone it seems just the same. Mrs. Wilson is never in too big a hurry to say a pleasant word in passing the house employees, and the young ladies take just the liveliest, jolliest interest in everything that is new to them, like any other American girls would do. They're not a bit set up, and it's a pleasure to see them taking hold of their new duties. They are sharp as tacks too. They don't rush into things, they are going slow enough not to make mistakes." They are indeed taking up their new duties most graciously. After the inauguration rush of visitors was over, the President began receiving callers by appointment early each afternoon in the East Room. His first real reception, officially, was for the ambassadors and ministers of the diplomatic corps. He received them in the rigid formality which is always incumbent when the representatives of the rulers of the world are received. The President wore a Prince Albert coat, and each of the White House military aides was dressed in strict uniform of his office. The members of the corps were in full court costume and the entire ceremony was most formal. A few afternoons later, however, the President and Mrs. Wilson were at home to the entire corps with their wives and daughters. It was a charming glimpse of what the social side of the White House will be under this administration. The President and Mrs. Wilson received together, and the daughters assisted in doing the honors. Tea was served in the state dining-room, and the house was beautifully decorated with flowers. The corps was delighted with the new President's family and carried away a most pleasant impression of their hospitality.

Vice-President and Mrs. Marshall also are making many friends in their new position. They have taken an attractive suite at the Shoreham Hotel and are democratic and approachable. Mrs. Marshall is a Western woman. She was born in a small Indiana town, Angola, and is proud of the land of her birth. She spent her girlhood there, was educated in an excellent denominational school near her birthplace, and there met and married Mr. Marshall.

On the morning the representative of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD went to the hotel to call on Mrs. Marshall, the Vice-President came in and chatted most pleasantly. An Oxford Bible was lying on the table and under the rubber band encircling it was lettered the Vice-President's name. This was spoken of to him and he answered:

"Oh, yes, I'm very proud of that Bible. My Sunday school class of young men gave it to me just before we left Indianapolis."

Mrs. Marshall had gone into the other room, and she called out laughingly, "But he'll not tell you how opportunely the Bible came to him."

"Yes, I will," called back the Vice-President with an answering laugh. "And I'll leave it to you," turning to the representative, "if the joke is not on Mrs. Marshall rather than on me. When we were packing rather hastily for our Western trip some weeks ago," he resumed, "we packed several boxes for storage, and after they were nailed up and gone I found that Mrs. Marshall had packed away my Bible with the other books."

"And do you know," said Mrs. Marshall, returning to the sitting-room, "that he thinks he can't read this Bible, although it's a lot nicer than his old one."

"That's true," said the Vice-President; "it is a fine Bible and I'm very proud of it, but I had used my old Bible for more than twenty years, and some way I always seemed able to turn to whatever I wanted in it. It will take time to become as accustomed to this one."

Is it not fine for the people of the United States that both the President and Vice-President are men who know their Bibles and whose Christianity dominates both their public and private lives? Like the President and Mrs. Wilson, the Vice-President and Mrs. Marshall are members of the Presbyterian Church and will identify themselves with a church of that denomination while in Washington.

As is widely known, the new secretary of state and Mrs. Bryan are active Christian workers, both of them having been members of the Presbyterian Church for many years. The first Sunday they spent in Washington after Mr. Bryan's appointment, they attended the old First Presbyterian Church, down in John Marshall Place, where President and Mrs. Cleveland were communicants, and Mr. Bryan agreed to become an associate teacher of one of the Bible classes for young men. On a following Sunday he spoke at the Y. M. C. A. meeting, and let it be known that he would help support that organization. The influence of such a stand for righteousness in high office can hardly be estimated.

MRS. DANIEL F. HOUSTON

Secretary and Mrs. Bryan have leased the big and roomy house which the soldiers of the regular army of America presented to General John A. Logan out on Calumet Place at the swell of Mount Pleasant Hill. It is a most sightly location. From its broad porches and upper windows a fine view of the Potomac and the blue hills of Virginia are visible. Its well-shaded garden makes a delightfully cool retreat for the family and is charming for out-of-door fêtes. As wife of the secretary of state, a good share of the official entertaining will fall on Mrs. Bryan's shoulders, but there is no one who can fill the place more graciously. She is an excellent linguist, and that will add to her popularity with the diplomatists. She is blessed with an infinite amount of quick perception and tact, which would make her popular anywhere. In addition, she has the fortunate faculty of remembering names and faces, and that will be of infinite value to her in the complexity of Washington social life. Both the secretary and Mrs. Bryan have traveled extensively; they have been presented at nearly all the courts of Europe and have met the leading public men of the world and are in every way qualified to fill the high position which has come to them. Their three children have married. Ruth, the eldest, is the wife of a lieutenant in the Royal Engineers of the British Army, Reginald Owen. She has three lovely children, who spend part of their time with their devoted grandparents. The second daughter, Grace Dexter, is Mrs. Richard Lewis Hargreaves, whose husband is a merchant of Lincoln, Neb. Their son, William Jennings Bryan, Jr., is his father's law partner, and has a home in Lincoln also. He was married a year or so ago and has spent this winter in Arizona with his young wife, who is rather frail.

The new secretary of the treasury, Mr. McAdoo, is a tall, dark man with a face shaped like the martyred President Lincoln's, and there is a somberness about his eyes when he is not speaking which accentuates the resemblance. But those who know the new secretary best say that the resemblance to Lincoln is more in character than in looks. He has the unbounded patience and sense of justice and forbearance which marked the great emancipator, and he is sincere through and through. He believes and accepts every other man as such until he proves himself otherwise.

Mr. McAdoo's pictures make him look old, too, but when he is talking, particularly when he laughs, one forgets the serious look and realizes that the secretary is by no means as old as his photographs indicate. A year or two ago he lost his wife, a rarely gifted, sweet woman, and their union has been so ideal that it is small wonder he felt that much of the brightness had gone out of his life when she died. But he has six lovely children—three sons and three daughters. His eldest daughter, Mrs. Charles Taber Martin, resides in Prescott, Ari. The eldest son, Francis Huger, was recently graduated from Princeton and is now studying law in New York. William Gibbs, Jr., and Robert Hazelhurst are attending school at Concord, N. H. Miss McAdoo, the second daughter, was with her father in Washington during inauguration week, where her beauty was greatly admired and where she made a host of new friends. The youngest child, Sallie, is a little miss of nine summers. The family are Episcopalian and all of them devoted to their church.

The secretary of war and Mrs. Garrison are preeminently fitted also for the high position which has come to them. They are cultured, scholarly people who have read and studied and traveled, and who care for the better things which make life worth while. Mrs. Garrison is the daughter of an army officer and was born at an army post in Arizona. Her father died in her infancy and her mother brought her back to Philadelphia, where she spent her girlhood and where she married Mr. Garrison. The new secretary left the bench to go into the cabinet, and had made an enviable reputation as a jurist. They have been married thirteen years but have no children. He was the son of an Episcopalian minister and both of them are devout churchmen.

GEORGE I. OF GREECE ASSASSINATED

THE KING OF THE HELLENES FALLS VICTIM TO A MURDEROUS BULLET WHILE WALKING IN THE STREETS OF CONQUERED SALONICA. ALLEGIANCE SWORN TO THE NEW KING, CONSTANTINE I.

GEORGE I., the King of the Hellenes, was shot while walking in the principal street of Salonica a little after five o'clock on the afternoon of March 18. According to the reckoning of the Greek calendar this was just fifty years from the date of his election to the throne of Greece by the National Assembly of that country.

King George has always been a democratic monarch, and it was his custom to go about the streets of Athens unguarded and often accompanied only by an aide or his private secretary. When the Greek army of 10,000 compelled 25,000 Turks who comprised the garrison of Salonica to lay down their arms and surrender the city, King George, to make sure the Greek tenure of the city, immediately went from Athens and took up his residence in a villa located in the chief residential district. So great was his confidence in his people that he continued his old habit of walking unattended even in the newly conquered city. It had become his custom to go each day either to the headquarters of the army at the White Tower or to the cavalry barracks. On the afternoon of the 18th he was returning with his private secretary, Lieutenant Colonel Frankoudis, after a walk to the tower. They were talking of the recent successes of the Greek arms and of the capture of Yanina.

"To-morrow," said the king, "when I pay my formal visit to the dreadnought Goeben, it is the fact that a German battleship is to honor a Greek king here in Salonica that will fill me with happiness and contentment." These were the monarch's last words, for at that moment a shot rang out from behind and the king sank to the ground. Colonel Frankoudis wheeled and, throwing himself before the king, seized the assassin just in time to divert the second shot, which would have ended his own life.

Two gendarmes, who were following the king at a great distance, rushed to the scene and took charge of the assailant. Colonel Frankoudis, who had guarded his royal master with his own body, placed his majesty in a carriage and had him rushed to Papafion Hospital, but before the gates were reached the king was dead. The assassin's bullet penetrated just under the shoulder blade, and, passing through the heart, had gone clear through the body.

The assassin proved to be Aleko Schinas, a Greek, who is believed to be of feeble intellect. When questioned immediately after arrest, he stated that he had killed the king merely because he had been refused money and it was hard for a poor man to get along in time of war. An officer asked him if he had no pity for his country that he should slay the king at a time when Greece was battling for her ancient rights and territories. The assassin's only reply was, "I am against all governments." Some of the despatches announce that considerable money was found upon Schinas with certain papers showing that the murder was part of a plot concocted by a group of anarchists, but all the evidences point to the certainty that Schinas is merely a weak-minded malcontent unsupported by any organization.

As the king's body was placed in the hospital, Prince Nicholas, the only member of the Greek royal family who was in Salonica, arrived, accompanied by a number of officers. Other officers were summoned and the prince, speaking in a voice choked with sobs, said: "It is my deep grief to have to announce to you the death of our beloved king and to invite you to swear fidelity to our new sovereign, King Constantine." Though all the officers were deeply affected by the death of King George, they responded by shouting, "Long live the king!"

The new king, who, as crown prince and generalissimo of the army, was with his troops at the newly captured city of Yanina, was notified by telegraph and rushed to Salonica by special train. The news was also wired to Athens, and the widowed Queen Olga, who had left Salonica only a few days before to superintend the work of aiding wounded soldiers at Prevesa, left immediately upon a Russian battleship for the scene of the tragedy.

The Late King George I. of Greece

All Greece is plunged in deep grief at the loss of the king whom they had come to love so well and admire so sincerely. As soon as the news spread in Salonica, the shops and cafés all closed, flags were flown at half mast, and, as darkness came, no lights were lighted. Traffic in the streets seemed to stop as if by magic, and only little groups of men could be seen here and there talking in subdued tones of what had just taken place. In Athens the effect was almost identical. All business activities were stopped, and for many hours there was a strange quiet throughout the city. Later in the night impromptu parades of men and boys passed slowly through the streets singing the national dirges and funeral songs.

The death of King George has affected with deep grief a large number of other European countries. It was as a Danish prince that he was elected to the throne of Greece. He was the son of King Christian of Denmark, who was known as "the father-in-law of Europe." He was the brother of Prince Valdemar of Denmark, who burst into tears when the news was told him. The grief of the Danish people, too, is very real, for it has been the king's custom to spend several weeks each summer in his native land. There his democratic ways had endeared him to the people in much the same way as his father's.

The late king was also a frequent visitor in London, for he was the favorite brother of the Queen Mother, Alexandra. He was popular in England, where he often went about the streets and mingled with the crowds, entirely unrecognized. The whole British Empire sympathizes very deeply with Queen Alexandra in her latest sorrow. Within a few years her eldest brother, the king of Denmark, her husband, the late King Edward, her son-in-law, the Duke of Fife, her nephew, Prince George of Cumberland, and a cousin, Prince Francis of Teck, have all been taken from her by death.

In America it was as one of the leading spirits in the revival of the Olympic games that King George was best known and best liked. The American commissioner to the games said a few days ago of the king: "He was a really democratic character and a man of lovable disposition. To him we can really credit the making of the Olympic games an important event in the eyes of all countries as evidenced by the world-wide sympathy for the movement."

The late king's tenure of the Greek throne has been marked by many ups and downs of popularity and unpopularity. It took the Greek people many years to realize that their foreign-born king really had the best interests of the country at heart. The unsuccessful wars against Turkey were, in a large measure, blamed upon him and upon Crown Prince Constantine. His attitude on the admission of Crete as a Greek State was also unpopular with the people. They now realize, however, that the king in many instances advised the wisest course, and during the last few years, and especially during the present war, he has grown to be the popular idol of the nation. The new king, Constantine, has also become very popular during the present war. His successes at Salonica and at Yanina have entirely wiped out of the minds of his people the fact that they criticized him severely for advising against the last disastrous war with Turkey.

Some fears were expressed in European diplomatic circles that there might be complications in the Balkan situation, due to King George's death. These fears were discounted within a short time, however, by expressions of the fullest confidence in the new ruler, Constantine I.

TOPICS OF INTEREST AT HOME AND ABROAD

—THE FRENCH GOVERNMENT has decided to add 160,000 men to the army. A compulsory three-year military service bill has been introduced in the Chamber.

—THE TOTAL EXPENDITURES in connection with the inauguration of President Wilson reached the sum of $73,000. The joint Congressional Inaugural Committee spent about $26,000, which sum was appropriated by Congress.

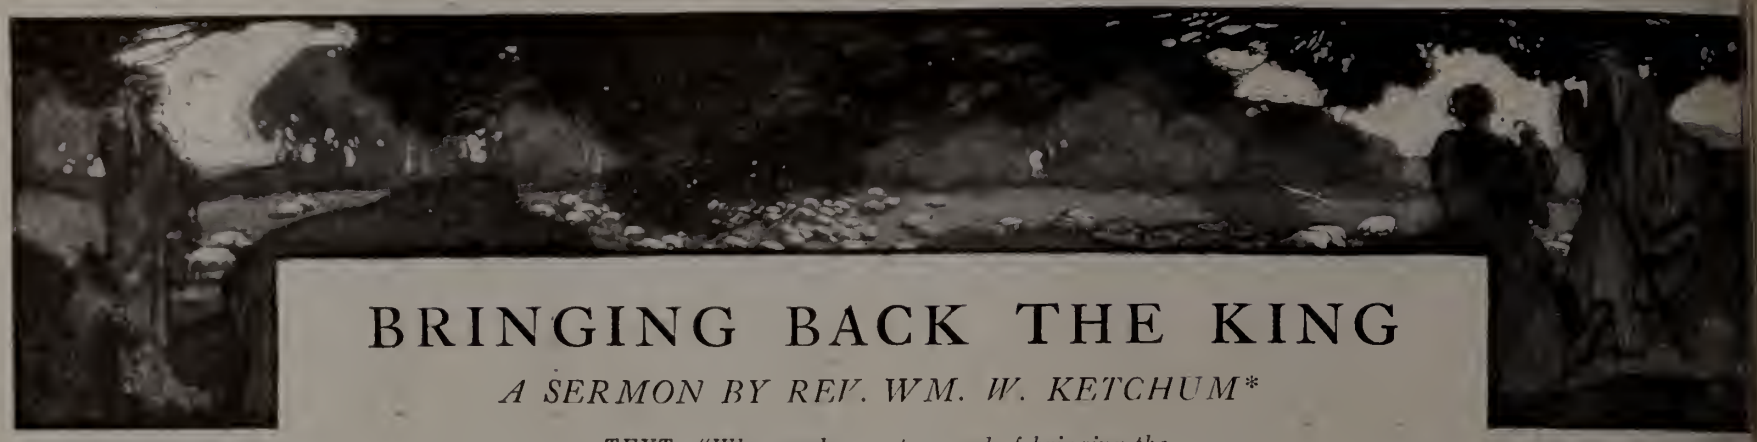
—MAJOR-GENERAL LEONARD WOOD has been reappointed by President Wilson as chief of staff of the army. Whether the appointment is ad interim or not has not yet been announced. It is also announced that Hon. Alvey A. Adee, second assistant secretary of state, who has served twenty-six years in the department and has been the wheel-horse during many administrations, will be retained in office.

—THE True Voice of March 7 (a Catholic journal) laments the fact that there has been no Catholic appointed to a Cabinet portfolio. It says, however: "We did not expect the appointment of a Catholic to a cabinet position, after the appointment of Mr. Tumulty to be private secretary to the President. From one-third to one-half the Democratic vote in the nation is Catholic, but there seems to be no suitable cabinet timber in it all."

—ALTHOUGH PRESIDENT WILSON'S methods are not spectacular he "does things" and big things too in a summary fashion calculated to cause distress among "old school" men of many types. By one brief statement issued after a cabinet council, March 18, he drew the United States out of the "Six Power Group" that had been negotiating a loan of $125,000,000 with the Chinese Government, re-stated by implication the doctrine of entering into "no entangling foreign alliances," repudiated the so-called "dollar diplomacy" of the Taft administration, rather more than suggested an early recognition of the Chinese Republic, presaged an aggressive forward movement calculated to extend at once the opportunities and the resources of American financial interests, and presented a new version of the phrase "the open door" widely differing from that of John Hay.

—ON ST. PATRICK'S DAY President Wilson issued a call convening Congress in extra session on April 7. The proclamation stated no reason for its issue, but the President had immediately after his election said he would call an extra session to revise the tariff. The new tariff bill has been practically completed by the Ways and Means Committee, and its draft contains about 4,000 rates, most of which have been definitely settled by the committee. In general character the rate levels resemble those of the Underwood bills passed in the Sixty-second Congress: these were the wool, sugar, steel, cotton and chemical bills—known as the "fighting schedules of the tariff." It is not likely that the complete organization of the House will be effected in April, but that only such committees will be elected as are necessary for the despatch of business: the Ways and Means, the Mileage, the Committee on Accounts, the Committee on Rules and the Committee on Enrolled Bills are among these. The Sundry Civil Appropriation Bill vetoed by President Taft and the Indian Appropriation Bill must be passed before July 1. The former will probably be amended to meet the objections in the Taft veto message, and the two bills will probably be reintroduced and passed under a special rule, without reference to a committee.

—DR. FRIEDRICH FRANZ FRIEDMANN, the German physician who has found a "turtle vaccine" for the cure of tuberculosis, selected eleven cases—ten male and one female—for treatment at Bellevue Hospital, New York, the demonstration being given in the presence of over one hundred and fifty doctors, nurses, attendants, and the staff of the hospital. The injection was made in the left hip, the dose being from five to eight drops of the vaccine. Dr. Friedmann sponged the hip with an antiseptic fluid, and as soon as the injection was made the puncture was sponged with more of the fluid by the operator's brother, Dr. Arthur Friedmann. Dr. Lowery said that Dr. Friedmann's technique was perfect, and that he made a profound impression on all who saw him operate. "He exhibited the skill of a true physician in the administration of his cure." The patients ranged in age from sixteen to fifty years, and their cases from incipiency to the third stage. None of these will be discharged as "cured" until two government officials give the word; and even then the Marine Hospital Corps will make reports upon their cases for a long time to come, wherever they may be residing. Eleven cases were also treated at the Montefiore Home. Dr. Friedmann, during a brief visit to Canada, treated forty cases at London, Ontario, and seventy at Toronto. One of the latter, who suffered from tuberculosis of the kidneys, had had one removed, and the other was badly affected. After administering the vaccine Dr. Friedmann predicted her recovery.



BRINGING BACK THE KING

*A SERMON BY REV. WM. W. KETCHUM

TEXT: "Why speak ye not a word of bringing the king back?" II Sam. 19: 10

ABSALOM'S rebellion is at an end. David's best loved son, who rebelled against his father, drove him from his kingdom and usurped the throne, has been slain in the woods of Ephraim. His body, flung into a deep pit, lies buried under a great heap of stones near the spot where Joab, disregarding David's command to "deal gently with the young man," had thrust him through with a dart.

Since the death of Absalom and the crushing of the rebellion, David, the true and lawful king, has not returned to Jerusalem. He is still on the other side of the Jordan, an exile from his throne. His faithful followers of the men of Judah seem to have forgotten this. Suddenly, however, they awaken to the fact that David has not resumed his throne, and in astonishment they reproach one another with the question: "Why say ye never a word about bringing back the king?" It is not long before their question leads to action. Taking David with them they recross the Jordan, and with rejoicing place him on his throne.

This is the historic setting of the text. In our use of these words, we apply them to David's greater Son, our Lord, remembering that "these things happened unto them for an example and are written for our instruction" (I Cor. 10: 11). And so we ask: "Why say ye never a word about bringing back the King?"

In thinking of these words in connection with Christ, we should understand that our Lord is not now on his throne; the throne of his father David, which Jehovah, through Nathan the prophet, promised should be his forever (II Sam. 7: 14-17). This promise was renewed in Isaiah's time, and we hear the prophet saying: "Of the increase of his government and peace there shall be no end, upon the throne of David, and upon his kingdom, to order it, and to establish it with judgment and with justice from henceforth even forever." (Isa. 9: 7.) Also to the mother of our Lord the angel said: "The Lord God shall give unto him the throne of his father David: and he shall reign over the house of Jacob forever; and of his kingdom there shall be no end" (Luke 1: 30-33).

The Throne of David

Thus, on three different occasions, in time far removed, we have this same promise given. And why should we not expect that God, who so literally fulfils his promises, should just as literally fulfil this promise that "there shall be given unto him the throne of his father David"?

This promise is a prophecy, and it no more admits of spiritualizing than the prophecies already minutely fulfilled. To say that Christ reigns in the believer's heart and in his church is true, but in no sense does such a reign fulfil the promise that he shall sit upon the throne of David. Neither the believer's heart nor the church is the throne of David. The throne of David is as real and historic as the throne of the Cæsars. And though not now occupied because the lawful King was rejected, the time is coming when there shall be given to the thorn-crowned, rejected King the throne of his father David. We may ask, "How can this be?" and Isaiah answers: "The zeal of the Lord of hosts will perform it." (Isa. 9: 7.)

To spiritualize this prophecy is to cut the very heart out of it. Such a method permits one to spiritualize any of the facts in the life of our Lord. Take, for instance, the statement of Peter on the day of Pentecost, "God had sworn he would raise up Christ to sit upon his [David's] throne. He, seeing this before, spake of the resurrection of Christ" (Acts 2: 30-31). Why, if we spiritualize the throne, may we not just as consistently spiritualize the resurrection? Alas! this is what many are doing, and the resurrection of our Lord is made to mean nothing more than the continued existence of his soul after death. Let us not make a similar mistake. Christ has been promised the throne of David. It is a real throne. He has never occupied it. He is "the nobleman who has gone into a far country to receive for himself a kingdom and to return." He is "on the right hand of God, from henceforth expecting till his enemies be made his footstool." (Heb. 10: 12, 13.) In the meantime "God is visiting the Gentiles and is calling out a people for his name." After this, we are told "he will return and there shall be given him the throne of his father David, and of his kingdom there shall be no end." So we ask, "Why say ye never a word about bringing back the King?"

* Pastor Bloomingdale Reformed Church, New York City.

The Prince of This World

Again, in thinking of these words in connection with Christ, it will help us if we understand that in this world a usurper rules and reigns. When our God was about to leave the world, he said to his disciples, "The prince of this world cometh and hath nothing in me" (John 14: 30). Shortly before this he had said: "Now is the judgment of this world, now is the prince of this world cast out" (John 12: 31; 16: 11). Undoubtedly he referred to the judgment and victory of his own cross. However, the execution of this judgment has been delayed and during our Lord's absence the one whom he calls "the prince of this world" is "the god of this age" (II Cor. 4: 4). He is none other than Satan himself, who is also called "the prince of the power of the air, the spirit that now worketh in the children of disobedience" (Eph. 2: 2).

Our ideas of Satan have been gained largely from the way in which man has depicted him. According to the Scriptures, Satan, the usurper, is not that hideous monster man so often portrays him to be. On the contrary, he is a being of great dignity; so lofty that Michael the archangel, "disputing with him about the body of Moses, durst not bring against him a railing accusation, but said, The Lord rebuke thee" (Jude 9). He is possessed of great power, wisdom, and subtlety, and "is himself transformed into an angel of light" (II Cor. 11: 14).

Now we should expect if he is the god of this age that the age will in character be like its god. This is precisely what it is, for he is "the evil one" and the age over which he reigns is called an "evil age." (Gal. 1: 4, R.V.) To say this, as the Scriptures do, does not necessarily imply that the age is grossly immoral. In fact, we believe it is the most ethical age the world has ever seen, and that it suits the god of this age to hide, as far as possible, its vice and crime. Do we not read that "his ministers also are transformed as the ministers of righteousness, whose end shall be according to their works"? (II. Cor. 11: 15.)

The Evil of the Present Age

To prove the evil character of the age it is not necessary to deny its progress, its achievements, its civilization. In these the world has made giant strides, but they do not of themselves indicate that the world is nearer God. Indeed, to these a self-satisfied, self-centered, godless world points with pride. And these are the very things with which the god of this age would have us occupied. He hates the Cross and the crown, the atonement of our Lord and his c owning glory, and nothing suits his purpose better than to obscure them both. He knows that if he can only lead men to believe in their own self-righteousness, then they will feel no need of the Cross; and if he can only lead men to believe in their own power to adjust the ills of the world, then they will see no need of the crown. So we are told that as "the god of this age, he blinds the minds of them who believe not, lest the light of the Gospel of the glory of Christ should shine unto them" (II Cor. 4: 4). And it does seem as if he were succeeding very well; for we hear in these days less and less of the Cross and very little of the crown. The age, like its god, is utterly and absolutely opposed to the purpose and plan of God to redeem mankind by the blood of his Cross, and the world by the coming of its King. It is satisfied with its own self-righteousness and its own self-sufficiency.

Whatever we may think of the character of this age, it is very evident from the facts of present day life that our Lord is not now reigning over the earth as the Scriptures predict he shall reign. These facts are so palpable that no one can deny them, and unless ignorant of Satan's devices, we shall not be deceived as to the real character of this age. But no matter what our opinions may be, the Word of God declares that "the whole world lieth in the evil one" (I John 5: 19, R. V.); that he is "the god of this age." So we ask, "Why say ye never a word about bringing back the King?"

In applying these words to our Lord, we understand that he is the world's lawful King; that, as he came the first time a sin-bearer "to put away sin by the sacrifice of himself," so he is coming to earth the second time as a King to rule and reign. This means that this earth, which was the scene of his humiliation, is to be the place of his exaltation; that here, where he was crucified, he shall yet be crowned.

Such has been the hope of Christians in all ages since our Lord ascended. Sometimes it has been eclipsed, but never lost sight of altogether. "It was this hope," as Professor Denny says, "which more than anything gave its color to primitive Christianity, its unworldliness, its moral intensity, its command of the future, even in this life." The early Christians, we know, had as their watchword, "maranatha," the Lord cometh, and Gibbons, the historian, says that "the hope of his return was productive of the most salutary effects on their faith and practice."

Christ Is Coming in Person

Enough has already been said to indicate that by the second coming of Christ we understand the personal, literal return of Jesus Christ to this earth; that he is coming back in person to occupy his throne.

"Once," we are told, "at the end of the ages he appeared to put away sin by the sacrifice of himself." That was a personal, literal appearing of our Lord upon the earth. Then we read "he entered into heaven itself now to appear in the presence of God for us." That was a literal, personal return to heaven and refers to his present work as our advocate before the Father. Further, we read, "Unto them that look for him shall he appear the second time apart from sin unto salvation" (Heb. 9: 24, 28). Now, if the first two appearings are to be understood as literal and personal, as without question they are, surely the third appearing here promised must be also literal and personal. When our Lord ascended into heaven, the promise given the men of Galilee who witnessed his ascension was that "this same Jesus, which is taken up from you into heaven, shall so come in like manner as ye have seen him go into heaven" (Acts 1: 11). That is, just as his ascension was literal and personal, so his return shall be. It is not the spiritual coming of Christ into the believer's heart that is meant by the second coming, but the actual return of the Lord himself from heaven.

Critics do not deny that Christ predicted his personal, literal return in glory; they do not and cannot deny that such is the teaching of the New Testament, and that the Apostolic Church expected his personal return. What they do is to say that Christ and the writers of the New Testament and all who expected the Lord to return from heaven were mistaken. "The passing of time," they say, "has demonstrated it to be a prodigious error." One cannot refrain from noting the modesty (?) of critics who set themselves up above the word of our Lord and the teachings of the Scriptures. The fallacy of the argument that time has vitiated the promise is at once evident. Four thousand years passed before Christ came the first time, and to say that because almost two thousand years have passed since he went away, therefore he will not return, is simply foolishness. "The Lord," we are told, "is not slack concerning his promises, as some men count slackness." and "one day is with the Lord as a thousand years, and a thousand years as one day." (II Peter 3: 8-9.)

Unwittingly, those who scoff at the truth of the second coming of Christ are fulfilling the Scriptures, just as the men of Israel did who in ignorance

A GLOBE AS A MISSIONARY

A SCENE WHICH IS TO-DAY AS IT WAS A THCUSAND YEARS AGO. THE SHIPS OF THE DESERT STARTING FROM KUWEIT

KUWEIT is situated at the head of the Persian Gulf, and is famous as yet only as a proposed terminus of the Bagdad Railway, which was long talked about by English diplomatists and is now being built by German engineers. It is an ordinary Arab border town, built of mud and plaster, with few houses more than one story high and only the sheik's palace making any pretensions to elegance. One room in this palace is distinctly bizarre and, in a way, arabesque. It has a large and beautiful Persian rug on the floor and a ceiling covered with many chromos of queens and actresses and others in gilt frames, picked up in the Bombay bazaar. Only an Arab would have thought of that place for the pictures.

The town is located between the desert and the sea. In the space of half an hour one can watch a caravan of a hundred camels start out from one side of the town for a month's journey into the heart of Arabia, and then turning from the "ships of the desert" will come upon the town's water front and see hundreds of other ships ready for a trip to Africa or drawn up on the beach to await the pearling season. Those who buy their pearls in Paris are probably getting Persian Gulf gems gathered by Arab divers.

But it is as a Bedouin that the Arab is most interesting, and those at the missionary exhibitions in America who inspected the "black tents of Kedar" and marveled at the simplicity of their primitive life and may have experienced a secret longing for it, were made far more welcome by the stewards than they would be by Ishmaelites, especially if there were women folk near. The ladies do not hold their hands before their faces to show their turquoise rings, which ward off malign spiritual influences; but to let you know that you look upon a Moslem's wife. It is for such as these as well as for the 50,000 townspeople that the Arabian Mission maintains a Bible shop and a hospital conducted by a woman doctor, in addition to the usual man medical missionary.

The geographical globe in the shop is the first and only one in Kuweit and is one of four or five in all Arabia from Bagdad to Aden. It was placed in the Bible shop to draw people there and it is serving its purpose splendidly. The less ignorant of the place, and these included the masters of sailing ships that had made the trip to Africa, and others who had traveled to Bombay, were not hard to convince that it really represented the earth. They were delighted to have pointed out to them the places they had visited. Yet even these could not help pondering that self-raising problem of how the under half lives. But the rest would exclaim "Mashallah" "Whatever God wills," and doubt not that it was another Christian heresy.

A TYPICAL BEDOUIN ARAB

The globe is directly contrary to the Mohammedan religion. It teaches that the earth is round, but their traditions will not let them outgrow the Ptolemaic system that proclaims the earth to be flat. The Moslems in Kuweit have not now much trouble in accepting both. But this graphic geographic evidence will hasten their advance to the modified Islamism of India and present the better soil of a more open mind, for which the Arabian Mission has labored for over twenty years. Already the town is divided into two distinct camps in a controversy about the earth's rotundity. The advanced party, which reads the newspapers from Egypt and encourages education, has aroused hostility and enmity by introducing the study of geography into a large Koranic school recently established. Just the other day the teacher told the boys the world was round like an orange and rotates, and the following day he was compelled to tell them that they need not learn that lesson. But the shop is having an increased call for geographies, and when they realize that the Koran is wrong about this world, they will be more ready to believe it is wrong about the next. The contributors to missions for Moslems are having increased encouragement for their faith and support, for last year even Kuweit was able to add to the number of converts from Islam.

The Arab is only beginning his acquaintance with the outside world. The missionary exhibits that have recently been given in some of the larger American cities were no more a revelation to Americans than the camera, for instance, is to the Arab. The mission world could rouse no more interest at home than the world as known to New York, Chicago, or San Francisco does amongst the Arabs.

THE GREAT CATASTROPHE OF 1913

RELATED SEVERAL YEARS AFTER THE EVENTS DESCRIBED

BY CHARLES M. SHELDON, D.D.

Reprinted by permission of The Independent

THE world will never forget the great catastrophe of 1913. By the side of it, the losses by fire, earthquake, plague, and battle in all the centuries fade into mere incidents. The recovery from this overwhelming disaster took years of patient and painful labor, but perhaps the lessons it taught will be worth all the tragedy that is now passed into the world's greatest chapter of loss.

It began in an absolutely obscure and unknown man who was shoveling coal into a furnace which supplied power for a machine shop in New York.

The man complained, one night after work, of a strange feeling in his hands. It was not pain nor numbness, but an inability to open and shut his fingers. When he went to his place of work the next morning he found that he could not pick up his shovel. He was promptly discharged and another man was doing his work before he was out of the shop.

The man afflicted with this trouble went home and told his wife. She could not see any signs of trouble and scolded him for being lazy. But before night she herself was complaining of the same inability to open and shut her fingers or use her hands in housework. These people were too poor to hire a servant and the wife did all the work of cooking, washing, and general house labor.

Both the man and his wife began to be frightened and before dark they visited an infirmary which was a part of a social settlement in the neighborhood.

When they explained their condition the young physician in charge treated it as a case of temporary muscular paralysis, gave them a prescription and sent them away.

But the strange inability to use the hands continued and the man and his wife came back to the infirmary the next morning. To their surprise, which had in it a vague but deepening sense of terror, a line of men and women was formed at the infirmary, all complaining of the same strange inability to use the hands.

As the man and his wife stood waiting in the line they compared notes with those in front and behind. In every case the symptoms were identical. There was no numbness and no pain. Every other faculty of mind and body was sound. Only the hands had ceased from their functions. They were as absolutely useless as if they had been cut off.

When the furnace stoker and his wife reached the doctor's room, after waiting in line several hours, they found, not the young physician who had prescribed for them the night before, but a room full of the greatest doctors of New York.

It would have been ludicrous, if after events had not resulted in such supreme disaster, to note the baffled faces and hear the excited dialogue of these famous physicians and surgeons. An absolutely new disease had broken into the world's catalogue within twenty-four hours. There was literally no parallel to it in all the history of disease. It baffled all diagnosis and was apparently beyond all reach of cure. And all the cases were exactly similar. There had been no paralysis, no stroke. There was no lesion of any other organ. All other faculties were intact. Perfectly rugged workingmen in the line that continued to lengthen out every hour with portentous rapidity gave the same testimony in reply to rapid-fire questions. Each reported a perfect absence of pain or discomfort. Every part of the body was doing its normal work, except the hands. They had absolutely suspended their accustomed labor. The fingers refused to hold tools. The hands were dead to the common work of the hand.

Twenty-four hours went by, and the third day after the furnace man had found himself unable to pick up his shovel all the New York papers were giving whole pages to accounts of the new and astounding disease, if disease was the right word to use. Every paper in the city was hysterical over it. For once every daily was characterized as a red-ink shriek of mingled sensationalism and terror and anger combined. One of the New York dailies contained a front page editorial in letters an inch long demanding that Congress suspend all other business and that the powers of the entire nation be centered upon some solution for what promised to be, if something did not stop it, the greatest human tragedy since the world began.

And indeed the editorial spoke even more prophetically than the gifted editor could possibly imagine. At the end of another twenty-four hours all the people of New York suddenly realized with

RELIEF FOR THE WAR SUFFERERS

$3,000 MORE GOES TO AID THE NEEDY, MAKING $21,250, THE TOTAL SENT FOR RELIEF WORK. THE PRESIDENT OF ROBERT COLLEGE AND THE WIFE OF THE AMERICAN AMBASSADOR APPEAL FOR SPECIAL RELIEF FUNDS

JUST before starting on the trip into Western Macedonia, which he is now making with Mr. Atanasoff, Pastor Furnajieff, writing from Sofia, said: "As the work progresses, there looms before us a most appalling condition. The district of Adrianople is almost like a desert. The few trees there were in the fields have been cut down by the soldiers for fires. The villages are almost all devastated, and the farmers have been able to do no plowing and sowing, so that there will be scant harvest, if any, in this district next summer. That means famine, starvation and death on a large scale, unless relief be forthcoming. The people are in terrible dread at the prospects and pathetic appeals reach us every day. It is difficult to throw away these pitiful letters or to turn the pleading applicants from our doors. It is not possible to help all, but who can turn away a desperate mother begging for bread in order to keep her family of little children alive and hoping desperately all the while that to-morrow will bring word from the husband and father who has been missing for a month or more?

"The statistics given us by the minister of the interior are helping us wonderfully in locating the most urgent need. In all of the medium-sized cities there are from 150 to 850 families who are entirely dependent on relief funds.

"The treasurer of the committee forwarded the other day 500 sacks of flour to the vicinity of Koumanovo. This provision was voted by the committee for the distribution by the Rev. Theo. T. Holway, who is looking after that district. Mr. Atanasoff and myself leave to-morrow for western Macedonia to continue the distribution of relief. This time we are better prepared than before, but even then our aid is like a drop in a bucket. Still, we are thankful that we are able to do even this much and that so many earnest hearts will bless the kind friends in America for the donations in the name of the Master of us all."

From the Balkan Relief Fund this week $3,000 is being forwarded to the front. Two thousand of this will go to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD Relief Committee at Sofia, and $1,000 will be forwarded to Rev. W. W. Peet, the Bible Society agent in charge of the American Bible House at Constantinople. This last contribution goes in response to the following letter from Dr. Charles F. Gates, president of Robert College, Constantinople:

"I am sending to you an appeal drawn up by Mrs. Rockhill, the wife of the American ambassador, in behalf of two ladies who heroically cared for the cholera patients at San Stefano. One of them herself contracted the disease, and they have spent all their own means in caring for these neglected soldiers. I hope that some Americans will find it in their hearts to help provide for these women.

"At the same time I should like to ask if your paper cannot offer some aid to the refugees and the suffering peoples in Turkey. Two hundred thousand people have fled from their homes in Macedonia and are scattered over Asia Minor. The severest cold and snow of the winter have come on now, and these people will die by the thousands if help does not reach them soon.

"Through the Americans scattered over the country we are giving food, clothing and fuel, and caring for the sick, but our funds are giving out, and we shall soon be obliged to give up the work and see these people perish unless more money comes to us.

"In the name of humanity will not the Americans help them? The Turks have been touched by the sympathy and aid already given to their sufferers by Americans, 'who have no interest except a humane one.' I hope that the work will not be allowed to fail for lack of funds. We ought to help these sufferers at least two months more.

"The misery and suffering of this war have been awful. The numbers of widows and orphans are very great. The Americans helped the Armenians when their bread-winners were cut off, and I hope that they will now help the Turks in a similar condition. It is not a time to appoint blame, it is a time to help save life. In such work Americans have always been generous."

Mrs. Rockhill's statement reads as follows: "On November 18, during the great battle of Chatalja, a little party of Americans endeavored to reach the line of battle in an automobile, but, being turned back by sentries, returned to Constantinople by another road, which led them through the village of San Stefano, where they found a very different battle in progress, a battle with that dread disease, the scourge of all Eastern countries—cholera.

"San Stefano in summer is a gay little seaside resort on the Sea of Marmora, some seven miles from Constantinople, and is chiefly inhabited by foreigners, some making it their permanent home. On November 18, however, the population had mostly fled to the city, and the streets, the open squares, the dooryards, and the now famous Greek School, were filled with terrible cholera-stricken figures; the dead lying unburied as they fell by hundreds; the dying moaning for help; those able still to move about trying vainly to draw water from the wells to assuage their burning thirst.

"San Stefano had become a cholera camp, and there the stricken men from the army, fighting desperately at Chatalja, were sent by train loads. But in the strain and stress of the days of battle, when all eyes were turned toward the front and the terrible danger from cholera had not yet been realized, the camp was still unorganized, and no help was ready for the miserable suffering hundreds left there by the wayside.

"Only two old ladies! Miss Alt and her friend, Mrs. Schneider, residents of San Stefano, had stuck to their posts, and devoting all of their small savings to the task, were making soup and feeding and caring as best they could for the soldiers stricken down with this terrible disease. These two old ladies, both nearly seventy, had been working there alone, quietly, careless of self, for several days, when the little party in the automobile discovered them at their wonderful labor, and for many weeks more, even after a sort of 'field cholera hospital' was started at the Greek School and others were there to bear the burden, they continued their self-sacrificing beautiful work, shunning recognition, wishing no thanks, working for suffering humanity in its most repellent form.

"Miss Alt is now recovering from an attack of cholera; both ladies are much broken in health by their terrible days at San Stefano cholera camp, and both are in straitened circumstances.

"We, the undersigned, who have seen and known these ladies and their wonderful self-forgetful heroism and divine pity, therefore ask you, whose hearts may have been touched by their labors, to join us in offering to them a tribute of the respect and admiration of America.

"(Signed) Edith Rockhill, American Embassy; Alice Blight Lowther, British Embassy; Hoffman Philip, American Embassy; C. F. Gates, LL.D., President, Robert College; Mary Mills Patrick, Ph.D., President, American College for Girls, Constantinople; Clyde S. Ford, Major, Medical Corps, United States Army."

The remittance to Mr. Peet will be accompanied by instructions to devote such a portion of the amount as Dr. Gates and the signers of the appeal shall deem wise to the relief of these devoted old ladies. A report on the expenditure of this $1,000 will appear in a later issue.

A PILLOW BECOMES A PILLAR*

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON BY DR AND MRS. WILBUR F. CRAFTS

IN EVERY part of Palestine, along the roadside and in the fields, particularly on the hilltops, may be seen piles of stones, usually not over three feet high. If we should question a native about them, he would tell us that they are "memorial stones" set up in recognition of some special providence of God. If we should examine the stones closely we would discover that they are blackened with oil, which indicates their sacredness, as they had been anointed. These stone heaps actually became objects of worship so common that Moses issued edicts against them. (Lev. 26: 1; Deut. 16: 22.)

But in the days of Jacob the custom had not been so abused, and it was a meritorious thing for him to do. It was more than meritorious, because it was the outcome of a marvelous experience which had brought him into the very presence of God. That experience, for lack of a better term, has been called "a dream," "a vision." Psychologists of the present day would tell us that it was an instance of God speaking to the "subliminal self," while the powers of the body were dormant. There is a grand thought in the idea that the soul does not sleep any more than God—that it neither slumbers nor sleeps; that it is God's likeness in us. And so God spoke to Jacob.

Did God speak to Jacob because he was such a good man? No, for Jacob was a fugitive from justice. Had he not hurried away from home he would have been punished, if not murdered, for stealing his brother's birthright. God found him along the way leading from his home in Beersheba to far-away Haran, a road which his grandfather Abraham had traversed when he came from Haran to Beersheba. It was a journey of about five hundred miles. His mother, Rebekah, had been the only one to give Jacob a send-off, and she had done it in a frenzy, telling him to flee for his life! But she did not know that it was the last time she would ever see him.

Why did God speak to Jacob if he was not a good man? In a very human way, we will say God had to take men as he found them. If it had been God's plan to speak only to perfect men, he certainly never would have held converse with any man. The soul of the erring Jacob was in such a state that God could speak to him. The great Pascal said, "Despair is that condition into which the Spirit of God drives a man when only the best is possible." Jacob's journey was so long that he must have been more than one night on the way, but on one of those nights God spoke to him, saying, "Behold, I am with thee, and will keep thee whithersoever thou goest, and will bring thee again into this land; for I will not leave thee until I have done that which I have spoken to thee of." God was referring to the promise he made that the land should belong to Abraham and his descendants, one of whom was Jacob—one of the so-called "patriarchs." Jacob's consciousness of the presence of God streamed through his outer self as sunlight forces itself through cracks into a dark room, and Jacob's half-awake body seemed to get a glimpse of heaven, with angels ascending and descending. The castellated hills by which he was surrounded entered into his semi-consciousness and became a ladder reaching from earth to heaven. When Jacob heard God speak, his body awoke, and he was afraid. Then he was reassured by his soul and said, "God is here." And he rose up early in the morning and took his pillow of stones and made of them a memorial pillar. The hardness of the pillow made the pillar all the more enduring. And Jacob named the place where God had held converse with him "Bethel," meaning "House of God." It was holy ground. Then he dedicated the pillar to God by pouring oil upon it, and sealing the transaction with a vow that he would serve God by giving to him a tenth part of all he should ever possess of this world's goods. But Jacob knew and acknowledged that he could never possess anything in his own right, for he said, "Of all thou givest me, I will surely give the tenth to thee." And Jacob went on his way rejoicing, for he had come into an enlarged experience; first there was enlarged space. Jacob had gotten away from the limitations of home.

JACOB'S DREAM

From a steel engraving taken from a Dutch Bible printed in 1720

Dr. Joseph Parker has said: "Enlargement of space has a wonderful influence upon mind and spirit of every degree and quality. Go abroad, climb the hill, and leave your sorrow there. Take in the great revelation of space, and know that God's government is no local incident or trifle which the human hand can take up and manage and dispose of. . . . Enlarging space never goes alone; it brings with it enlarging life. . . . The great stimulating thought is this: that there is more than is visible to the naked and most wakeful eye. There ought to be; we have all lost friends enough to make a heaven. . . . Enlarging space brings enlarging life; an enlarging life brings an enlarging altar. Jacob had been reared in the faith that God was to be worshiped in definite and specified localities. . . . See how the greater truth dawns upon his opening mind. 'Surely the Lord is in this place.' And that is the very end of our spiritual education, to find God everywhere; never to open a rosebud without finding God; never to see the day whitening the eastern sky without seeing the coming of the King's brightness; to feel that every place is praying-ground; to renounce the idea of partial and official consecration and stand in a universe every particle of which is blessed and consecrated by the presence of the infinite Creator."

The idea of raising an altar may appeal to us, but we cannot do it in quite the way that Jacob did, neither can we teach others to do it that way. Let us think of milestones instead of memorial stones, and then follow the suggestions given by W. E. Huntington as follows:

"Draw a straight line to represent an ideal life-journey of three score and ten years of age. Draw at the proper distance for ten years of age the representation of the marble milestone—marble, because of childhood purity; for this is the age when responsibility begins. Under the marble milestone draw a Bible as a guide in the straight road, to be taken up by the pilgrim child as it passes this boundary. At the proper distance for twenty-five years of age represent the silver milestone—clear, ringing life at this age as solid and shining in virtue as silver. Beneath it represent a sword—the sword of the Spirit, which must now be wielded. At the proper distance on the line for sixty years of age, draw the golden milestone; under it a pen, golden, because it is the harvest time; a pen for writing the record of life upon a scroll at the end of the line to indicate that life is finished, and its record of good deeds left for others to read as they journey. Better than a gravestone."

Jacob came at length to Haran, and was received with love and kindness by his uncle Laban. After twenty years' residence there, it was said of Jacob, "And the man increased exceedingly, and had much cattle, and maid servants, and men servants, and camels and asses." (Gen. 30: 43.) We do not read anywhere in the Bible that Jacob gave a tenth of all he possessed to the Lord as he had promised. And so it is to be feared that he either forgot about it, or disregarded his vow. It would be interesting for us to know just what he did do about that promise to the Lord. But it is more important that we should look at ourselves and at others and see how promises to God are being kept or broken. Boys and girls become members of the Sunday school. Possibly they do not sign a contract that they will be present every Sunday and bring an offering for the Lord's work, but they know they are under obligation to their teachers and to God to do these things. But some of them come when they please, allowing such things as a walk in the park, an excursion to the country, or an automobile ride to prevent their attendance at the Sunday school. Some scholars have even been known to spend their Sunday-school money. They should remember that God sees them and is grieved by their shortcomings.

Let all who belong to the Christian Endeavor Society and the Epworth League and Young People's Union read again the promises they have made "to strive to do whatever the Lord Jesus would have them do; to make it the rule of life to pray and read the Bible every day; to attend all —WILL YOU please explain what is the best way to conduct a contest in a Sunday school, or would you advise a contest?"—W. E. C., Paragould, Ark.

A contest is a good thing because it is a means of character training. One young girl said: "I was naturally selfish, but through the development of character acquired through contests, I have learned for the first time what it is to set self aside for the higher and better living." This must be so, for one must learn to graciously congratulate the successful contestants and bear defeat with a smiling face. In preparation for the contest, young people are brought to consider great themes in connection with temperance and reform, and while they are studying the arguments to be presented they are in the choice company of authors, patriots and high thinkers, and they must be greatly influenced for good by their choice company. It is said that "thousands of boys who began in contests are to-day prominent workers for temperance and other reforms, and many have developed into teachers, preachers and platform orators." The contest is also a means of education for the people who come to listen. Many seeds have been thus sown that will give to the world better living, and more eager doing of the world's great work for betterment. It would not be possible for us to give full details for arranging contests. A committee should be formed to receive applicants for contest speakers, and also to make selections for them to learn. There should also be an executive committee to attend to details of securing a hall, if the Sunday school or church is not used. It should also be their duty to properly advertise the contest by posters and handbills. An admittance fee should be charged to meet the expense of the contest, and frequently a large amount has been secured for the Sunday school treasury in this way. Mrs. Adelia E. Carman, 696 Winthrop Avenue, Chicago, is the national superintendent of the W. C. T. U. department of medal contests. It would be well to write to her for further information.

The Greek Assassination

AT THE height of Greece's triumph over her ancient oppressor, King George I lies dead by the hand of an assassin. His slayer is an anarchist who has led a miserable existence and is believed now to be weak-minded, though he was for a time an instructor in the medical department of the University of Athens. There seems to have been no plot involving others. As a nation, the Greeks were loyal to their king, who had reigned over them half a century. On March 18, 1863, he was chosen by the great Powers of Europe to the Grecian throne, and by a strange coincidence, on the same date fifty years later, he fell a victim, shot through the heart as he was walking unguarded through the streets of Salonica, which his victorious army had wrested from the Turks.

Those fifty years have contributed a startling roll of regicidal crimes, some successful, others abortive. In that gloomy list of assassinations actually accomplished, which now forms a part of the history of many nations, we find the names of Abraham Lincoln, Prince Michel of Servia, Marshal Prim of Spain, Sultan Abdul Aziz, Czar Alexander II, James A. Garfield, President Carnot of France, Premier Stambuloff of Russia, Shah Nasr-ed-Din of Persia, Premier Cánovas of Spain, Presidents Borda of Uruguay and Barrios of Guatemala, Empress Elizabeth of Austria, King Humbert of Italy, William McKinley, King Alexander and Queen Draga of Servia, General Bobrikoff of Finland, Grand Duke Sergius and Minister von Plehve of Russia, King Carlos and Prince Philip of Portugal, Premier Stolypin of Russia, Premier Canalejas of Spain, President Araujo of Salvador, and President Madero and Vice-President Suarez of Mexico. To add to these the attempts which failed would more than double the number.

Human skill has proved powerless to guard effectively against such crimes. Our own national experience has shown that even the love and admiration of a loyal people cannot give immunity from secret attack. King George was a popular monarch, whose conservative rule had safely guided Greece through various important crises. His eldest son, Crown Prince Constantine, comes to the throne at a critical juncture, when the nation needs at its head a ruler who will carry out King George's policies and maintain the relations which he established with the Balkan allies. On these relations, the development of Greece in the immediate future must largely depend. Constantine, some five years ago, had a serious difference with the Greek army officers on certain questions of military discipline; but this has now been apparently forgotten, and his brilliant conduct in the present war has fully reinstated him in popularity. His pledge to carry out the conservative policy of his father has been received with general satisfaction.

The Balkan Relief Work

IN THE great field of practical Christian service, the readers of this journal have long borne an active part. It has been our pleasure to know this by personal co-operation with them in the splendid campaigns they have carried out for the saving of life and the alleviation of human suffering in many lands during times of war, pestilence and famine. Our Grand Army of Christian Aid is one which recognizes no territorial limitations, nor racial distinctions, nor even creeds. It is enough to know that the objects of their solicitude are their fellow-beings and that they are in urgent need. When the appeal came from the Balkans, in behalf of the destitute widows and orphans and the wounded, we rejoiced over the prompt response, showing that the same Christlike spirit of sympathy and helpfulness which in past campaigns had succored Russia, China, India, Japan, Finland, Italy, and Cuba, and which helped multitudes of "God's poor" in our own land, was still dominant in the hearts of the readers of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD.

Over $20,000 have now been sent to our relief committee in Sofia, which has been used over a very extensive field and has been the means of saving many lives and relieving incalculable suffering. But the latest developments in the war reveal the fact that the greatest center of relief work in the immediate future is in Asia Minor, where, according to an appeal from Mrs. Rockhill, wife of the American ambassador (which we print on another page), 200,000 fugitives from European Turkey are now scattered, in utter destitution, facing death from hunger, cholera and exposure. The American missionaries have been giving food, clothing and fuel until their funds have become exhausted and they are now sending a loud call to us to "come over and help" those homeless exiles from Macedonia. They ask this in the name of Christ and humanity. That the sufferers are Turks, who now appeal to Christian generosity, should make it all the more desirable that we should help them. Such aid would be, in a very emphatic fashion, "heaping coals of fire" on the heads of those who hitherto have been the enemies of the Christian faith. Read the appeal and then send in your gift. "Love your enemies," said the Master, and if we deal kindly with those who have "despitefully used" the Christians, we may, under divine blessing, help to break down the walls of infidelity in Moslem hearts, and win them to Christ. Let us do our part. Sow the seed in helpful deeds now, and look to God for the harvest!

Recognizing the Chinese Republic

THE statement that President Wilson was about to recognize officially the Republic of China followed hard upon the announcement of the withdrawal of the United States from the "six-power group" formed to negotiate a large loan to the new republic and in a measure supervise its expenditure. These decisions of the new administration entail an absolute reversal of the policy toward China which was inaugurated by John Hay in 1900. Under that "open door" agreement, as it was called, the United States held equal authority with Great Britain, Japan, Germany, France and Russia in everything that affected the international relations of the Flowery Kingdom. It was an expansion of this co-operative scheme made by Philander C. Knox that received the unjust reproach implied in the name "dollar diplomacy," and which is now abandoned for a policy of complete indivduality. John Hay's action played a large part in the preservation of the independence and territorial integrity of China. It redounded to the credit of our government and secured for our commercial enterprises a wider recognition in China than they had ever before been accorded. To enlarge that commercial field still further Secretary Knox, at the invitation of Germany, it is believed, pledged the Taft administration to the support of those European governments which had concerned themselves officially with the negotiations of bankers for the proposed loan. He induced American bankers to subscribe part of the loan and was roundly abused in some quarters for thus mixing government policies and outside business. Hence the phrase, "

Though the Knox proposal was but a variatio
the policy which has been successfully followec
British administrations for many years, Presic

From the viewpoint of the average American t is wisdom, especially as the bankers themselves duced only complications and vexations. Both g ernment and business interests are well out of mentally we are free of Chinese responsibility, l morally we are bound to our utmost to aid the re venated nation. It is to be hoped that our bank will see their way clear to aid China on a straig business basis free from all government control

President Wilson evidently intends that his a

"If Any of You Lack Wisdom"

THERE is a very direct and emphatic promise the first chapter of James, which has been fou true many times in the experience of countle Christians: "If any of you lack wisdom, let hi ask of God, that giveth to all men liberally, and u braideth not; and it shall be given him."

It has been often said that God has a plan f every life. If this is true then it is also true th he has a plan for every year, for every week, f every day. Ordinarily he expects us, in deciding t practical problems of life, to use our own judgmen our own brains. He has given us brains for th purpose and he wants us to use them. But que tions frequently arise that baffle the powers of ou brains; we "lack wisdom." We have not the ad quate equipment for the performing of the ment feat called for. The problem is too great for us.

Then the gracious suggestion is made, the ver positive offer, that if we bring that hard problem t God he will solve it for us. He will send the an swer so plainly that we shall be sure the answer i right. Such an experience is very beautiful, ver comforting, very strengthening. It is like the su breaking suddenly through the fog when we are lost
We do not even know in what direction the sun wil appear; we do not know at what minute the fo will break. Suddenly it happens; the fog is gon and there is the blazing sun.

So God sends the gift of heavenly wisdom to u when we need it, and when we ask him in faith fo
it. Sometimes he directs our minds as we ponde the problem. But this kind of deliverance is some thing different. It comes when we have taken ou minds off the problem and fastened them upon him
We have given up the riddle; we stop puzzling over it; we stop looking at it, and look straight at him
Suddenly we see him—and then everything is clear

Experiences like this are to the Christian an absolutely undeniable proof of the reality of hi faith. He knows he has heard the voice of God and seen a light from him just as really as he knows he beholds the sun when the mists have cleared away

It must be remembered that this "wisdom which is from above" comes only in answer to faith. The man who doubts simply cannot receive it: "Let not that man think he shall receive anything from the Lord." The answer comes to the man who asks "in faith, nothing wavering." And it is necessary to keep on believing after the answer has come as well as before. Doubt will put us back in the fog again.
Trust the answer; act on it; keep acting on it. God is faithful and cannot deny himself. So shall we know the delights and the triumphs of "walking in the light."

Storm Kills One Hundred

ON THE evening of March 13 and morning of the 14th, a fearful storm swept the Southern States, killing scores of people and destroying millions of dollars' worth property. The storm in the Middle West and thwestern States took the form of a cyclone ich plowed paths through the forests, threw over l carried away buildings and destroyed many s. The people of the South suffered most. Government Protects Migratory Birds

ONE of the last things done at the final session of the last Congress was to pass the Agricultral Appropriation Bill, carrying the amendment Senator McLean to protect migratory birds. his measure will supplant State game laws as to rds which in their annual northern and southern sits pass from one State to another. The State ws have been insufficient or imperfectly enrced, and the slaughter of game and song birds s well has been merciless. Many species have bome extinct, and the annihilation of the rest was hreatened by the destruction of the gun and net. was seen that in proportion to the slaughter of he birds there was a corresponding increase in the umber of insects and consequent destruction of rops. It having been proven that birds are by all dds the worst enemies the insects have, the farmer rom self-defense joined with the Audubon Societies in advocating this Federal protection of the irds to save the crops and continue the music of he forest and field. The farmers and the bird vers began this fight for protection in the Conress of 1904, and it has been bitterly conested by the sportsmen of the various States until the victory came in the passage of the bill made a law by the signature of President Taft. This law gives the Department of Agriculture the authority to fix the closed seasons when it will be unlawful to kill or capture migratory birds, but does not interfere with the State laws for the protection of nonmigratory game birds. The story of life is that everything has its enemy: the crop the insect, the insect the bird, the bird the hunter. The same is true in the moral and spiritual as well as in the natural world. Danger and death are to be watched for and guarded against. The shelter the Federal Government gives in the new law and the analogy in the spiritual world suggest the words of the wise man:

Deliver thyself as a roe from the hand of the hunter, and as a bird from the hand of the fowler. (Prov. 6: 5.)

France Increases Teachers' Pay

THE teachers in the national schools of France have long been contending for an increase in the scale of salaries, and at their Chambéry Congress demanded rises that would have entailed an expenditure of $8,000,000. Notwithstanding the size of the budget, the Chamber of Deputies has now voted $11,200,000 to provide general increases in teachers' salaries and bonuses for the teachers holding higher educational certificates. What a just thing to do for a class of persons whose service is beyond all material value! What a splendid example to set to the other nations of the earth! It is a sad commentary on the failure to weigh things in their proper relation that those who render the highest service to humanity should receive the smallest compensation. The teacher and preacher who minister to the intellectual and spiritual nature each have an average salary of a little more than a half of a thousand dollars a year. The upkeep of the high-priced, luxurious automobile such as we see in our city streets and the expert to run it would pay the average salary of the teacher and minister. Fortunately the scale of wages is advancing, and there is better provision being made in pensions for disabled and aged teachers and preachers. With reference to this kind of compensation, Christ said:

The laborer is worthy of his hire. (Luke 10: 7.)

The First Photograph Ever Taken of the Interstate Commerce Commission in Session

AFTER the retirement of Franklin K. Lane from the Commerce Court to become secretary of the interior, and the appointment of John H. Marble to take his place, this important commission was photographed for the first time. The commission is one of the most powerful appointed by the United States Government and in many respects ranks next to the Supreme Court in importance. Under its direction the troublesome railway problems of this country must be worked out in the near future. A large appropriation was made at the last Congress for the furtherance of the activities of the commission. The photograph shows the commissioners seated in the court room. From left to right they are: Balthazar H. Meyer, James S. Harlan, Judson C. Clements, Edgar E. Clark, chairman; Charles A. Prouty, C. C. McChord and John H. Marble.

Infantile Paralysis Germ Identified

BEFORE a large audience of physicians and surgeons at Johns Hopkins Hospital on the evening of March 14 Dr. Flexner of the Rockefeller Institute, New York, announced that he had been able to identify and cultivate the germ of infantile paralysis, the general characteristics of which he had previously announced. The professor illustrated his statements with micro-photographs of the spinal cord and the organism that caused the infantile paralysis. This disease germ is one of the minutest ever discovered. It appeared in the enlarged photograph in a chain-like form in a wavy line. Dr. Flexner pointed out that the advantage of identification of the germ lies in the probability that with the knowledge of it gained by his earlier experimentation, the discovery of a serum that will destroy it will soon be found. This, with the results likely to follow, is one of the most blessed scientific medical discoveries of modern times. The little children of our country and of the world have been mowed down by the millions by this disease. The physical cures are the result of Christ and of his civilization, and are the type of his mastery over sin and death thus described:

I am come that they might have life, and that they might have it more abundantly. (John 10: 10.)

Sky-Rocket Rider Fails

RODMAN LAW, the celebrated steeple-climber and parachute jumper, undertook to ride on a skyrocket the other day from Jersey City to Elizabeth, N. J., a distance of twelve miles. The skyrocket did not go up as expected, but he came down, and that he did not suffer the fate of his steel chariot is a marvel. The rocket stick was four inches square and twenty feet long. To this was attached a cylinder two feet in diameter and six feet long containing the enormous charge of powder. Directly above this cylinder there was another three feet in diameter and four feet long, separated from the lower by a steel plate. Upon this plate were several layers of sand and sawdust. Law crawled into the top of the upper cylinder as a carriage and took a seat there with his parachute fastened to his belt. At the signal the fuse was lighted. Suddenly there was a series of short, staccato explosions. Then an enormous cloud of smoke rose skyward, while an immense sheet of flame burst out of the cylinder in which the powder was stored, blowing it to pieces. Several hundred witnesses looked in vain to see Law shoot aloft on his journey to Elizabeth, but no rocket appeared. There was another explosion of powder 15 feet away. Beside the burning platform Law was found on his back in the mud unconscious. He was wrapped in a blanket and carried to the office of a manufactory near by, where he soon revived, and was able to be taken home in an automobile. Human life is so precious that the laws of God and man safeguard it against destruction by self or others. The reckless risk of life for money or fame is to be discouraged and condemned. There are perils to be risked for principle, for the welfare of men and the establishment of the kingdom of God, and what would otherwise be counted as wicked rashness becomes the most commendable heroism. Such was the courage of David in risking his life.

For he did put his life in his hand, and slew the Philistine. (I Sam. 19: 5.)

Our New Pearl Islands

OFFICIAL surveys, the result of which have just been made public, establish the fact that the Pacific islands of Tortola and Tortolita are within the three-mile limit, and consequently in the Canal Zone. Both have rich pearl fisheries, and the United States Government is enriched by their possession. When Seward bought Alaska, many thought it was not worth having as a gift. It turned out to be an empire not only in size, but in resources. Our government is rich in the channel uniting the oceans, but richest in the spirit of the men who can plan and execute such a gigantic undertaking. The spirit and character of the people are the choicest pearls a nation can have. The good book thus puts righteous character above precious jewels:

She is more precious than rubies: and all the things thou canst desire are not to be compared unto her. (Prov. 3: 15.)

THE WESTERN FLOOD DISASTER

A GREAT NATIONAL CALAMITY AND AN URGENT CALL TO HELP THE SUFFERERS

The Flood Waters of the Miami River Engulfing an Ohio Town

AS THIS edition of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD is being issued, the whole country is stunned by the news of the terrible flood disasters in the Middle Western States. Ohio and Indiana have been the heaviest sufferers, although Nebraska and several other States have also passed under the rod of affliction. At this writing the overflowing rivers and creeks are inundating vast sections of country. The floods have already destroyed many thousands of dwellings in towns and villages, claiming an appalling number of human victims.

In Dayton, Ohio, the whole business section and miles of residential blocks have been wholly or partially destroyed and some 600 persons are reported to have perished, while anywhere from 50,000 to 100,000 are still in imminent danger. In Columbus, Ohio, a thousand deaths by the floods are reported, while in Zanesville, Chillicothe, Piqua, Akron, Hamilton and Troy, Ohio, and Wabash and Peru, Ind., and several other towns and cities, numbers of victims have been claimed by the floods and the death roll is steadily growing. Up to the present time it seems probable that in Ohio alone some 4,000 human beings have perished as the result of this sudden disaster.

Following are estimates of the dead in the cities of Ohio and Indiana up to March 28:

Dayton, Ohio (estimated about)	600
Piqua, Ohio	50
Columbus, Ohio (estimated)	600 to 1,000
Zanesville, Ohio	150
Hamilton, Ohio	50
Troy, Ohio	25
Middletown, Ohio	30
Massillon, Ohio	5
Chillicothe, Ohio (estimated)	25
Delaware, Ohio	50
Sidney, Ohio	50
Tiffin, Ohio	10
Fremont, Ohio	11
Scattering, Ohio (estimated)	200
Peru, Ind	60
Brookfield, Ind	10

The destitute and homeless are estimated at 350,000, and loss to property at $50,000,000. The latter includes railroads, buildings, merchandise, farm stock, etc.

The unfortunate people of Dayton seem to have suffered the greatest burden of the disaster. Fires broke out after the storm struck the city, and are still raging. Thousands of the people have had no food, nor drinking water, nor lights, nor heat for days, and no communication by telephone or otherwise with the rest of the world; but there are strong hopes that the efforts now being made to reach them with help will be successful soon. Seventy thousand persons are still marooned in semi-submerged homes and business places, and cannot be reached to be helped until the waters subside. The property loss in Dayton, through flood and fire, is estimated at $25,000,000.

The whole nation has been stirred by the calamity in the West. THE CHRISTIAN HERALD appeals to its readers to join the movement for rescue and relief as soon as they receive this number of the paper. It is our own flesh and blood, our brothers and sisters, for whom we are pleading—not strangers many thousands of miles away. By prompt action now, you may be the means of doing great good and of saving human life.

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD'S first carload of food supplies for the Ohio sufferers was started west from New York at 10 P.M. on March 27, within twenty-four hours after the real situation had become known. It goes via the New York Central Railroad, which generously gave free transportation, and the food should be in the hands of the sufferers before this reaches the reader's eye. This should be followed speedily by other consignments in order that the quickest and most effective relief may be afforded. This was what our first relief car carried:

50 cases of salmon.
100 cases of lentils.
100 cases of tomatoes.
100 barrels of Pilot Biscuit.
10 extra cases of lentils donated by Northern Maine Packing Company.

Six cars and a Pullman composed the train, which was organized by the National Cash Register Company, whose New York representative, Mr. T. J. Watson, entered vigorously into the spirit of the relief work. Several nurses and doctors were carried on the train, together with THE CHRISTIAN HERALD'S special representative, Mr. John Kabel, who, being a native of Dayton and thoroughly familiar with the stricken city, is better equipped for such a mission than a stranger could possibly be.

"Intense Misery!" This striking expression was used by a great daily newspaper in describing the suffering caused by the Western floods. Reader, can you think what that means: "Intense misery"—misery of hunger and cold and thirst, added to the misery of fear and grief, and the misery of ugly wounds! Friends lost, home destroyed, all the possessions accumulated by years of hard and patient toil swept away—who is not eager to help rebuild those lost hopes and bring comfort to those who are in need?

It may be that this appeal will fall into the hands of many who are themselves among the sufferers, for there is no way of finding or making distinctions in mailing the weekly edition. Hundreds of homes devastated by the flood belonged to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD Family. You who are in distress must not feel that this message is to you. But the other members of our great Family will want to hasten to your aid.

Some kinds of suffering cannot be relieved by any effort of men. No human power can bring back to life the children, the wives and husbands who are dead. Nothing can take the place of the cherished home belongings around which sweet memories have so long clustered. No one can find and set up again the homes that have been swept away. BUT THERE IS SOMETHING EVERY ONE CAN DO TO HELP. Further loss of life can be stopped; disease can be checked; wounds can be bound up; clothing can be sent; cash can be presented to the most needy; food can be supplied. Shall any sufferer remain hungry another hour, to whom your contribution might bring relief?

Here is a glorious opportunity for the churches, the Sunday schools, the men's brotherhoods, the ladies' societies, the Christian Endeavor Societies, the Epworth Leagues and Young People's Unions, the Missionary Societies, the Bible study classes, the Boy Scouts, the Boys' Brigades, the Knights of King Arthur, the Junior Endeavorers and Junior Leaguers, to do something quick and practical. No gift is too small to be used. No one is too young or too old or too busy to help in this great crusade of mercy. Address all contributions to Western Flood Relief Fund, CHRISTIAN HERALD, Bible House, New York.

Outdoor Days Are Almost Here

Porch and Porch Furniture need touching up now. Use Acme Quality Paints and make them look like new.

The days are coming fast when we can live outdoors and enjoy the summer breezes from the shade of the porch. Get ready for summer by giving the porch a new coat of paint. Touch up the porch furniture. Last summer's use has made it dingier than you realized. It is always surprising to see how different things look after being painted.

Paint not only renews, but is the best kind of protection against weather. It keeps things from going to pieces and the expense is trifling. You can do the work yourself in odd moments, and find real pleasure in doing it, if you use

FOR EVERY DAY IN THE YEAR

BY REV. J. H. JOWETT, D.D.

SUNDAY, April 6. Proverbs 6: 12-19. "These six things doth the Lord hate"; and among the six is "a false witness that speaketh lies." The hatred of the Lord implies the opposition of the Lord, and of all that is the Lord's. Every rightly constituted thing is against the liar, against him who is crooked in his ways. Nature herself is against him. "The stones of the field" are in covenant against him. "The stars in their courses fought against Sisera." "We cannot even build a house unless every stone is well and truly laid." If the stones be laid untruly it is not a house we build but a rubbish-heap. So is it with the house of our life. If a man build crookedly his calamity shall come suddenly: suddenly shall he be broken without remedy."

When a man, therefore, begins to lie he pits himself against the Almighty God. It is not a combat of man versus man, but of man versus the holy constitution of the universe. In the long run a liar cannot possibly triumph. A liar has "his part in the lake that burneth with fire," and the fire is kindled at once, and the foundations of his impious structure are even now being consumed. "Our God is a consuming fire," and all that is rotten and crooked shall surely be destroyed.

MONDAY, April 7. Genesis 28: 10-22. "Surely the Lord is in this place, and I knew it not!" That is the first time for many a day that Jacob had named the name of God. In all the dark story of his wicked intrigue the name of God is never mentioned. Jacob wanted to forget God! God would be a disturbing presence! But here he encounters him in a dream, and in the most unlikely place. He had thought that here, at any rate, he was outside God's dominion. "And he was afraid, and said, How dreadful is this place!"

Jacob had yet to learn that there is everywhere "a ladder set up on the earth, and the top of it reaches to heaven." There was a ladder from the very tent in which he wore his deceptive skin. There was a ladder from the secret place where he and his mother wove their mischievous plot. There is no corner of earth which is cut away from the divine vigilance. God gets at us everywhere. Everywhere is the "ladder set up on the earth, and the top of it reaches to heaven."

But there is a merciful side to all this. If the ladder be everywhere, and God can get at us, then also everywhere we can get at God. There are "ascending angels" who will carry our confessions, our prayers, and our sighs to the heart of the eternally gracious God.

TUESDAY, April 8. Psalm 91: 1-12. "He that dwelleth in the seeret place of the Most High." I read a sentence the other day in which a very powerful modern writer describes a certain woman as "having God on her visiting list." We may recoil from the phrase, but it very vitally describes a very awful commonplace. Countless thousands have God on their visiting lists. They pay him courtesy-calls, and between the calls he is forgotten. Perhaps the call is paid once a week, in the social function of worship. Perhaps it is paid more rarely, like calls between comparative strangers. How great the contrast between a caller and one who dwells in the secret place! It is the difference between a flirt and a "homebird," between one who flits about on a score of fancies and one who settles down in the solid satisfaction of a supreme affection.

"Shall abide under the shadow of the Almighty." Such is the reward of the "homebird," the settled friend of the Lord. The shadow of the Lord shall rest upon him continually. I sometimes read of the President being "shadowed" by protective police. In an infinitely more real and intimate sense the soul that dwells in "the secret place" is shadowed by the sleepless grace and love of God. Such souls are never out of his sight. "A thousand shall fall at thy side and ten thousand at thy right hand, but it shall not come nigh thee."

WEDNESDAY, April 9. Isaiah 41: 5-14. "Fear not, thou worm Jacob, I will make thee a threshing instrument with teeth." Could any two things be in greater contrast than a worm and an instrument with teeth? The worm is delicate, bruised by a stone, crushed beneath a passing wheel: an instrument with teeth can break and not be broken: it can grave its mark upon the rock. And the mighty God can convert the one into the other. He can take a man or a nation, who has all the impotence of the worm, and by the invigoration of his own Spirit he can endow them with strength by which they will leave a noble mark upon the history of their time. Their character shall be like an instrument with iron teeth, and shall grave itself deep in the affairs of men.

And so the "worm" may take heart. The mighty God can make us stronger than our circumstances. We can bend them all to our good. In God's strength we can make them all pay tribute to our souls. We can even take hold of a black disappointment, break it open, and extract some jewel of grace. When God gives us wills like iron we can cut through difficulties as the iron share through toughest soil. "I will make thee," saith the Lord: "and shall he not do it?"

THURSDAY, April 10. Genesis 35: 1-7. It is a blessed thing to revisit our early altars. It is good to return to the haunts of early vision. Places and things have their sanctifying influences and can recall us to lost experiences. I know a man to whom the scent of a white, wild rose is always a call to prayer. I know another to whom Grasmere is always the window of holy vision. Sometimes a particular pew in a particular church can throw the heavens open, and we see the Son of God. The old Sunday school has sometimes taken an old man back to his childhood and back to his God. So I do not wonder that God led Jacob back to Bethel, and that there he reconsecrated himself to the Lord.

It is a revelation of the loving-kindness of God that we have all these helps to the recovery of past experiences. Let us use them with reverence. And in our early days let us make them. Let us build altars of communion which in later life we shall love to revisit. Let us make our early home "the house of God and the gate of heaven." Let us multiply deeds of service which will make countless places fragrant for all our after years. Happy is the man who can walk through his yesterdays and find altars whose fires are not yet cold.

FRIDAY, April 11. Psalm 62. Here are two symbols by which the psalmist describes the confidence of the righteous. "He only is my rock." Only yesterday I had the shelter of a great rock on a storm-swept mountain side. The wind tore along the heights, driving the rain like hail, but in the opening of the rock our shelter was complete.

Rock of ages, cleft for me,
Let me hide myself in thee.

And the second symbol is this: "He is my high place." The high place is the home of the chamois, out of reach of the arrow. "Flee as a bird to your mountain!" Get beyond the hunter's range! Our security is found in loftiness. "I will set him on high because he hath known my name." It is our unutterable privilege to live "in the heavenly places in Christ Jesus." Such is the confidence of the righteous.

In this Psalm there is also another pair of symbols describing the futility of the wicked. The wicked is "as a bowing wall." The wall is out of perpendicular, out of conformity with the truth of the plumbline, and it will assuredly topple into ruin. So is it with the wicked; he is building awry, and he will fall into moral disaster. He is also "as a tottering fence." The wind and the rain dislodge the fence, it rots at its foundations, and one day it lies prone upon the ground.

Contrast the "bowing wall" with the "rock," and "the tottering fence" with "the high place"!

SATURDAY, April 12. Joshua 24: 22-28. "The Lord our God will we serve, and his voiee will we obey." Here was a definite decision. Our peril is that we spend our life in wavering and we never decide. We are like a jury which is always hearing evidence and never gives a verdict. We do much thinking but we never make up our minds. Life has no crisis, no culmination.

Now people who never decide spend their days in hoping to do so. But this kind of life becomes a vagrancy and not a noble and illumined crusade. We drift through our days, we do not steer, and we never arrive at any rich and stately haven.

It is therefore vitally wise to "make a vow unto the Lord." It is good to pull our loose thinkings together and to "gird up the loins of the mind." Let a man, at some definite place, and at some definite moment, make the supreme choice of his life. Let it stand out in his experience as a mountain peak from the plain. And let the act abide in his retrospect as the most momentous choice in his life.

These Daily Meditations will appear in each issue through 1913.

You never have tasted such apple dumplings as these Crust so flaky that it melts in your mouth.

Flavor that recalls the finest creamery butter.

Such lightness and delicacy that you give not a thought to the digestibility.

Crisco! That's why! If there is one place more than another where this pure vegetable shortening clearly demonstrates its superiority, it is in such pastry as apple dumplings; but it is just as satisfactory for making cake, biscuits, bread, and for frying doughnuts, croquettes, potatoes, etc.

So try this recipe and you will have apple dumplings that are apple dumplings:

3 cupfuls flour
6 tablespoonfuls Crisco
1 cupful milk
6 teaspoonfuls baking powder
¾ teaspoonful salt
6 apples
(Use level measurements)

Mix the flour, baking powder and salt and sift twice. Work in Crisco with tips of fingers; add the liquid gradually, mixing with a knife to a soft dough. Toss on a floured board, pat, roll one-half inch thick, cut into squares and lay in the center of each an apple, pared and cored. Fill apple with sugar and cinnamon and pinch together corners of dough. Place in baking pan greased with Crisco, dot over with sugar and Crisco and bake in a moderate oven until brown. Serve hot.

In the meantime send your name for our Free Cook Book. It gives 100 tested recipes showing the best way to use Crisco wherever you now use butter or lard. The Procter & Gamble Co., Dept. S, Cincinnati, Ohio.

A HOUSE PARTY

BY MARGARET E. SANGSTER, JR.

A true story with a large moral

IT WAS a tiny affair, this house party of ours—only three girls were included among the invited guests; Janet, who had an athletic soul, eyes that danced with mischief, and a propensity for seeing the funny side of things; Helena, a glorious, chestnut-haired beauty; and myself, but of course I won't describe myself. Our hostess was gentle little Ruth, with her soft Southern voice and helpless little ways.

We three girls came down on the train together, enthusing about the scenery in the most approved girl fashion; but when we met Ruth at the station we immediately knew that something was wrong; for a wrinkle between her straight black brows tried to blot out the sunniness of her smile.

"Girls," she gasped, waving her chubby and usually quiet hands, "What do you all think? Mother has been called into New York and will be gone for a week!"

We laughed unsympathetically. A week of perfect freedom! A week in which we could manage the house by ourselves! It seemed providential. "Cheer up, Ruthie," Janet cried joyfully, as we kissed her, "we'll help you out."

The supper of fried chicken, beaten biscuit, and fruitcake seemed like the ambrosia of the gods. But then we were hungry and sleepy.

I did not move until late the next morning. It must have been late, for the sun was very hot, but an ominous stillness brooded over the house and no wonderful aroma from an "old Southern style" breakfast floated appetizingly from the kitchen. I lay still for a while, happily dozing, before I leaned over and shook Helena. It did not bother her, that shaking. She only opened one beautiful eye, murmured "Let me be!" and relapsed into a sleeping beauty pose again. So I donned kimono and slippers and went on an exploring expedition by myself.

First of all I crept quietly into the room that Ruth and Janet shared: the bed was empty, and so, on examination, was the closet in which their dresses of the night before had been hung. So I tiptoed to the front stairs. There on the bottom step sat Ruth, a picture of misery, with her head on Janet's shoulder.

A Helpless Hostess

"What's the matter?" I shrieked from the top step. Ruth lifted a tear-stained face and looked at me accusingly.

"Aunt Dinah's gone!" she quavered tragically, "and so has Polly!"

"Polly is the waitress and Aunt Dinah is the cook," explained Janet.

I whistled; at least I tried to. I understood, finally, the meaning of the calm, still morning.

Just at this psychological moment a curly head popped over my shoulder.

"Is breakfast ready?" asked Helena's sleepy voice; but at the fatal word "breakfast," Ruth was overtaken by another flood of tears. Broken by sobs we could distinguish the phrases: "Mother away," "Can't cook," "Dinah mad," and "What shall we do?"

"Get dressed first," said Janet, in answer to the last. And we did.

We were all down stairs again in about ten minutes, and found Janet with a bright fire and a steaming kettle. I seized a large frying-pan, blessing the days that my mother had spent in teaching me how to cook. Ruth looked at us from the doorway and Helena set the table.

Well, that breakfast was not bad. We had eggs and bacon and coffee and muffins. Over the coffee cups we held a council of war that ruffled the temporarily smooth waters. Janet was the speaker.

"Margaret can do the cooking," she said, "I hate to cook! I will sweep and make the beds because I'm the strongest. Ruth can run errands and Helena can set the table and wash the dishes."

Helena raised a carefully manicured hand and looked at it.

"Why," she asked, in a much aggrieved voice, "must I wash the dishes?"

"Because," said Janet firmly, "you can't do anything else. You can't cook or sweep, and I wouldn't sleep in a bed that you made."

Helena washed the breakfast dishes in grim silence.

The week went on—somehow. We didn't explore as much beautiful country as we had planned to, although we did go on a few picnics.

After the second day of washing dishes Helena contracted a violent headache one day just after dinner and felt that she was going to faint. After Janet and I finished her task we went out on the porch and found her propped up in the hammock chuckling over something that she was writing. She said that her head was better and that she was taking an idle moment to work on her senior essay. The subject was "Helplessness." Ruth was seated in a chair embroidering a rose on a square of linen.

Janet began by making a joke of everything, and it lasted very well till one day she got a blister on her thumb!

The End of the Party

I kept to my cooking, but when the cakes burned and the biscuits forgot to raise it was rather hard to be pleasant.

As for Ruth, well, Ruth didn't have much to do. She was quite happy and said that she was enjoying herself. It was so different from any house party that she had ever given!

We took a train home just one hour after Ruth's mother arrived. She asked us to extend our visit, but we all had other very important engagements. As the train started Helena gave a sigh of relief.

"How beautiful the scenery is!" she murmured.

"But it's mighty dusty," said Janet as she looked ruefully at her blistered thumb. There was silence for a few minutes, and then suddenly Janet laughed. Laughed with that delightful chuckle that we had scarcely heard for a week.

"We've had quite an experience," she announced, "and we've gotten some practice in housekeeping. Come on, girls, let's go into the dining-car and get a meal that we won't have to prepare and clean up! A meal that will be well cooked." Which, of course, may have been a sly dig at me, but I was enjoying such a sensation of relief that I disdained to give it even the slightest attention.

The moral is—but I'm sure that you know the moral without being told.

A Great Poet's Opinion

Edwin Markham, the author of "The Man With the Hoe," who is regarded as an eminent art critic, writes the following on The Pictorial Life of Christ: "One of the most arresting biographies upon my table, however, takes up an old subject already dealt with by a thousand pens and brushes, and yet a subject ever new and dear to man. This book is The Pictorial Life of Christ (THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, New York), with a text by Ira S. Dodd, and some eighty unusual illustrations by Domenico Mastroianni.

"It is not possible to describe the livingness of these photographed maquettes in their noble setting of street or field. They were first modeled by the thumb and tool of a real artist into groups and background, all instinct with motion and poesy. They are both sculptures and pictures, rounded and vigorous, showing the touches of a fresh imagination alive to the human and the holy. Mastroianni, himself the son of a carpenter of Arpino, has felt the power of Christ, the Artisan, and it vivifies the mood and motion of his pictures."

The attorney general, Mr. McReynolds, is a bachelor, which makes him poor "copy" for an article of this kind. He's a most delightful bachelor, however, well in his forties, and has made a splendid record as a trust-destroying lawyer. He, too, is a church adherent and a member of the Church of the Disciples and is active in religious and philanthropic organizations.

Half of the members of the cabinet are of Southern birth. The postmaster general is among the number, and Mrs. Burleson was born and reared in Austin, Texas. She is one of the most brilliant of this brilliant coterie of women. She possesses that cardinal virtue of housewives, she is an excellent cook and housekeeper, and in addition she wields a gifted pen. She has been a newspaper and magazine writer for years and has produced several successful plays. She is a sparkling conversationalist and a better listener. They have three daughters, one who is married and two who are attending school at Sweet Briar, Va. They all inherit their parents' brains and all have decided beauty.

Mr. and Mrs. Daniels—Mr. Daniels is the secretary of the navy—have a family of four splendid boys—boys so full of fun that they even play jokes on their dignified father. Josephus, Jr., the oldest, will enter the State University of North Carolina next fall, while the three younger boys will enter the public schools of Washington. Mrs. Daniels is an ideal mother and her boys adore her, as they do also her mother, Mrs. Bagley, whose picture was taken with them for our illustration. Mr. Daniels is a Methodist and Mrs. Daniels a Presbyterian, and both are active in many church enterprises.

Mr. Lane, the secretary of the interior, was chairman of the Interstate Commerce Commission and did not know he was to be a member of the cabinet until the Friday night before the inauguration. He is the son of a Presbyterian clergyman and at one time was a newspaper reporter. Mrs. Lane is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Peter Wintermule of Elmira, N. Y. They have two children—a son and a daughter.

Like President Wilson, the new secretary of agriculture, Mr. Houston, is an educator. He took his collegiate course at South Carolina College and Harvard University. He subsequently went South and became the dean of the faculty of the University of Texas. Always interested in agricultural developments, in 1902 he was made president of the Agricultural and Mechanical College of Texas. In 1908 he was made chancellor of the Washington University at St. Louis, a position he held when he received his appointment in the cabinet. Mrs. Houston is also a college woman and one of the brightest and wittiest of the cabinet circle. She is actively identified with several Women's Clubs which work for social betterment, and both she and the secretary are active in their church—the Episcopalian. They have been married seventeen years and have three small children—David Franklin, Jr., an only daughter, Helen, and Baby Lawrence.

Mr. and Mrs. Redfield are old residents of Brooklyn, N. Y., from which city he took his former seat in Congress. They were married twenty-eight years ago and have two children, Mrs. Charles R. Drury of Montreal, Canada, and Humphrey Fuller Redfield, a student at Amherst. Both Mr. and Mrs. Redfield are interested in economic and sociological questions. Mr. Redfield was one of the original advocates of safety appliances in factories and he put them to test in an iron factory in South Brooklyn of which he was manager. The secretary and Mrs. Redfield are Episcopalians and attend one of the West End churches of that denomination.

Mr. Wilson, the new secretary of the new department of the cabinet, that of Labor, is a Scotchman and was a member of the last Congress. He and Mrs. Wilson are both natives of the same town on the Clyde in Scotland, and their respective families moved to America in their childhood. The families settled near each other in Pennsylvania, and when the young people were scarcely out of their teens they were married. Mrs. Wilson has spent but little time in Washington while he was in Congress. They have had nine children, six of whom are living, and she has remained at their Blossburg home in order to keep her boys and girls in school.

A story of the President's official family would be incomplete if it did not include that of the President's able right-hand helper, his secretary, Mr. Joseph Patrick Tumulty. Mr. and Mrs. Tumulty are both so youthful in appearance that it is hard to realize they are the parents of six children—hard to realize it until they are seen with their delicious group of romping youngsters, and then it is easy enough! They are six lovely children and each one has its own attractiveness. Mr. and Mrs. Tumulty have leased a house in Calvert Street and are making many friends.

the Sunday and mid-week services of the church unless prevented by some reason which can conscientiously be given to the Saviour." Are you doing as you have promised, young friends?

And you who have stood before the congregation and solemnly taken upon yourselves the vows to live peaceably, as far as possible; to abide by the rules of the church; to give of your substance, and in every way to promote the prosperity of the church; are you fulfilling those promises? Or are you bringing reproach upon the church? Are you failing to give your share toward the support of the church? Is the subscription made by you still unpaid? Are you refusing to spread the Gospel which you promised to support?

"I cannot get interested in missions," exclaimed a petulant young lady. "No, dear," said the aunt, "you can hardly expect to. It is just like getting interest in a bank. And the more you put in—time, or money, or prayer—the more the interest grows. But something you must put in, or you will have no interest. Try and see."

Recently the British and Foreign Bible Society received a touching gift from a poor crippled woman which amounted to eight farthings (four cents). It came about this way: A lady who is interested in the Bible Society, one day, when calling upon the poor woman, asked her to pray for the society, but to ask her to give money out of her extreme poverty did not seem right. The next time the lady called the crippled woman gave her the eight farthings which she had saved for the Bible Society. That was just enough to keep the society going for one second. She insisted on having a collecting box, and when the lady called again the crippled woman had enough to keep the society going for twelve seconds (two shillings, or forty-eight cents).

Possibly some of us are so ungrateful to God that we have never set up a pillar of thankfulness in our hearts. Let us begin at once to count our blessings. Let us name them one by one. Until we have thus acknowledged God we can make no claim to do as well as Jacob did.

"I am glad to send you a photograph of my latest Diamond Dye Dress. I made this over from some pale yellow messaline material which I had in a dress last spring. I dyed it brown. Isn't it stylish?"
ETHEL L. DE MOTTE, NEW YORK

You, too, can solve dress problems with Diamond Dyes. You need not hesitate to dye your most costly garments. There is no knack or secret about using Diamond Dyes. They are as easy to use as soap.

Diamond Dyes

There are two classes of Diamond Dyes—one for Wool or Silk, the other for Cotton, Linen, or Mixed Goods. Diamond Dyes for Wool or Silk come in Blue envelopes. Diamond Dyes for Cotton, Linen, or Mixed Goods come in White envelopes.

Here's the Truth About Dyes for Home Use

Our experience of over thirty years has proven that no one dye will successfully color every fabric.

There are two classes of fabrics: animal fibre fabrics, and vegetable fibre fabrics.

Wool and Silk are animal fibre fabrics. Cotton and Linen are vegetable fibre fabrics. "Union" or "Mixed" goods are 60% to 80% Cotton—so must be treated as vegetable fibre fabrics.

Vegetable fibres require one class of dye, and animal fibres another and radically different class of dye. As proof—we call attention to the fact that manufacturers of woolen goods use one class of dye, while manufacturers of cotton goods use an entirely different class of dye.

Do Not Be Deceived

For these reasons we manufacture one class of Diamond Dyes for coloring Cotton, Linen, or Mixed Goods, and another class of Diamond Dyes for coloring Wool or Silk, so that you may obtain the very best results on EVERY fabric.

REMEMBER: To get the best possible results in coloring Cotton, Linen, or Mixed Goods, use the Diamond Dyes manufactured especially for Cotton, Linen, or Mixed Goods.

AND REMEMBER: To get the best possible results in coloring Wool or Silk, use the Diamond Dyes manufactured especially for Wool or Silk.

Diamond Dyes are sold at the uniform price of 10c per package

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, New York City

THE GOSPEL IN EAST AFRICA

DURING the last few years a great deal of attention has been devoted to East Africa. First, ex-President Roosevelt, by his trip into that land of wonderful hunting, made us familiar with names which before had been but letters on a map. While Colonel Roosevelt was in that country he visited the African Inland Mission and afterward expressed his high commendation of the work which it is carrying on among the half civilized tribes and wholly savage tribes of that country.

Mr. Oren H. Scouten, one of the Mission workers from East Africa, is now in America and has forwarded the following little account of the Mission's work to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD:

"In 1895 was founded for the evangelization of the interior of Africa a mission on the same faith basis as the China Inland Mission. The leader of the first band of missionaries of the Africa Inland Mission was Peter Cameron Scott, who had already been in the work on the West Coast, that part of Africa which is truly called 'the white man's graveyard.' He felt that the interior of the continent could be reached and evangelized with less loss of life and waste of money if entered from the East Coast, planting stations on healthy sites in the highlands and along the ranges of hills on into the vast, thickly populated regions of the Congo and Soudan. In the early years of the mission great hardships and privations were endured, many of the missionaries died or were compelled to return home, and the life of the mission seemed to hang by a thread. In 1902, however, Rev. Charles E. Hurlburt, the general director of the mission, went to the field himself, with his family and a party of missionaries, and since then the work has steadily grown. When I went to the field in 1905 there were fifteen missionaries at work and four stations had been opened, two among the Akamba people and two in Gikuyu country. Soon afterwards a station was opened among the Masai, that famous tribe of warriors whose name was a terror to the surrounding tribes, and other stations were opened among the Akamba and Agikuyu. Later, work was taken up in German East Africa, where a successful work is now being accomplished, and in 1912 an advance was made into the northeastern part of the Belgian Congo, the very heart of the continent. Here lie unnumbered tribes of people who have never heard the Gospel, one of which, the Azandi (incorrectly called Nyam-nyam), is said to be one of the largest in Africa. We now have seventy-five missionaries and twelve stations scattered throughout this field.

East African Warriors in Dancing Costume

"The tribes among which I have worked are the Gikuyu and the Kipsigis. Many of their customs are similar, while in others they vary widely. They live in small, round huts, together with their sheep and goats; the doorway is between two and three feet high, and their fireplace is on the floor (the ground) in the middle of the hut, with no escape for the smoke except through the thatch roof. These tribes wear little clothing but many ornaments, and their bodies are covered often with tattoo marks, paint and feathers. The old men spend most of their time at beer-drinking, the young men take turns at herding the cattle and going to dances, the boys herd the sheep and goats, and the little girls carry their smaller brothers or sisters around on their backs, while their mothers and older sisters are working in the garden, cutting firewood or grass for thatching, etc., as the women do the most and the hardest of the work. The controlling forces in the lives of these people are lust, the desire for wealth in the shape of sheep and goats, cattle and wives, and the fear of evil spirits. Their worship is the sacrificing of sheep or goats to propitiate what they believe to be the spirits of the departed, and in addition to this the Gikuyu sometimes offer sacrifices to God and pray for rain or for temporal prosperity. The Kipsigis worship the sun as the Supreme Being, and throw up into the air the blood of their sacrifices, together with a quantity of milk and of their native beer.

"Until autumn I shall be engaged in deputation work in the United States and Canada, and shall be glad to hear from any one desirous of arranging for a missionary meeting. Address Africa Inland Mission, 2244 North Twenty-ninth Street, Philadelphia, Pa. The president of the Africa Inland Mission in America is Dr. R. A. Torrey, and the president of the British Home Council is Rev. Stuart Holden.

"It might be well to mention, for the information of those who may be interested, that in going to any place to hold a missionary meeting no remuneration is asked nor is any collection taken. The specific needs of our own work are not presented, but the needy field as a whole, and especially that part of it that we have personal knowledge of, is brought to the attention of the people of God in America as the opportunities for so doing are presented."

a shock that was stupendous, the catastrophe that had fallen like a lightning stroke on civilization.

In the first place, not a single daily paper in the city was fully printed. The Times appeared with four pages, and not a line of foreign news. The Tribune had an issue of three pages and a half. Subscribers who secured copies looked in dazed wonder at the blank spaces. The Sun had started with an issue that looked like a cheap weekly, but the net result was two pages of printed matter, nearly every line of it a hysterical account of the catastrophe.

But the papers were only an item that third day of the hand failure. The civilization of ages was beginning to come to a standstill. Before night of that day not a wheel was turning on the elevated, in the subway or on the surface railroads. Not an elevator was running, except with rare exception, in any of the skyscrapers or hotels. Ocean steamers lay still at the docks. Others that had been overdue could be seen tossing curiously about all over the harbor. The ferryboats were either still in their slips, or floating helpless on the river. Automobiles and carriages presented the same curious picture in Broadway and throughout all the streets. Some were standing perfectly still across car tracks. Others were being driven by men who bore on their faces marks of a white terror that before the week was over was the most vivid thing that stood out clear to the bewildered consciousness of the multitude.

For when the next twenty-four hours had passed, men and women of all ranks of life realized that the common, dirty, human hand of everyday toil had ceased to do its work.

Weeks after, when the regular work of the world had been resumed, certain facts were made clear, among them the following:

The strange disease, for which no name was ever found, affected only the hands of men and women who were engaged in what may roughly be called common labor, i. e., labor for which day's wages is paid, or labor which was daily handling tools. It may interest our readers who have only heard of the great catastrophe to see a list of those who were afflicted. It must be remembered that the disease did not impair any other faculty or organ of the body. These were not hospital cases. The hands simply ceased work. They could no longer hold tools or do the common task required of the hand.

The people generally affected all over the world were:

Stokers; servants in hotels and private houses; railroad firemen and furnace men; farmers; elevator men; men in machine shops; newspaper men in the machinery part of the press work; cooks and their helpers; drivers of trucks, carriages and automobiles; servant men and women in every department of labor; men engaged in sewer and street construction; carpenters and sailors; firemen; garbage handlers; and in general all men and women whose living was made by doing the dirty, dangerous or common work of the world which simply calls for physical labor and the hourly use of the human hand.

It was noted afterwards that men and women who lived without using their hands as the first means of a living were exempt from the strange disease.

Ministers, newspaper editors, authors, poets, singers, lawyers, business men, financiers, magnates, Wall Street brokers, speculators, politicians, actors, and society leaders were immune.

But before another twenty-four hours of that eventful week the most astonishing sights were witnessed in New York and all over the world.

The rich people in the big houses on Fifth Avenue were trying to cook their own meals and make their own beds and scrub their own floors. Libraries of interesting books could be written about their tragic attempts to take care of their own bodies. Not a servant could be found who could use his hands to cook, drive, dress or care for these people. Men who had not blacked their own boots for years at first made the attempt, but before the week was over the tragedy about them made them forget and ignore all such superfluities of living. For New York was dropping down into literal ruin. There was no one any longer to run the machinery that brought light, heat, or power to the city. No one left to provide for the carrying off of garbage, sewage, or filth. No women to be found to scrub the floors of hotels at night. The churches were closed. The great hotels contained dazed, jostling, half-insane richly dressed millionaires who were going mad for common bread, which could not be bought for any price.

The money kings of Broadway and the Stock Exchange members, presidents of banks and financiers held a great meeting out of doors in Central Park.

They were absolutely powerless to suggest a single remedy for the tragedy. The value of money was absolutely nil. One of the richest men in New York offered $100,000,000 for a cook to come to his house and start a fire in a little coal stove and bake a loaf of bread. The richest man offered to do it for $200,000,000 if the other would make five cents' worth of fresh yeast, and the man was unable to find a single human hand in New York that was able to bring together the materials for such a ferment.

This was at the close of the fifth day, when New York began to be aware that it was starving to death.

Food, fresh food, of any sort was not to be obtained at any price. Those human hands that ordinarily worked so incessantly and unknown to bring food luxuries to the leisure and the pampered and the idle class, and common food to the poor as well, failed to produce food of any sort.

Civilization was dying. And all on account of a failure on the part of common human hands to open and shut their fingers and handle tools of labor and bear back and forth burdens. And there was no plague. No pestilence. No famine. No war. The men and women affected, for the most part plain, common, unknown people, were not suffering any pain and were not in need of hospital attendance. They walked the streets with the rest of the multitudes that swarmed there, driven from their homes for lack of light and heat and comfort, out of houses and hotels that were with bewildering rapidity becoming uninhabitable on account of absolute neglect, the neglect that followed the inability of the common hand to do its common work.

The detailed history of that astounding world experience can never be told by a world of historians. The experiences were so unique, they were so completely without a parallel, they culminated in one overwhelming disaster after another so rapidly that no historian or group of historians could compile any real story of what actually occurred.

Men and women who had never before used their hands in manual labor began to take up unaccustomed tasks in the terror and necessity of simply holding off Death a little longer. The rich and cultured, the prima donna and the doctor of divinity, the college president and the delicate lady of fashion, caught up tools, shoveled coal, prepared food, tried to run engines and elevators and put in motion the complex wheels of modern civilized movement. It would have been laughable if all their efforts had not been surrounded with deepest tragedy to

MOTHERS' PENSIONS

JUST as "the proof of the pudding is in the eating," so the actual value of the Mothers' Pension Law is best shown by what it has done. There is no better exponent of this law than Judge Merritt W. Pinckney of the Chicago Juvenile Court, who has had closer experience with it than any other person. He gives a clear and convincing summary of it from every angle as it has come under his careful observation. I am taking the liberty of quoting a few of his statements.

He says of the need of the law: "For some years those persons interested in the welfare of dependent children have felt that poverty alone was not a sufficient reason for separating parent and child. During my term of service in the Juvenile Court my chief endeavor has been to keep the home intact, to preserve the family circle; and when this was impossible I have sought to substitute another family fireside and the maternal love and care of some good woman. There is no love like a mother's love, and next to that comes the individual love and care of a motherly woman.

In the past four years about fifteen thousand dependent and delinquent children, two-fifths of them dependent, have passed before Judge Pinckney in the Juvenile Court: "Naturally, in searching for remedies, I have come to study and recognize causes and appreciate the value of preventive measures. While of necessity engaged mainly with curative work, I am daily and hourly impressed with the importance—the need—of preventive work. You can no more eliminate the dependency and delinquency of children by placing them on probation and by institutional care than you can cure crime by imprisonment and death."

Poverty is the cause of dependency and, while social science says it is unnecessary and at some time will be eliminated, it is necessary now to soften the sufferings of poverty's victims: "Must deserving motherhood, the sacredness of home life and the welfare of children await the slow evolution of our social and political life? Society and the state should encourage and cherish and not destroy this most sacred thing in human life—a mother's love—and should guard and protect and foster the grandest institution of our social and political life—the home."

The early administration of the law was beset with difficulties. There was no money at all at first; then only $2,000. An appropriation of $125,000 was asked for and only $75,000 was received. In the face of these difficulties it was necessary to proceed very carefully indeed if the law was to succeed.

"As we gain in experience and as the public begins to see the possibility of a successful administration of the law we will be able to approach more nearly to a just and adequate standard. In granting the relief, the earning capacity of the family is considered. We seek to supplement the family income with sufficient public funds to meet the family needs, whenever such income is earned without neglect of home and children or the sacrifice of health and strength. The spirit of self-dependence must not be broken down nor should the effort to accomplish partial self-support be discouraged. We, who believe in law, believe that, administered along these lines, it can be made a help to the dignified self-help of the family which it seeks to benefit and that the children who are brought up under these influences will become American citizens worthy of the name." HENRY NEIL.

see the human hand so awkwardly trying to adjust itself to the task of keeping the world from falling to pieces, that world which the people were learning so fast was not dependent on their money, or learning, or culture, or news, or art, or music, but simply on the going to work every day of multitudes of coarse, common, for the most part grimy hands of coarse, grimy men and women.

But among the multitude of facts noted during the attempts of unskilled and untaught hands to do the world's work was this one: as soon as such hands had begun to acquire any skill in the task the same inability to use them became apparent. The owner of those hands had joined the ranks of common toil. He was a victim with his fellows.

And so as the hours of the world were multiplied the world rolled on to extinction. Civilization stood still. The cities were filled with bewildered masses. All rank was obliterated. Afterwards men recalled how quiet the streets were. And many other incidents were recalled, to show how leveling the process of hand loss had reduced all mankind.

On the morning of the seventh day of this memorable week, the man who, as far as any reliable history can show, was the first in New York to complain of the loss of his hand power suddenly exclaimed to his wife: "I believe I can use one of my hands!"

He held it up and looked at it with fascination. In the days of his honest toil he could not have looked with more exquisite delight on a bag of gold held up before his eyes as a gift.

His wife repented his exclamation for herself. The week's horrors had brought them both to the verge of death. One hand good! Thank God! By night the man and his wife went singing for joy through the streets, and as if with one tongue their shout was echoed by the world's millions, for at the same instant all human hands of honest toil were released, and with a universal cry of thanksgiving the world leaped to work again.

How long, did you say? Just one week! One short week of the world's civilization, the scarred, roughed, coarse, wrinkled, hard, broken-nailed, dirty hands of the world's unknown and often despised hands held no tools, performed no day's work. And, oh, for the losses, the frightful ruins, the desolation and world-wide tragedy of that short week!

But what a lesson for the world! O God, our Father, help us not to forget it! Oh, help us of this money-loving, ease-loving generation never to forget what we owe to the men and women who work with their hands for us, to keep our homes going, to roll the wheels of our civilization forward, to make possible our churches and our schools and our cites and our very life. O Thou who didst work for some great reason eighteen years in a shop and only two or three out in the world, help us to think with deep kindness of all men and women who toil with the hand. And if we ourselves have to make our daily bread by the opening and shutting of our fingers around some tool of labor, oh, we beseech thee, give us a God-vision of our kingly task and support us through the dny's commonplace drudgery with the inspiring truth that we are needed to keep the world alive, and make our hands to do honest toil to-day in the name of Him who made tables and stools and common things for the people of Nazareth. And may every man and woman in all the world learn how to do some needful and honest work with his hands. Amen.

MAKING MISTAKES

BY JOSIAH ALLEN'S WIFE

Marietta Holley
Author of Samantha at Coney Island

I HAVE told Josiah that nothin' wuz easier than for poor blind mortals to make mistakes and blame some one else for 'em.

But he always contended that though that might be true of ordinary people he wuz altogether immune from anything of the kind; he never made a mistake. But I knowed better, and sunthin' occurred yesterday that ort to convinced him of the truth of my statement, and probable did for as much as five minutes, but it didn't last.

He stormed in almost frothin' at the mouth with indignation and impatience. It seemed that Ury had come back from Jonesville without doin' the most important errent of all. He had sent for some salt. He said he needed it the worst kind and Ury knew it. "Well," sez I, "he probable forgot it."

What bizness has a hired man to forgit? I didn't hire him for a forgitter. But he didn't even have that excuse. He said he couldn't make out what I sent for, and the grocer couldn't, he said they thought it wuz some animal, a young horse. Consarned fools both on 'em. A young horse! And there it wuz writ down as plain as the nose on their faces C-O-L-T, salt."

I didn't argy with him, for I knowed it wouldn't do. He wuz so wrought up it might have brought on a spell! But after he went out after emptyin' both salt sullers into his horse feed I sot and eppisoded on how true it wuz that folks blunder into mistakes entirely unbeknown to them.

And as I sot thinkin' of Josiah's mistake, my mind roved off on the mistake Jethro Perkins made over in Loontown. It wuz the town's talk and I spoze folks talked about it way beyond the town line. But I looked at it more lenitent than some folks did and ddn't poke fun at him so fur, for I believe that folks sometimes receive strange impressions and warnin's of important things that are goin' to happen to 'em. But we should be very careful to not mistake the emotions and forebodin's of hysteria and nervousness for the inner whisperin's of the Spirit.

Jethro, who wuz a worthy but ruther nervous man, declared he had had a warnin' that he should die at a certain date at three o'clock in the afternoon, and he wuz so dead sure of it that his positive and onquestionin' belief impressed everybody around him.

He settled his business affairs, sold his live stock, made his will, bought his coffin, had his shroud made, and gin out the word that he would preach his own funeral sermon at one o'clock on that day, and sent invitations to friends and relations to be present. The company gathered at the appointed time, the wife and children dressed in deep mournin' and weepin' bitterly. And Jethro, clothed in his long white shroud, stood by the side of his coffin and proceeded to preach his own funeral discourse. It wuz long, for he had a good deal to say.

He had selected a number of close friends from the choir and he opened the funeral excercises by readin' the him:

"For all the saints who from their labor rest."

His complacent countenance showing plainly that he considered himself one of the saints they wuz warblin' about. He chose for his text: "I have fought the good fight, I have finished the faith."

And then he proceeded to deliver his own funeral oration, in which he showed a warm appreciation of his own virtues, and gave advice freely to neighbors and relations, and also improved the opportunity to administer what he thought needed rebukes to those among them who had offended him, and lamented their shortcomings, which, of course, they could not resent, coming as last solemn words of warning and admonition from a dying man. And you know preachers always have this advantage, they can sass their hearers if they feel like it, and folks will set under it ruther than make a fuss, though sometimes they squirm. They did now, but stood it.

And in closing Jethro addressed the mourners in an affectin' manner, impressin' them anew with the inestimable value of the treasure they wuz about to lose, which made the tears of his wife and children fall faster than ever, for he wuz a good man, and a kind and loving husband and father. After he had finished his sermon and eulogy on himself, he shook hands solemnly with his friends and more distant relations, and urged them in parting to live in such an improved and Christian manner that they might be able to meet him in the better land. He then tenderly embraced his wife and children and bade them a lovin' farewell. And then he gathered the long folds of his shroud about him, climbed into his coffin, laid down, composed his lims, crossed his hands on his bosom, closed his eyes, and waited for the clock to strike the moment of his doom. The assembled company and mourning family waited in breathless awe and expectation. At last the clock struck:

One! Two! Three!

Nothing happened. And Jethro lifted his head and looked round ruther sheepishly and said:

"There must have been some mistake."

PALMOLIVE

For two thousand years Palm and Olive Oils have been carried over land and sea, by ship and caravan, to all parts of the world—for the toilets of little children and beautiful women.

For two thousand years it has been known that Palm and Olive Oils soothe, cleanse, soften and make the skin firm, white and youthful.

Palmolive Soap is the modern scientific way of blending Palm and Olive Oils.

These two wonderful oils of the Orient never have been equaled by any toilet requisites of any age.

Palmolive Soap is perfectly pure. Contains no free alkali. No artificial color is used. The two blended oils give Palmolive its delicate green color.

Palmolive is faintly, yet delightfully fragrant — a sweet, wholesome breath from the Orient.

It lathers freely in soft or hard water, thoroughly cleansing and invigorating the skin.

It is advised by famous physicians as best for the baths of new-born children, as well as for daily use by women and men.

More Palmolive is used than any other high-grade toilet soap.

Palmolive is found at all good dealers'— Price, 15c a cake

Palmolive Shampoo contains the two wonderful Palm and Olive Oils. It makes the hair soft, fluffy and tractable. Preserves its color and luxuriance, and imparts the dainty, misty gleam that healthy, clean hair has by nature. Price, 50c a bottle.

Palmolive Cream is an unusually delightful and beneficial emollient. It completes the three necessities for a careful and dainty toilet. Price, 50c a jar

ANSWERED PRAYERS

AN INTERESTING letter comes from a subscriber who does not sign his name and asks that his letter be not printed; but the questions he asks are so important and interesting that their consideration will be helpful. He asks why, if God answers prayer, the great public evils are not brought to an end, since so many Christians are praying for their overthrow. We must remember always in praying that God does not force any man to do right against his will. This world is a battleground where character is being developed, and character is based on the freedom of each individual to do right or wrong as he decides. Some men choose to do wrong, make up their minds to do wrong, persist in doing wrong. We might pray that all the people in the world instantly stop sinning, but we know that such a prayer would not bring about such a result. God's Spirit is constantly striving with men, urging them in every way to cease from sin. Prayer does help in influencing the minds of men to attend to the Spirit's pleading. God and man work together for the redemption of the world. But we must not be impatient. Some evils of society, like slavery, for instance, take many centuries to be outgrown. While praying earnestly and working diligently for the triumph of righteousness, we should also pray for patience in our souls.

Thou who thy thousand years dost wait
To work the thousandth part
Of thy vast plan, for us create
With zeal, a patient heart.

When all this is said, however, it is well to recognize that God's people as a whole have need just now of zeal rather more than of this kind of patience. We ought, indeed, to pray more intensely and labor more mightily for the undoing of evil. But we must not suspect God of unfaithfulness nor indifference, nor tardiness.

The other question in this letter is about a strong temper. The writer wonders why God does not deliver him from this affliction. God will deliver him from every wrong kind of temper if he will trust him to do so, relying absolutely upon the promises of the Scriptures and upon the power of the blood of Christ. There was a discussion about anger in the Young People's Meeting in last week's CHRISTIAN HERALD that might be helpful here. We must distinguish between right and wrong kinds of anger; then trust God to deliver us absolutely from the wrong sort, and to enable us always to keep the right sort under perfect control. Every minute we must see to it that our hearts are really filled with love, love toward God, and love to all men, even to those who wrong us. As we love others warmly and try earnestly to help them we shall find ourselves growing thoughtful and gentle and patient.

H. A. writes from Crockett, Texas: "I enjoy the Answered Prayer page most of all. It encourages me to ask and receive. I have been greatly helped by prayer in making payment of debts I assumed for others." Mrs. C. E. Y. of Rosewood, Ohio, writes: "I wish to acknowledge my great thankfulness to almighty God in answering prayer. I was in great trouble and sorrow. I prayed earnestly day and night, and the blessed Lord heard and gave me the desires of my heart."

THE HOLD-UP

BY BINNEY DE FOREST

A Story complete in this issue

THE Bible agent lifted his head from the desk with a jerk. His eyes leaped to the clock. It was after midnight and he was alone in the big office building. He had been asleep. He heard the sound of a man's feet coming down the long hall. It was not an occupant of the building, he was sure of that. Like a flash of light came the meaning. A hold-up! The blood began pounding in his ears like an angry surf. His eyes stared appealingly at the wall of Bibles packed with promises, but not one came to his help.

Nearer and nearer came the intruder. The door came boldly open and the agent's hands went up as a gun was thrust into his face.

"I want—" began a voice with an easy swing.

"I shan't resist," faltered the agent.

"Hey! Won't resist?" Surprise rang in the tone.

"No. The combination—" hurried the agent.

"I don't want no combination," interrupted the stranger, while a curious smile turned up the corners of his long mustache. "I want the Gospel of Mark."

The agent stared, wordless, at the tall, lean figure before him. He saw in his face deep furrows like great gashes. One eye was entirely gone, yet a peculiar light glowed in his face and softened it. He appeared to be about thirty-five years old.

"Maybe if you'd drop them hands of yourn, you'd understand better. It's kinder tiresome holdin' 'em up so long," suggested the interloper. A suspicion of laughter colored his voice.

Down came the agent's hands with a thud. A long, bony finger was the only sign of a gun that he saw.

"Ain't it your business to sell Gospels?" queried the night caller, his one eye harboring a smile.

"Yes, yes," answered the agent blankly.

"Then, supposin' you git me two dozen Gospels of Mark."

"All right," humbly responded the Bible man, and the Gospels began to pile up before him.

The man who came for the books touched them with reverent hands as he slipped them one by one into a bag which he had taken from his coat pocket.

"What are you going to do with them?" ventured the agent.

"Give 'em away," shot back the answer. He opened the last book before it found its companions in the roomy bag and began reading to himself with moving lips.

The agent caught, now and then, a breathy word. Finally the reader closed the book as one puts by a dear story, unfinished, and, with a friendly good-night, he turned to go, when the inquisitive voice of the agent made him pause.

"If you have time I wish you'd tell me how you came to get acquainted with the Gospel of Mark."

"Lots of time," was the quick answer, and dropping into a chair and depositing his broad-brimmed white hat on the floor beside him he began:

"I hit this town 'bout six months ago; 'course I bunked in that part of town you ain't much acquainted with. You read about it and talk about it, maybe, when you git kinder roused up, with them starin' at you, and holdin' the receipt for cleanness and purity." He jerked his head in the direction of the wall of Bibles.

"Well," he went on thoughtfully, "I got to my bunk 'bout four o'clock one mornin'. I was purty full, but it didn't bother my locomotion. I could walk as straight as you," tossing his big hand in the agent's direction. "My eye lighted on a little thin book on the table soon as I got in the room. I wasn't crazy after books, but I picked that innocent lookin' thing up and read on the back 'The Gospel of Mark.' It made me mad. I threw it on the floor with an oath and turned in. I kept a-cussin', for I hated that book. I couldn't ha' told why, then. I'd never read it, but I knew it was one of the books of the Bible and I hated it." His face never lost its radiant light as he talked.

The Bible agent leaned forward, his chin buried deep in his hand, supported by his elbow resting on the desk.

The man continued: "I finally went to sleep and got rid of the booze. I was still mad when I get up. That book had no business in that part of town, I said. I knew some long-faced preacher or snivelin' woman missionary had sneaked it in. I found the book on the floor smilin'. Yes, sir, it jest seemed to smile at me sort of invitin'. I got madder ever' minute. I picked the thin thing up and threw it into the dingy old lightwell. As it went down its leaves fluttered and flapped like wings a-beatin' till it hit bottom. Stranger, that book jest ha'nted me. I felt like I'd killed somebody."

The listener made some inarticulate sound. The man went on.

"I came back that night drunk, of course, and the first thing I saw when I came in was that little innocent lyin' on the old table smilin' at me. I snatched it up and tore the back off and ripped the leaves out and twisted 'em up and cursed 'em. I kept gittin' madder and madder. I spit on the torn leaves and ground 'em with my heel. Then I picked ever' one up and tore 'em into little bits and threw 'em into the old lightwell again. 'There,' I said, with another oath, 'you'll never hother me no more.'"

The agent did not conceal his astonishment.

Steady as a prairie wind the man with the scarred face swept along. "That night I kept my clothes on. Some way I didn't have no courage. I kept hearin' that book kinder moanin', and I thought of a woman way out in Wyoming. She'd had a Bible given her by some travelin' missionary and she used to read it like it was a novel. I got to thinkin' how her face uster shine when she'd been readin' it, and how she tried to tell us cow-punchers about Jesus Christ lovin' us. We jest haw-hawed at that. We didn't half listen to her; kept our mind on somethin' else when she begun. I did. We stayed out of her way as much as we could. She was boardin' us is how I knowed her," he explained.

The agent had the look of a man who had solved satisfactorily to himself a problem, yet was glad when another proof of its efficacy was added.

"I thought I'd change my room," he continued. "Then I got to feelin' ashamed to be run out by a book. That night I arrived 'bout my usual time. I shook like a man with the buck ager. I was afraid to go in. If it had been somethin' alive in there, somethin' I could shoot, I'd never winced. I cursed myself for bein' a coward and lunged against the old door and bust inside, knockin' things round like an earthquake. And there on the shaky old table was that book. Of course I know now it was another book, just like the one I'd tore up and throwed out. But I was crazy-scared. I thought it was the same one come back again. I dropped down on the edge of the bed and stared at it. I was afraid to move. The air got thick with books.

"I thought I had the D.T.'s." A shiny smile wrinkled his face as he talked. "Purty soon I jest crumpled up and slid to the floor and shet my eyes. It was no use. I could feel 'em touchin' my face soft like. I tried to

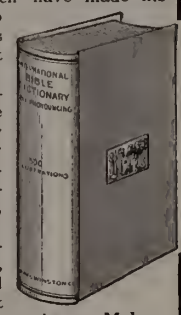
SELF-PRONOUNCING

International Bible Dictionary

Edited by F. N. PELOUBET, D.D.
Author of "Select Notes on the International Lessons"

Rev. Amos R. Wells, D.D., Managing Editor of the Christian Endeavor World, says:—"Dr. Peloubet is one of the most popular Bible commentators that ever lived, and he has put into this book all his long experience and wide scholarship, together with the popular characteristics which have made his Sunday-school Notes so famous. The dictionary is eminently practical and yet thoroughly scholarly."



Based on profound scholarship, it explains in the simplest language, every Biblical subject, every place, nation, person, custom, instrument, implement, animal, plant, flower, etc.

In the number of subjects, in their treatment, and in the number and quality of illustrations, it excels any other one-volume Bible dictionary. Better bound (in Special Library Buckram) and lower in price than any other.

THE HOLD-UP

fight, but I couldn't hit nothin'. Finally, with an effort big enough to lift a horse, I got up and grabbed that book and opened it right at the beginnin' and commenced readin.' At sun-up I went into a little park near by and read and read. When I come to where Jesus come into the temple and began to cast out them that sold and bought in the temple and overthrew the tables of the money-changers and the seats of them that sold doves, I said, 'That's my Man.' Then somethin' happened." His voice was triumphant with victory, and on his face "shone that light that was never on land or sea."

The agent's eyes flashed understanding, and he bent forward as the impelling voice rushed on.

"It was like when the fog lifts sudden. I was a new man. There wasn't an inch of hate left in me. I loved ever'body. I loved that book, and for the first time in my life I wanted to help somebody. I ran over to an old bum warmin' in the sun and begun to tell him how to clean up. He jest stared at me, never battin' a whiskey eye, as he wheezed, 'You let me alone, you lean, lanky, one-eyed hypocrite.'

"There wasn't any doubt then 'bout my bein' a new creature," continued the speaker, " 'cause that poor wretch was still settin' up in the same place when I left him. I tried a prosperous lookin' individual next. He looked kinder sorry for me and flung me a piece of money, sayin', 'Forget it in a drink.' I told him I wasn't a beggar and that I had somethin' to give him. I told him how I got changed. He said, 'It's all right if you feel that way.' I couldn't make him understand."

Simultaneously, each man's face held regret. Into the silence which followed broke the voice of the narrator.

"I went on spreadin' the news. I didn't put no bushel over my candle." A little thoughtful smile bobbed over his plain features. "I kept readin' and feedin' my light on the book. And it come to me that God's Spirit must speak to 'em through his Word. So I made up my mind to give it away."

The long legs of the speaker were suddenly uncrossed, one hand gripped the bag of books, and his whole attitude was that of one ready for action. But at the questioning voice of the other man his fingers relaxed their hold and a spirit of humor seemed to possess him as he repeated the question,

"Do I have temptations?" There was a moment of quiet chuckling to himself before the answer, "Thick as flies on the home ranch. The devil never lets any of his pals git away easy," he asserted, "he's allus disguisin' himself as an angel of light and coaxin' them back. I let him know I recognize him and fight him open. I throw at him the Scripture, quote on quote; sometimes he tosses it back glib enough. But there ain't the right ring in it."

He came to his feet at this. "I must be goin'," he declared.

As the agent stood, he grasped the bony, hard hand of his companion and said, "I'll be glad to see you at any time, day or night." It was not the conventional tone.

"You'll see me again," responded the man with the sack of Gospels dangling at his back. A twinkle of fun gathered in his one eye as he added, "Meantime, hadn't you better git in a fresh supply of the Gospel of Mark?"

And the Bible man was alone.

Nazareth in Mark 6: 5 that "he could there do no mighty work, save that he laid his hands upon a few sick folk, and healed them"; in Matt. 13: 58 the reason is given: "He did not many mighty works there because of their unbelief." In many places Paul did not have great ingatherings. We may trust God ourselves, but we cannot compel others to trust him.

What, then, does the promise mean? It means that we may be put at our very best for God, so that in testimony, in prayer, in entreaty, in personal victory over sin, in enduring trial, we shall be "more than conquerors through him that loved us." It means that we may be so filled with the Holy Spirit and made so strong in prayer that all the power that Christ himself has shall be in our words and deeds. He himself will speak in us and work through us, and all that he can possibly do through such instruments as we are shall be done, "for it is God who worketh in us both to will and to do of his good pleasure."

Promise of the Comforter*

A GREAT Christian teacher has observed that many present day Christians do not realize that they are living this side of Pentecost, not before it. The study of the doctrine of the Holy Spirit is one of the most important in all the Scriptures. The descent of the Holy Spirit on the Day of Pentecost was the great climax of the Bible message. The promises and prophecies of the Old Testament looked forward to the time when God would pour out his Spirit upon all flesh (Joel 2: 28; Isa. 44: 3; Ezek. 36: 27, etc.); the narrative of the Gospels tells of the life of the heavenly Messenger who came to prepare the way for the great Gift and the unspeakable price he paid in order that men might receive it; the book of Acts tells of the coming of the Gift; the Epistles and the book of Revelation show how others may receive it, what it will do for human life, and what eternity will be for those who possess it. Peter, speaking on the day of Pentecost, sums up the event thus: "This Jesus hath God raised up, whereof we all are witnesses. Therefore being by the right hand of God exalted, and having received of the Father the promise of the Holy Ghost, he hath shed forth this, which ye now see and hear." (Acts 2: 32, 33.)

Who may receive this gift? The answer is very plain: "For the promise is unto you, and to your children, and to all that are afar off, even as many as the Lord our God shall call." (Acts 2: 39.) The story is told of a king who, wishing to express his affection and gratitude for a private soldier of his armies, gave him a richly jeweled cup, his own cup. The soldier, stepping forth to receive the gift, exclaimed shamefacedly:

"This is too great a gift for me to receive."

"It is not too great for me to give," the king replied.

So Christ offers us this infinite gift of the Holy Spirit to cleanse and fill our hearts, and to abide with us. He died to make possible the bestowal of the gift. Think, then, how very much he must have cared that we receive it. And he still cares. Shall we disappoint and grieve him by refusing, through our unbelief or disobedience, to accept it?

A SUCCESSFUL EVANGELIST'S REPLY TO DR. CHAPMAN

PERMIT me to say in regard to the complaints registered against evangelists, that it is much easier to complain, criticize and accuse than it is to produce results or evolve a method that will move men and women Godward.

To condemn all evangelists because of the bizarre, boorish extravaganza and illiteracy of the few is unjust, un-American, unchristian, and wicked. The real Spirit-filled evangelist is the greatest admixture of contrasts ever combined in one human being, so far as my reading, observation and personal acquaintance can gauge. He has the dauntless courage of a thousand brave men and the sympathy and tenderness of the sweetest woman. He is the diagnostician, studying the pathology of the pandemics, endemics and epidemics of mankind morally and spiritually. He is the surgeon, driving the scalpel through the diseased parts, causing excruciating pain to the one in whom he drives the instrument. But he is in the next moment the soft-handed, sweet-voiced nurse, administering balms and tonics to the suffering one. He never gives a thorn without a rose: he never gives honeycomb without honey. He never hurts a man but for the purpose of tearing off the mask and allowing the man to see himself as God sees him. To him the pulpit is no prison cell in which to palaver, palliate and pander. He has no fear of poignant persecution, no bow to make before a reprobate taskmaster ruling a degenerated company of pulpit puppets with a rod of gold. While some pastors deal in painted fire, the true evangelist deals in real fire. Irrevocable convictions sweep him into a relentless warfare against all sham, superficiality and sin!

There are a few of us who are hounded by whisky newspapers, lied about by the baser element, and maligned and ridiculed by backboneless pastors who cannot conduct an intelligent or a successful evangelistic campaign. The charge of the "mercenary spirit" is unjust. One of my friends—an evangelist—refused an offer of $30,000 last summer for lecture work covering less than two months' time. His name is Billy Sunday.

The "padded report" proposition is as false as it is impossible in the work of the true evangelist. When I give an invitation for people who know they are not right morally and spiritually to come forward, kneel in prayer, and clean up, then rise and confess Jesus Christ as their Saviour; and 4,400 accept the invitation, and 700 church members come along with the rest, and some of the members confess to me, when seeking advice, almost every crime in the category of crookedness, it is extremely bad taste for some preachers, under whose diluted Gospel these sins have been committed, and whose preaching has not produced conviction, to accuse the evangelists of claiming church members as converts. It is commonly accepted by Greek and Hebrew scholars that a man may be "converted" five hundred times, but regenerated only once.

The converts of the evangelist will "hold out" as long as the converts of the pastor, and their reports will stand as much investigation as any statistics on earth.

God give us pastors and evangelists who live and preach Christ's Gospel, who fight a common enemy.

Yours in the fight,
FRENCH E. OLIVER.

crucified the Lord of glory. For it is written that "there shall come in the last days scoffers, walking after their own lusts, and saying, Where is the promise of his coming? for since the fathers fell asleep, all things continue as they were from the beginning of the creation?" (II Peter 3: 3-4.) Let men then scoff, if they choose, at the second coming of Christ; it is for us who believe the Word to wait patiently for our Lord's return from heaven, just as "the husbandman waiteth for the precious fruit of the earth, and hath long patience for it, until he receive the early and latter rain."

We do not know when our Lord may come, but we do know he will come. "Of that day and that hour," says our Lord, "knoweth no man, no, not the angels which are in heaven, neither the Son, but the Father." Notwithstanding this, men have set times and seasons for our Lord's return, thereby bringing into disrepute this most precious truth. If we have this expectancy of his imminent return, we shall "watch and pray," remembering it was he who said, "At such an hour as ye think not the Son of Man cometh." "Surely I come quickly" is the last promise of our ascended Lord.

So far as we know, there is no reason why he should delay his coming. There is nothing, so far as we can see, to cause him to tarry within the veil. The times are ripe for his return. And the world, as never before, needs its King. This, of course, could have been said in every age since our Lord promised his return. For it is the purpose of God that his people should always have the expectancy of the immediate return of the Lord, and so prophecy and history unfold in concentric circles. Every day, however, that passes brings his coming nearer. "Yet a little while and he that shall come will come, and will not tarry" (Heb. 10: 37).

And what a day that will be when the King comes back again! Then they will "bring forth the royal diadem and crown him Lord of all." No longer shall it be said that "he is despised and rejected of men," for "at the name of Jesus every knee shall bow and every tongue shall confess that Jesus Christ is Lord, to the glory of God the Father" (Phil. 2: 10-11).

Then this old earth, which so freely drank his blood and has borne so long the marks and scars of sin, groaning and travailing in pain, "shall be delivered from the bondage of corruption into the glorious liberty of the children of God" (Rom. 8: 21-22). Responding to his presence, "the desert shall rejoice and blossom as the rose" (Isa. 35: 1). "Instead of the thorn shall come up the fir tree and instead of the brier shall come up the myrtle tree" (Isa. 55: 13). And there shall be nothing to hurt nor destroy, for "the earth shall be full of the knowledge of the Lord as the waters cover the sea" (Isa. 11: 9).

Then "the god of this age" shall be dethroned and the world shall have its rightful and lawful King to reign over it. Instead of the prince of the power of the air, the Prince of Peace shall reign, and his sway shall be absolute and powerful. The golden age will have dawned, and the tangled skein of this world's affairs shall be unraveled. For David's greater Son will have recrossed the Jordan and ascended his throne. "In that day shall ye say, Praise the Lord, proclaim his name, declare his doings among the people, make mention that his name is exalted" (Isa. 12: 4).

"Why then say ye never a word about bringing back the King?"

Nothing is said of masses for the repose of a soul in view of approaching death or of any successor to Peter's office. Neither epistle contains a word about the "adoration" of the Virgin Mary, the invocation or intercession of "saints," the infallibility of either the church or its earthly head, or the temporal power. The only passage containing directions for church affairs is I Peter 5: 1-5. There he addresses "the ancients" (Douay Version) mentioning that he is "also an ancient" (with no apparent suggestion of authority except as being one of a general company)—both the Revised and the Standard Versions give the Greek word as "fellow elder"—and telling them to "feed the flock of God." "Neither as lording it over the clergy" (Douay Version). The King James Version renders this "neither as being lords over God's heritage"—quite a different thing.

S. R., Seneca, S. D. In the parable of Dives and Lazarus (Luke 16: 27, 28) it is clearly shown that memory of the earthly state continues after death.

D. C. B., Claremont, N. H. "Prehistoric" refers to the vague period antecedent to the time of written history. In a further sense, it refers to the quaternary period. By "prehistoric peoples" we commonly understand the ancestors of the historic races, and more especially of the Aryan nations. Thus, in certain caverns in Europe belonging to the Stone Age, fossil remains of human beings have been found which are assigned to the prehistoric period. All speculations concerning their character, condition and surroundings are mere conjecture.

J. B., Seneca, S. D. The only record we have of the repopulation of the world after the flood is that found in Genesis, ninth, tenth and eleventh chapters.

Subscriber, Detroit, Mich. Do you think a person who is a strict Christian and is trying to live a good life, but who feels timid about speaking personally to the unsaved about salvation, will be lost? The person referred to tries to exert a good influence on all people, but is naturally timid and not gifted in debating questions with others.

People are apt to approach this problem of "personal work" from the wrong point of view. We do not do this sort of work to save our own souls, but to save the souls of others. And to be successful in it we must have an intense desire to win souls for Christ, we must love him so much that we shall be anxious to please him by trying to save those for whom he died. Loving him supremely we shall love all men, and do all we can to save everybody. But our own salvation and peace depend not upon our service and sacrifice, but upon our faith in the sacrifice of Christ. If we are not careful we keep slipping back into the heresy of "salvation by works." Of course we must promise to obey God when he makes a duty clear, but what saves us is not our promises to him, but his promises to us. Young Christians are very often puzzled sorely by this same problem that is bothering you. The way out of the difficulty is to trust Christ fully to cleanse your heart and baptize you with the Holy Spirit for service. He does not ask us to do unreasonable things. Work done under pressure of condemnation and bondage is not likely to do much good. The unsaved are not apt to be won by a joyless, burdensome testimony. The message that wins others is the testimony that Christ has forgiven our sins, cleansed our hearts and filled us with joy and love.

Friend, Vincennes, Ind. Tobacco-chewing is a vulgar habit, and certainly does not add to ministerial dignity, besides setting a very poor example.

J. K., Selma, Miss. 1. "Transfiguration" signifies a change of form or appearance. The forms of Moses and Elijah, when they appeared on the Mount, were spiritualized. Luke 9: 31 speaks of the subject of their converse. Some commentators hold that both Moses and Elijah were honored with an anticipatory resurrection, which would seem to be borne out by the fact of their presence at the transfiguration. 2. John 11: 48 (last clause) expresses the fear of the Pharisees that the popular enthusiasm over Jesus and his miracles would produce a revolution, which would precipitate action by the Roman power that might result in the entire Jewish nation being extinguished. The whole passage is a potent testimony from his bitterest enemies to the reality of Christ's miracles and their resistless effect upon the minds of the people.

J. K. Selma, Miss. 1. Mark 13: 20 is to be read in connection with other passages from verse 14 to verse 23. It is a description of the persecutions that are to precede the Second Coming. This chapter began with the prediction of the destruction of the temple and gradually developed into the further prophetic vision of the final persecution, which was to be so terrible that, save for the divine intervention,

FLY TO PIECES

The Effect of Coffee on Highly Organized People

"I have been a coffee user for years, and about two years ago got into a very serious condition of dyspepsia and indigestion. It seemed to me I would fly to pieces. I was so nervous that at the least noise I was distressed, and many times could not straighten myself up because of the pain."

Tea is just as injurious, because it contains caffeine, the same drug found in coffee.

"My physician told me I must not eat any heavy or strong food and ordered a diet, giving me some medicine. I followed directions carefully, but kept on using coffee and did not get any better.

"Last winter my husband, who was away on business, had Postum served to him in the family where he boarded. He liked it so well that when he came home he brought some with him. We began using it and I found it most excellent.

"While I drank it my stomach never bothered me in the least, and I got over my nervous troubles. When the Postum was gone we returned to coffee, then my stomach began to hurt me as before and the nervous conditions came on again.

"That showed me exactly what was the cause of the whole trouble, so I quit drinking coffee altogether and kept on using Postum. The old troubles left again and have never returned."

"There's a reason," and it is explained in the little book, "The Road to Wellville," in pkgs.

no human life would be spared by the forces of Antichrist. 2. The passage in Gen. 1: 26, which states that man was made in the image of his Maker, refers not to his bodily form, but his moral and spiritual dispositions, his "original righteousness." See Eccles. 7: 29. He was created "perfect," and the new creation and rebirth, through divine grace, affect his restoration. See Col. 3: 10; Eph. 4: 24. 3. There is no foundation whatsoever in any Bible passage for the doctrine of purgatory.

L. L. J., Fredonia, Ind. It is not true that any part of an audience with the Pope consists in ascending a stairway on hands and knees. But an article appeared in the New York Tribune, May 30, 1886, upon a "volume of souvenirs" from the pen of M. des Houx, who had been for five years editor of the Journal de Rome, the official organ of the Vatican. In this article M. des Houx thus describes the procedure upon entering the presence of Pope Leo XIII, and which presumably remains the same to-day: "Entering the room the Pope is found seated in an arm chair, and as soon as he raises his hand in benediction the visitor falls on his knees once near the door, the second time in the middle of the room, and the third time immediately in front of the Holy Father, who extends his foot for the visitor to kiss. Then the visitor rises and remains standing during the interview. . . . When he [the Pope] motions that the audience is at an end, the foot is again kissed whilst he is in the act of pronouncing the benediction, and then one has to back out, making exactly the same genuflections as on entering."

J. L. B., Batavia, N. Y. Can you explain why all the Protestant churches do not observe Good Friday as well as Easter? Many Christians also would be glad to have services on Christmas morning. Could it be brought about?

The observance of all these special days has been a slow growth on the part of the American churches. There was a very strong objection to the custom on the part of the early Puritans, and many individuals and some denominations still feel this disinclination to recognize these special occasions. Gradually, however, this prejudice is being overcome. But individual Protestant churches will always be left free to observe them or not as they choose. Two reasons may be suggested why the observance of Easter has spread more widely and rapidly than that of Good Friday. Easter was the great New Testament day, the first of that series of Lord's days which gradually came to assume the place of the Jewish Sabbath. Also the fact that Friday is a week-day has made its observance more difficult and hence less general. The spirit of mirth that has characterized Christmas has lessened the ecclesiastical observance of the day, but an hour of worship is surely a most fitting and delightful feature of this glad holiday.

W. M., Everett, Wash. We hear conflicting statements as to the color of the Red Sea. Has the water actually a red tinge? Why was the sea named Red?

The waters of the Red Sea are of a deep blue color. But there are many coral reefs on the shores of the sea, on its bottom and rising in islands above the surface of the water. This fact is thought to account for its ancient name. Other reasons given are the reflection in its waters of the reddish tinge of the Edomite and Arabian Mountains, and, occasionally, of the red eastern sky.

Cross Section Diamond Safety Tread Tire

It's the extra air-room that does the work. The more air-room in your tires means more resiliency, and a greater ability of the tire to absorb the shock of the road, insuring more comfort for you and your passengers—more comfort for your tires.

This more air-room tire does the work easily and will not strain under road usage. The extra air-room is gained for you without lessening the thickness of the tread or weakening the side walls.

You can now get Diamond (No-Clinch) Tires made of Vitalized Rubber, with Perfect 3-Point Rim Contact, No-Pinch Safety Flap for inner tube protection, and, if you wish the famous Safety (Squeegee) Tread—at any of the

A New Hernial Appliance

This Invention Holds More Firmly, Comfortably and Surely Than Any Truss.

Sent on Trial

The new Brooks Appliance for rupture so thoroughly meets every test and every requirement that it is being ordered by the U. S. War Department and is rapidly coming to be recognized as the most reliable, comfortable and dependable support ever invented. The Brooks Appliance is fitted with an Automatic Air Cushion which follows every movement of the body, always covers the ruptured spot and is always where it should be to do the most good. The part of the cushion which comes in contact with the skin is soft, pliable gum rubber. It clings closely, so that irritation and slipping is impossible, and yet it is cool and comfortable because of the constant circulation of air through it. It is simple of construction, so there is nothing to get out of order—nothing that can break.

We are selling this Appliance under a positive guarantee of money refunded if not satisfactory. We do not guarantee to cure any more than any doctor will guarantee to cure his patient. We do guarantee to furnish a perfect fitting Appliance, one that will give the wearer solid comfort and retain the protrusion at all times and under all circumstances.

The purchaser is the sole judge and if for any reason whatever (which does not have to be furnished us) it is returned, the price paid will be refunded in full.

Earliest of all, will grow in North or South, an interesting novelty for your garden. Order Quick For This Offer Will Not Appear Again. Mills Seed House Dept. 15, Rose Hill, N. Y.

This wonderful EVERBEARING Tree Raspberry is a valuable variety; nothing like it grows; a strong handsome bush literally loaded with berries and should be grown in every garden in the country. It yields a crop of fruit the same summer and fall from plants set in April or May. Plants set in April, gave ripe fruit July 4th and continued to produce ripe berries until the end of October. Berries are large and beautiful, as large as the largest Red Raspberries, brilliant crimson color, firm, and fine flavor. The plants are perfectly hardy even in the coldest regions and do well on any soil. A dozen plants are worth several dollars in any garden, and we want every reader of this paper to try them. Strong plants which we guarantee will fruit this summer, now ready to set in Garden, 15c each — 3 for 30c — 12 for $1.00, postpaid.

Has Made Its Way by the Way It's Made

WHEN we began marketing the International Commercial Car six years ago the one idea uppermost was to sell a useful car. That meant a car for country roads that would safely carry a reasonable load, always get there and back, and last long enough to be very profitable.

Some of those first cars are still doing an honest day's work every day. All of them paid for themselves. None of them was so efficient as the car we sell today. When you begin to think of trips to town as a sort of nuisance, what with the currying and hitching and the valuable time it takes, that is the time to think of buying the car that has made its way by the way it's made—an

Simple, sure, powerful, it climbs hills, goes through mud-holes and sandy stretches, anywhere a team can travel, at any speed from 3 to 18 miles an hour. You make the trips you used to neglect, because you did not want to take the horses from their work. It can be used in all seasons when the road is passable to horses. The wheels are high enough to give ample road clearance. Solid tires give good traction and eliminate many tire troubles. The engine is simple. Transmission is direct. Brakes are powerful. Bearings are strong. A single lever controls the car. The ignition system is way ahead of that usually found on cars selling for the same price. Other features put it in a class by itself for all round efficiency and economy.

Learn what an International Commercial Car will add to your income and pleasures. Write for catalogues and any information desired.

OUR MAIL-BAG

Questions and Answers

J. M. B., Worcester, Mass. Does our Lord in his words about offenses (Matt. 5: 23, 24) mean that the wronged person or the person who has done the wrong must take the first step toward reconciliation?

It would seem to have been quarrels that our Lord had in mind rather than injuries. The brother who has aught against you appears to indicate a grudge, or a debt, as the following verses suggest. In any case there is to be no quarrel. There must be reconciliation first. In Matt. 18: 15 it is advised that the wronged person is to make the first advances. Usually, the person who has suffered the wrong is the one most likely to offer reconciliation. No one nourishes ill-feeling so strongly as the man who has done another a wrong. He cannot forgive himself, nor the man he has injured.

J. R. 1. It is customary, as a tribute of respect and an act of reverence, for men to take off their hats during the committal service at a funeral, when the body is lowered into the grave. 2. The giving of tracts is an effective method of spreading the Gospel truth and has won many souls. 3. "I. H. S." are the initials of Jesus Hominum Salvator (Jesus, Saviour of Men). 4. The tonsure, or shaving of the crown, is the distinguishing mark of the Roman priesthood, and was introduced at the end of the fifth century. It is a token of penance and humility. In the early Christian Church, nothing was known of such a custom among the clergy, though some lay penitents shaved their crowns. Jerome, Ambrose and others of prominence denounced the practice as a ceremony of heathen priests. When the Roman Church introduced it, it was called "the tonsure of Peter."

D. R. P., Windham, Texas. Who is the porter spoken of in John 10: 3?

The porter is the doorkeeper or keeper of the gate, who is under the orders of Him to whom the sheep belong and knowing the voice of the divine Shepherd he opens without hesitation. No more specific interpretation can be given to the allusion than this. We are not familiar with the book you mention, but doubtless you can procure it through any general bookseller.

E. S. H., Marquette, Neb. 1. Many churches now devote Sunday evening to a brief sermon, giving up a large part of the time to sacred song. This is done for the purpose of attracting an audience. It is well, however, that no service should be without some adequate presentation of the Gospel, either in sermon or address. 2. Sunday traveling is justifiable only when it becomes an act of necessity or when one is bound on a mission of mercy. Train traveling for pleasure does not come under this category; but if you live any considerable distance from church and have no other means of getting there it would become a necessity.

Jessie B., Germantown, Pa. Who first gave the names of the days of the week?

The names of days are derived from pagan deities or natural objects of worship to which each day was dedicated. Sunday, Sun's day; Monday, Moon's day; Tuesday, Tiu's day (a Saxon god); Wednesday, Woden's day (a Saxon god); Thursday, Thor's day (Thor was worshiped by the Scandinavian nations); Friday, Freya's day (the Scandinavian Venus); Saturday, Saturn's day.

Reader, Yonkers, N. Y. Is it wrong to avoid paying carfare for a child over five when the conductor does not ask for it, or to continue to pay half-fare for a child who is past the prescribed age? If this has been done in the past should restitution be made, when it would be difficult to determine the amount involved?

The laws of right and wrong are really very simple if we face them squarely. It is just as wrong to defraud a company as an individual. When the company makes positive rules for its passenger service and these rules are known, they should be complied with. By neglecting to pay half fare for a five-year-old child or full fare for a child of twelve, or whatever the age may be, the passenger virtually misstates the child's age. No actual words are required to make a falsehood. While one should be strict in such matters whatever the cost, it is not likely that the heavenly Father will allow any one to suffer from being careful to be honest. As to restitution, it would seem to be the fair and wise course to make it. Firms and municipalities are constantly receiving "conscience money" in this way, and there is little disposition to ridicule the spirit which prompts such self-sacrifice. If the amount is unknown all that could be required is an honest effort to estimate it as accurately as possible.

W. O. S. 1. While the sons of wealthy men have many advantages, in point of education and opportunities, it is nevertheless true that a very large proportion of those at the front in public affairs have sprung from very humble stock. Inherited wealth is frequently disastrous to individual ambition, while on the other hand the children of comparatively poor parents are compelled from force of circumstances to make the most of every opportunity. 2. The piling up of great fortunes is not a true criterion of success. Real success consists in the development of character, the following out of noble ideals and the choice of a life of honorable usefulness, whether in business or in the public service. It is doubtless true that a considerable majority of those now at the front of public affairs, in this country at least, can look back to humble beginnings.

Mrs. H. C., Portland, Ohio. In order to have a spiritual church, it is essential that there should be spiritually-minded leaders, men of ripe Christian experience and earnest faith, who can communicate their own enthusiasm for service and soul-winning to their fellow members. The true spiritual church is an active, working church, where the congregation vie with each other not merely in living up to their privileges in the matter of church attendance, but in active personal effort in their neighborhood, drawing others under the influence of the Gospel and organizing themselves for works of charity and kindness. An inactive church cannot have spiritual growth. The church should be directly connected with the work of home and foreign missions, hospital and sick visitation, shepherding of the children, keeping up the Sunday school and doing good at every opportunity. Neglect of prayer-meetings marks a decline of spirituality in a church which no amount of social attractions will repair. The ideal church is one in which every member has a share in the general activities of the organization.

C. F. G., Saginaw, Mich. There can be temptation without desire. The sin does not consist in the temptation itself, but in inviting it, or yielding to it. Jesus himself was tempted "in all things as we are; yet without sin." Doubtless Satan, in the passage to which you refer, knew that Jesus had been fasting and so tried to tempt him to turn stones into bread. Again, believing that the desire for worldly power might influence him, he tried to tempt him by offering him the dominion of the whole earth, but again failed. It is not strictly correct to say that one cannot be tempted unless he has wrong desires. The tempter is always ready with his lures; but if we rebuke our own desires and repel the temptation, asking divine strength to do this, the danger will pass. After conversion comes regeneration, and we are enabled to overcome sin. We may still be conscious of a struggle within, but we get strength to stand firm against it. The truly converted man is no longer the slave or bondman of sin, but is kept day by day from its power ever again having dominion over him.

Reader, Buffalo, N. Y. Our Christian Endeavor Society has some money for Christian work. How can it be used to best advantage?

There are several ways, but a few suggestions may be sufficient: 1. You might support, or help to support, a native Christian worker in China, Africa, India, or Japan—a splendid way of doing missionary substitute duty, where you cannot go personally to the field. 2. You might help to train a native heathen child in a Christian mission school. 3. You might give welcome help to some white missionary in his or her own special field in heathen lands. Or, best of all because most urgent just at this time, you might devote it to the relief of the destitute flood sufferers in Ohio, where hundreds of thousands are homeless and in utter want. Any sums sent to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD for this purpose will be forwarded to the Relief Committee in Dayton.

Mrs. S. S., Atherton, Vt. See I Cor. 15: 36-57 for the description of the "natural body" and the "spiritual body." An ancient writer, in giving the authorship of the various passages in the Apostles' Creed, attributes to Jude (the brother of James) the clause relating to "the resurrection of the body." It is now held by many authorities, however, that the Creed is not of earlier date than the fourth century. Neither Luke nor any ecclesiastical writer during the first three centuries makes mention of any assembly of the apostles for the purpose of formulating a creed.

F. L., Capac, Mich. 1. In speaking to the pastor of one's church what is the proper form of address? Should one say "Brother," "Elder," "Doctor," or use some similar title? 2. Does the sun always stand directly over the equator? Are the days and nights always the same length there—twelve hours each? A friend told me that in Florida the sun was at times so far north at noon that one's body cast no shadow. Is this an error or correct? 3. Is there any change of seasons at the equator?

1. Different denominations and groups follow different customs in addressing clergymen. There is no other standard except the usage of the denomination. "Doctor," however, should not be used unless the clergyman has a doctor's degree. There is a growing tendency to prefer the simple terms like "Mr." or, in many circles, "Brother." It is always incorrect to use the word "Reverend" alone as a title. The term "Rev." can be used only in connection with some other title, like Dr. or Mr., or with the initials. 2. The sun does not always stand directly over the equator. The direct rays reach as far north as the Tropic of Cancer in summer and as far south as the Tropic of Capricorn in winter. The days and nights at the equator are always equal. The Tropic of Cancer passes so near Florida that in the southern part of that State at midsummer there is no appreciable shadow of a vertical line at noon. 3. There is no change of season at the equator, except those caused by conditions of rainfall and winds.

Mrs. A. W. McV., Princeton, Fla. The Bible does not state that Noah was 120 years in building the ark. The passage in Gen. 6: 3 is variously interpreted as meaning that the duration of human life would be shortened, or also that the period stated would be further allowed as a respite—an opportunity for repentance failing which the divine presence (the Shechinah which had hitherto continued at the gate of Eden, as some commentators believe to be meant) would be withdrawn from the world on account of its wickedness.

A. E. M., Stanardsville, Va. It is a good rule, when you are in doubt about a thing, to let it alone. Promiscuous dancing has led many to ruin, and for the sake of example, if for no other reason, it should be avoided. The same applies to card-playing. Cards are the gambler's implements.

Regular Subscriber, Troy, N. Y. 1. General Booth at his death left a comparatively small estate. 2. Sodom was a small but populous country, and according to Josephus (Antiquities chapter 9, book 1) was rich and flourishing, with five kings controlling its affairs and with a certain degree of ancient civilization. Doubtless they were idolaters, but they had an opportunity, through the presence of Lot and his household, of knowing the true God. In chapter 11 book 1 of the Antiquities the historian tells of their great wealth and pride, their injustice toward men, their impiety and peculiar vices. So persistent were they in wickedness that the overthrow of their chief city and the destruction of the people came upon them as a punishment.

G. S. B. There are no data in the Bible from which to answer your questions nor in any other book as far as we know. The time our first parents spent in the Garden of Eden is not stated, and speculation on the subject is useless. The main idea is that man was created perfect and sinless, and remained for an indefinite period in that state, until he fell through temptation. There are many traditions among the Jewish rabbis and Arabians concerning Adam, but they are of little value and add nothing essential to the simple story in Genesis.

A General View of the Captured City of Adrianople

AFTER a siege of more than five months Adrianople was taken by storm on March 26 by the Bulgarians and Servians. The way to Constantinople now lies open and, for all practical purposes, the Turkish power disappears from Europe. The city was surrounded by a ring of over forty forts. The garrison fought throughout with the dogged valor of their race when on the defensive, and made several brilliant sorties, during one of which Essad Pasha not only defeated a Servian column, but captured 400 carts of provisions. The fall of the city was extremely spectacular, every feature of modern warfare being exhibited in a dramatic way—terrific bombardment by heavy guns, vigorous attacks upon the defending forces outside the walls, and furious bayonet charges and hand-to-hand fighting in the final assault upon the city itself, after barracks, powder magazines, military depots and stores had been fired by the Turks. This last act started many fires which would have destroyed the whole city had not the conflagration been stopped by the victors. Heavy losses were sustained in the assault, two whole regiments, for instance—one Servian and one Bulgarian—being blown up by mines.

CYCLONE, FLOOD AND FIRE IN MIDDLE WEST

HUNDREDS OF THOUSANDS HOMELESS, OVER 1,000 KILLED AND MILLIONS OF DOLLARS' WORTH OF PROPERTY DESTROYED. OMAHA, NEB., AND DAYTON, OHIO, THE CENTERS OF DEVASTATION

THE worst catastrophes in our national history have been equaled if not entirely overshadowed by the sequence of disasters that has followed upon Nebraska, Indiana and Ohio. Cyclone, tornado, flood and fire wrought their awful devastation with such appalling speed that there was no way of escape. On the morning of March 22 a cyclonic storm started in Utah and swept eastward. It whirled across the plains to the Mississippi Valley, where it was joined by a tornado from the South. Together they fell upon Omaha, Neb., on Easter afternoon and tore a great gash of destruction through the very heart of the residence district of the city from southwest to northeast. The crash of the storm came almost without warning. One of the press despatches said:

"It swept down on the city with a deafening roar, enveloping everything in its path in blinding darkness, a darkness filled with flying dust particles and heavy débris, the ruin of all that had lain in its course. It moved with a speed which no machine of man's devising could equal and with a force against which no work of man could stand.

"Houses were lifted bodily from their foundations, juggled about in the vortex of the funnel, and tossed out of the storm's path to fall into heaps of shattered brickwork and masonry and piles of splintered timbers. Trees and shrubs were torn from the ground, and whirled through the blackness. And with this madly whirling wreckage were flung men, women and children, spun about like leaves before an autumn breeze, and dropped finally to the ground, crushed and dead. It swept everything before it and left behind it only wreckage, in which fires burst out.

"Finally, the funnel-like cloud passed over the bluffs high above the Missouri River, demolished the Missouri Pacific roundhouse, leveled the trestle of the Illinois Central over Carter Lake, and, dashing beyond the bluffs, disappeared. In its wake the storm left a clean swath through the city, a swath varying from three to seven blocks in width and twenty-four blocks long, in which there was nothing but ruin."

For fear of danger to both life and property the current was cut off from all the electric wires which had been blown down. Even in spite of this precaution fires broke out in many parts of the storm-swept section, and vast crowds collected from the other parts of the city. Rescue work was quickly organized, but it was necessarily slow because carried on by lantern light only and because of the blockaded condition of the streets. Volunteers were enlisted and these immediately began a search for the dead and injured and to assist the fire department in controlling the fires. The crowd soon became so great that the police were powerless to prevent their entering upon the stricken area, and it was necessary to secure Federal troops from Fort Omaha to preserve order.

Messages of sympathy and offers of aid were rushed from all over America as soon as the news of the disaster became generally known. The city council immediately voted $25,000 for relief work and an equal sum was subscribed by well-to-do citizens. The offers of aid from outside were declined, as Governor Morehead of Nebraska and Mayor Dahlman of Omaha were confident that the State would be able to look after all of those who had been injured or whose property had been destroyed.

It was not until two days later that the amount of financial loss and the full number of the dead and injured was known. Then the statement was made that property worth $5,000,000 had been destroyed and in the city and its suburbs 152 people had been killed and about 350 injured. It was, of course, impossible that such destruction as this could take place and so many lives be lost without bringing to light many pathetic and heartrending stories of heroism and devotion. Mabel Newman, a young girl, guarding the body of her mother. She sobbingly told her story of the storm.

"Mother was ill and confined to a room on the second floor of our home, 422 Dewey Avenue," she said. "When the wind hit the house it toppled over as if built of pasteboard. Mother and myself were buried in the wreckage. As soon as I could pull myself from the débris, I began a search for her. Board after board I lifted; I tugged and pulled at them until my hands were cut and bleeding. Finally I reached her. I bent down to raise her, but she was dead."

One man who, though thrown about and bruised by the first shock of the storm, managed to get his family into the cellar before their house was swept away, said:

"It seemed as if the whole city was afire. Then I lifted my wife and children out and went down the street, joining scores of my unfortunate neighbors. We had lost our all, but were thankful for our lives."

"The strife is o'er, the battle done; the victory of life is won," sang Cassius Shimer, a tenor, at the Easter service in McCabe Methodist Church on Sunday morning. Mr. Shimer was killed when the tornado destroyed his home.

The storm as it swept northeast caused the most torrential rains that have ever visited the States of Indiana and Ohio. Press reports mentioned heavy rains in the Middle West but there had been no anticipation of grave danger when a telegraph operator in the city of Dayton, Ohio, broke off in the middle of a long message and said "Good-by, the levee has broken." Within half an hour Dayton was isolated from the rest of the world by a mighty flood which swept down the Miami River Valley from Tarlton Reservoir.

For the next two days the outside world learned only meager details and even these were much distorted because it was impossible for any one to get to the real center of the disaster. Torrents from eight to twenty feet in depth rushed through the streets at such speed that it was impossible to handle rowboats.

In the downtown section of the city the flood came so suddenly that thousands were marooned in hotels and business buildings where they had to remain, in many instances without food or drinking water and in every case without heat for almost two days. The telephone exchange of the city was put completely out of commission, and only a single thread of communication remained with Columbus. One telephone operator stuck to his post and by rigging up an impromptu battery managed to send messages to the outside world.

While the flood was still at its height fires broke out in the business section of the city and swept several blocks down to the waterline. Until the floods abated sufficiently for rescue parties to penetrate this section it was impossible to tell just what buildings had been burned, for they could not get within two miles of the fires. Three days after the flood was at its height the outside aid which was rushed in reached the stricken city. Militia troops had been sent from Columbus and a relief trainload of supplies was distributed. As the waters went down, the desolation of the city was appalling. One of the press representatives who reached the scene as soon as it was possible, said: "When I arrived the means of rescue had been increased by several hundred flat-bottomed boats which had been made by the rescuing organizations. The flood victims were then being brought to dry land by hundreds. There was no noise. At the edge of the flood the only sound was the trickle of water running a few inches deep over the sidewalks, and the incessant wail of a starving cat.

"At the foot of a cross street was a broad torrent of muddy water the distance of two blocks across. Here a rescue station had been established. Rowboats were landing women, thinly dressed, wet, and so exhausted from exposure that they could not stand alone."

The rescue work was carried on as rapidly as the water decreased in violence and made it possible for the boats to reach the sections which were worst affected. The rescuers worked all Wednesday night and on Thursday their numbers were increased by hundreds of volunteers. Rowboats were rushed into the flooded streets as early as possible, carrying food and drinking water to the survivors in the half-submerged houses. These boats, because of the urgency of their work, took away to the relief stations only the women and children, who would have had to remain standing in the icy-cold water if they had been left for boats which were to come later.

One of the first moves necessary on the part of the military authorities was to guard the deserted property in the business district and prevent looting. Shortly after noon on Thursday martial law was established and the militiamen patrolled the streets and guarded the approaches to that part of the flooded district where the receding waters were baring all the horror they had wrought. Thieves had begun to pillage the abandoned homes and stores and to rob men and women in the streets.

WORKING TO SAVE THE DIKE THAT GUARDED A TOWN IN THE FLOODED DISTRICT

This situation had become so serious when the troops arrived that Colonel Charles Zimmerman, of the Fifth Regiment of Cleveland, the officer in command, gave orders to his men to shoot the looters at sight. The same press representative who was quoted above gives the following account of scenes in Dayton the first morning that real investigation and final search for the dead was possible:

"A woman with haggard face stood in the débris of a wrecked porch and screamed excitedly to the crowd at the corner. They surrounded a coatless man who had been caught running, who, some one said, had tried to loot the house where the woman stood in the wreckage of her front porch. A rope was about the prisoner's neck, when a policeman shoved his way through and turned the man's assailants back with drawn revolver. The policeman was turning the man over to a militiaman who ran up gun in hand when another woman came sobbing up the street, wading through mud which was above her knees. She had pulled away the wreckage at the door of her home three houses away and found the drowned body of her husband. He had gone back to the house after carrying one of their children to safety, and had been unable to escape. She thought that the body of their second child whom he had sought to save was still in the house, and she had come for help in her search.

"A few doors away, as we hurried on, we saw the body of a woman in a blue dress huddled in a fence corner where the receding flood had left it, half buried in drift. A man who wandered up from deserted Second Street said he had just found the bodies of an aged man and woman, his neighbors, in their three-room cottage. He pointed directions vaguely down through the litter of houses and passed on, looking for his own wife, whom he had not seen since the hour the flood wave rushed down upon their home. Two militiamen and a silent, hatless man climbed over the wreckage in the yards on one side of the street, looking for the dead. In the doorway of a one-story brick cottage an old dog lay without moving, too weak from cold to eat the bread some rescuer had left before his paws. It was in this one-story house that the bodies of the two old people, locked in each other's arms, were found. How the dog escaped drowning was unexplained.

"Many who were rescued after forty-eight hours of exposure to rain and chill were thinly dressed or without coats. Blankets were given to them. Men walking in blankets were common on the streets."

Stations for the supply of relief, first only in the form of the most immediate need, food, were established as soon as the arrangements could be made. Large signs which read, "Free Food. Ask for it." were posted at each of these places and the men and women whom the flood had reduced to destitution formed lines blocks in length waiting for the distribution of provisions. The naval militiamen and life-saving crews from St. Louis were assigned to West Dayton, while in that section of the city the water was still running deep. As it became possible to get boats through the worst parts of the flood very different attitudes were discovered among those marooned. In one case the relief workers were startled by hearing shots in the upper floor of a nearby house. Upon investigation they found a man who said, "Oh, no, there is nothing particular wrong, I was just amusing myself shooting rats as they came upstairs. By the way, when are you going to take me out of this?" Over in the foreign sections of the city and in some of the poorer districts the attitude of the marooned was not so cheerful. There was a great deal of complaining and fault-finding done when the rescue boats on their first trips left food but took none to dry land. As a motor boat passed beneath the second floor of a partly submerged house a man leaned out and threatened to shoot its occupants unless they took off his wife and a baby that had been born the day before while the flood was at its height.

Camps have been established in several places in the Riverdale, North Dayton and West Dayton sections of the city. There the army tents which the Federal Government supplied have been set up and homeless families are occupying them. The most conservative estimates place the number of destitute survivors at 250,000 for the entire State, and 50,000 for the city of Dayton. The need during the next few weeks will be very great. Illness from exposure is already evident and medical aid must be provided. The greatest need is for money which can be expended for the immediate purchase of food supplies, clothing and blankets. As many of our readers are now aware, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD'S first carload of food supplies for the Ohio sufferers was started west from New York at 10 P.M. on March 27, within twenty-four hours after the real situation had become known. It went via the New York Central Railroad, which generously gave free transportation.

The need throughout a large section of the State of Ohio is almost as pressing as at Dayton. THE CHRISTIAN HERALD is doing its utmost to forward relief, and we hope that all of our readers will contribute what they may feel able to this fund for the benefit of our own very brothers and sisters who are reduced to homeless destitution. All remittances should be addressed to the Western Flood Relief Fund, CHRISTIAN HERALD, Bible House, New York.

NEW YORK'S EVANGELISTIC RALLY

LAST year THE CHRISTIAN HERALD told the story of one of the remarkable cases of conversion brought about through the work of the New York City Evangelistic Committee. It was that of a man who had served a twelve-year prison sentence for murder, who, when first asked if he were a Christian, replied that he was, adding that every morning he prayed to the Madonna to help him and the men who had testified against him at his trial that he might kill them. Through the committee's influence he was led to the better way and the report from him this year is that he is trying to find those men that he may win them to Christ.

This is only one item of the splendid work of the committee which begins now its ninth season of tent, open-air and shop work in New York. The opening rally was held in Carnegie Hall on Tuesday evening, March 18, and was full of enthusiasm and inspiration. Mr. Stephen Baker, chairman of the committee, presided. A chorus of five hundred voices under the leadership of Mr. B. F. Butts rendered anthems, led the song service and the hymns and sang at the close of the service the Hallelujah Chorus from the Messiah. The chief address of the evening was made by G. Campbell Morgan, the great evangelistic preacher who is at present pastor of Westminster Chapel, London.

In his remarks Dr. Morgan said: "The church of God in New York is in business partnership with Jesus Christ, and his business is our business. The Evangelistic Committee Campaign is a channel through which the church of God fulfils its responsibility in this city—a responsbility in the most difficult days, weeks and months of your civic life."

After referring to the immense numbers of foreigners of different nationalities to be found in the city, Dr. Morgan pointed out that the Tent Campaign gives the Gospel to these people in their own tongue, and after declaring that no real work for God in the city could be done until the point of sacrifice was reached by the workers, he appealed to hearers of "grace and refinement and tenderness of heart to alleviate the suffering from sin," and called upon "singers and speakers" to "give to the point of sacrifice."

Dr. Arthur J. Smith, superintendent of the committee's work, gave a brief report of last season's efforts. In 120 centers (in tents, halls, shops, and in the open air) 1,953 meetings were conducted in ten different languages, reaching 421,536 people. Among visible results were: a murderer converted; two boys' clubs and five Bible classes organized; one man preparing for the ministry and one for Y. M. C. A. work; three families united with one church and many children brought into Sunday schools; many foreigners united with the church.

In one center, after six weeks' work, forty-eight Italians sent in a petition for the organization of a church. In Little Italy there has been a tent for five summers. There is now an Italian church of 320 members, with 100 on the waiting list, with a building costing $100,000. The church now has a student in the seminary and has sent out three ordained ministers and one missionary.

PAYING THE COST OF WAR

A CABLEGRAM signed by four leading Americans in Constantinople, including President Gates of Robert College and several missionaries of the American Board, reads as follows:

"Funds Red Cross furnishes inadequate. Increasing need refugees and people. Cold, hunger, sickness will destroy thousands unless prompt relief given. Urgent appeals from interior.

(Signed) "MACULLUM, PEET, RIGGS, GATES."

Thousands of refugees, representing all races, have poured into the cities of Asia Minor from the Balkan States. The horrors of the situation now existing are daily growing more acute. The worst of it is, these people are entirely innocent of any interest in the present war. Writing from Salonica in the war zone, Rev. E. B. Haskell gives a most appealing picture of suffering. "I am drenched, overwhelmed in relief work for the Moslem refugees. Alone in the station, with no missionary or office assistant, it is a terrific strain, but if I let up people will die of hunger. I have a horse to get about with, which is a great help. I have over 7,000 on my own list and the Greek Protestant pastor with whom I work has nearly 4,000; so together we cater to over 11,000 people a day. We give one loaf to four people for twenty-four hours, and sometimes have to give only on the alternate day for lack of bread. People have no fuel to cook with if we give them anything else than ready bread. The situation will ease up some when the bulk of the soldiers now here get away, as we can get more ovens to bake for us if the money comes. Also some refugees will get home. Many of them, however, dare not go because of the evil deeds they have done to non-Moslems in the past. We know we are feeding many murderers and rascals, but it is for God to judge them, not for us."

"One loaf of bread for four people every other day"—that is a narrow line between these thousands and starvation. Cass Arthur Reed, from whom the accompanying photographs were received, describes the pictures as follows: "The first shows refugees in the square in front of the government house just after they have landed in Smyrna from the hospital ship Bahr Ahmar, which brought over two thousand of them from Salonica. The second is of a group of the refugees in the Kestane Bazaar Mosque, where several hundred persons are being given temporary shelter. Men, women and children of all ages are to be seen in these mosques and schools. In the third picture a large group of children, and some others of the refugees in the Kestane Bazaar Mosque, are seen in the yard in front of the mosque. The attempts of the Turkish Government to relieve distress are entirely inadequate."

A SERMON

REV. JOHN P. PETERS*

TEXT: "Son, remember that thou in thy lifetime receivedst thy good things, and likewise Lazarus evil things; but now he is comforted, and thou art tormented." Luke 16: 25

MY TEXT is a very familiar passage from a very familiar parable, a parable which we commonly know as the parable of Dives and Lazarus: the rich man, clothed in purple and fine linen, who fared sumptuously every day; the poor man, covered with sores, laid daily at the rich man's gate, where the dogs licked his sores and where he partook of the crumbs which fell from the rich man's table; then the reverse of the scene hereafter, where the poor man, who had lived in hell in this life, finds himself in heaven; and the rich man, who had lived in heaven in this life, finds himself in hell. And, in answer to the appeal of the rich man to Abraham to send Lazarus down from heaven to hell, to dip the tip of his finger in water and cool his tongue, Abraham says: "Son, remember that thou in thy lifetime receivedst thy good things and likewise Lazarus evil things; but now he is comforted and thou art tormented."

This is the parable of wealth and poverty, which is enacted continually before our eyes and has been through all the ages since Christ spoke those words, even in the Christian church itself. You will find every city divided up into its sections. Here lives Dives, with his magnificent house and abundant space, his plentiful and luxurious food, his rich and costly garments, his expensive amusements and recreations; and here lives Lazarus, a cripple, covered with sores, because of the unsanitary condition of the home in which he and his family are crowded together, and its lack of sunlight; because of the conditions in which he has been brought up; because of poor food; because of the ignorance of the first principles of hygiene on the part of his parents, and because of their vice. Incompetent to earn a wage which will support him, much less give him the comforts and luxuries of life, he depends upon the charity of Dives; a dole of bread here, a bit of church relief there, a trip to the country for the children for a day or a week, a hospital bed when he is sick, an orphan asylum for the little ones when he dies. These are the crumbs which fall from the rich man's table.

Christ came to teach brotherhood among men, that we are all children of one Father in heaven and brothers one of another; that as we enjoy the bounty of our Father's house, the manifold good things that the good God has given all, so we should share as brothers with one another, the strong giving his strength to the weak, the wise his knowledge to the witless.

How May Brotherhood be Realized?

But how are we to realize this brotherhood of man, and what is the part of the church?

The church is a moral agency. It has, through all the ages, held up before man a conception (which is at the root of the idea of brotherhood) which, if realized, would abolish the existing social and industrial evils. It teaches continually the life of love and service as the life of each individual Christian. It reads it from the Bible, it recites it in its liturgies, it preaches it, however imperfectly, in its pulpits, it holds it up to both the outward and the inward eye in the Sacrament of the Eucharist. The church has been tempted at times to attempt to accomplish its purpose through law, and wherever it has made the attempt it has failed. It has become the persecuting church. It must stand behind, as the moral agency, giving life to every earnest effort to realize the ideals of brotherhood, bringing home to each individual soul the real meaning of the teaching of Jesus Christ with regard to the brotherhood of man, and binding together in love and charity those who are striving to reach that goal in their own living and in the life of the community.

Now and then I come across those who are very much startled by such doctrine as this which Jesus teaches in the parable of Dives and Lazarus, or in the story of the rich young man, and I have known teachers of the church who have explained these things away. Indeed, if you turn to your King James Version of the Bible, you will find an admirable instance of the slowness of men to comprehend the real meaning of the teaching of Jesus Christ. This is the way our parable is described in the chapter heading attached to it by the translators of 1607: "the rich glutton and Lazarus the beggar," as though what our Lord condemned was the gluttony of Dives, of which no word is spoken and no hint given.

Absolutely our Lord Jesus Christ taught the fatherhood of God and the brotherhood of man; and if you will translate the conditions of your social life into the conditions of the family, you will best understand both what he meant and also how far we are from the attainment of that ideal.

All Brothers in One House

Fancy for one moment that we Christians of this town are all brothers living in one house. There are six of us, seven of us, eight, nine, ten of us, children of the same parents, living under the same roof. One takes for himself all but one of the rooms in the house for his comfort and pleasure that he may have abundant light and air, plenty of room to move about in; and all the rest are crowded together into one room. This one selects at meals, first, for himself, what he will have, all the choice dainties, helping himself to vastly more than he can eat, in simple wanton luxury; the rest having only what is not good enough for him. This one has more clothes than he can wear, for winter and for summer, for spring and for autumn, for morning and afternoon and evening, for dinner and ball, the theater and the dance; and he has taken so many that there is but small choice left for the rest, who must share what remains between them. What could you think of such a family?

But that is actually the condition in which even we, professing Christians, are living to-day. We need to keep our eyes open to that and to be continually asking ourselves what are we to do? The answer is always the same. When we, with our abundance, come to Jesus and say: "What shall I do to be saved?" his answer is, "Sell all you have and give it to the poor, and come, follow me." Ah! but to put that into actual practice! It does not mean that I am to take everything I own, sell it and scatter the alms right and left among the beggars that I may chance to find in the street, or the poor people whom I can find in the city institutions. It does not mean, as some have interpreted it at various periods in the world's history, that I am to give everything I have to found a church, or a monastery, or a hospital, and then, having divested myself of all wealth, withdraw from the world and devote myself to prayer and meditation. It means the carrying out in the position of life in which you are of that obligation which is the eternal obligation of every follower of Jesus Christ: That I count myself and all I have as God's, to be used in the service of Jesus Christ, which is the service of my fellow men. The detail and method of selling what a man has and giving it to the poor differs in different cases. The principle remains always the same.

We have to move slowly in our advance toward the ideal of brotherhood; not by trying to put some theory into practice, not by compulsion of laws, but first by the development in the individual Christians of a true understanding of Jesus Christ and his teaching, which, expressing itself more and more in their lives, will then express itself more and more in the life of the community, until at last it becomes the universal law, not primarily through legislation, hut through belief and practice.

"One-Room Children"

But there is much that we can do directly and immediately. What is the root of the whole matter with regard to this great inequality between Dives and Lazarus? Why is there a beggar, with his sores, on the one side, and the man or the woman having no need to do any work, living in luxury and idleness, on the other? It is good for neither one. What is the root of the matter?

In certain cities measurements of children have been made for the purpose of following their growth from beginning to end, under differing environment. A certain number of these were one-room children, that is, children of families living in tenements so crowded that there was but one room to the family. Similarly there were two-room children, three-room children, four-room children, and so forth. The difference of home accommodation marked itself in the weight and height of the children from start to finish. Investigation showed that the children, crowded and herded together in small living space, are handicapped in the contest of life; they are being prepared to be the invalids, the ineffectives, the degenerates. Not only are they deprived to a certain greater or lesser extent of the joy of life, they are also made a burden to the community. Dark rooms, lack of space, lack of sunlight, lack of nutrition—those are the things which breed tuberculosis, sweeping off men and women and growing boys and girls, incapacitating those who survive, leaving families unable to support themselves, a burden on the community, and giving to little children an inheritance of weakness which makes them morally, mentally or physically cripples. That is one of the ways of creating your Lazarus, with his sores, to lie at the gates of Dives. We want to get at the root of the matter. We want to get rid of Lazarus and we want to get rid of Dives also, for you will have the one as long as you have the other.

We know that the best means of enabling the workman to fight tuberculosis is by increasing his wage. If he only had the money to secure the proper food, to live in the right environment, with a little more space, a little more light; if only the children were not driven to work at too early an age; if only their bodies and their minds might have a fair chance of development. That is at the bottom of the whole thing: the wages of the workman and the conditions of his work. If you can secure labor for all who will labor, if you can secure the payment of a wage which will enable the laborer who labors to secure proper conditions of lodging, food and clothing, recreation and education, you will have reached pretty near to the root of the matter, so far as Dives and Lazarus are concerned.

Now, what should we aim at? A one day's rest in seven, surely. Every Christian employer of labor should see to it that those whom he employs, as well as he himself, have one day's rest out of the seven, one day for rest and recreation, for refreshment of body, mind and spirit.

Charity Is Not Enough

It is a good saying, and believed by many, that the day is properly divided into three parts: eight hours for toil, eight hours for rest, eight hours for meals, recreation and refreshment. What is good for one is good for another, and if that be, as most assume it to be, a good standard, then surely we should strive for it for the laboring man.

And precisely here is the point at which the church has failed the workingman. Instead of laboring to secure for him a higher wage, shorter hours of labor, an assured day of rest and recreation, it has devoted its attention rather to providing crumbs for Lazarus, lying at the gate. Let us give his children a summer outing, poor man! Let us give him some old clothes to keep him warm, poor man! and make a Christmas tree for his children, poor fellow! Let us build a hospital in which we may put that boy of his who is a cripple, or a sanitarium to which we may send that girl of his, who has broken down from overwork!

Now all those things are good in themselves, but the workman has said: "What I need is more than that. Help me to get shorter hours of labor; help me to get one day out of the seven for my rest; help me to get a wage that will let me buy for myself those things that I need." And the church has been inclined to say: "Ah! but, my man, those are economic questions. You must settle those for yourself. We are concerned with the eleemosynary side, we are concerned with charity. Charity is a beautiful thing. We will give you all the charity that you want, but when it comes to the economic question, that is out of our province."

We drove these men to organize labor unions in order to secure these things because we stood so far aloof from the whole business. The result has been that, as the labor unions grew up and grew stronger and took in more and more workmen, they alienated the workman from the church, becoming to him church and lodge, religion and society.

We have got to repair this. We have got to talk about these matters in our churches, we have got to treat the thing practically, and put in plain English just what the truth is. The good people in our churches who have means—to them we have to bring the Gospel word: You may not be idle: you too must work eight hours a day. You may not live

A REAL POLLYANNA

POLLYANNA and I were over in the grounds of the Theological Seminary.

Yes. It was a real Pollyanna, with big blue eyes and wonderful sunny hair parted in the middle and hanging in the two braids that every one knows so well from Mr. Mulford's illustration of the story. The braids, with their big, fluffy ends, were tied with bows of brown ribbon to match her little brown corduroy dress. A real Pollyanna, from the tips of her little slippers to her bright, shy little smile; a very real Pollyanna indeed, for this is the little girl who has helped so many to form a charming mental picture of Mrs. Porter's unique child heroine. It just seemed impossible to call her anything but Pollyanna in spite of the fact that the tots and toddlers who deserted their nursemaids when they saw her coming called out, "Oh, Helen, can you stay out?" For her name outside the story is Helen McKenzie.

We had gone over there to take some snapshot pictures at the big bronze doors of the chapel, and if they had turned out clear and sharp enough to reproduce for printing, this introduction to a real Pollyanna would have been made last week, and you would have met her in that little brown dress instead of a white one. This is how it all came about. Mr. Norris, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD'S art manager, had talked over the whole story and the plans for the pictures with Mr. Mulford. Mr. Mulford took the manuscript home and read it with his wife and formed his mental picture of Pollyanna. The next thing was to find the model, for you know all the artists pose models for their best work. The days went by and the first picture was almost due at the office and still no model that would do at all had been found. Then one evening Mr. Mulford went into a drugstore, and there, peering into one of the big glass cases, stood Pollyanna, just as his imagination had pictured her.

She seemed to be alone and Mr. Mulford was terribly afraid she would slip out and he would lose her, but presently a lady and gentleman joined the little girl and the artist took his courage firmly in both hands and spoke to Mr. McKenzie. His proposition was met with a decided and almost indignant "No." But he urged them to consider it, to allow him to call and explain. This request was granted, and when the main chapters of the manuscript had been read to Mrs. McKenzie, it was decided without any hesitation that Helen should be Pollyanna.

And really it is surprising how it has worked out that way. The long weeks of close association with the story and the happy popularity of both the pictures and the book have fastened a new name upon the little model. When Miss Margaret E. Sangster and I went over to see her, she came downstairs behind her mother and waited till introductions were over. Then Mrs. McKenzie said: "And this is—" She hesitated a moment and Miss Sangster filled the pause, "Pollyanna." Every one laughed, the little girl with the palms of her hands together under her chin.

"Oh!" she said, "every one that knows calls me that now; isn't it funny?"

It was after school, and the afternoon was growing dark, so we ran across the street to take our pictures while Miss Sangster stayed to talk with Mrs. McKenzie. The sparrows in the privet bushes were all fluffed up into balls of feathers and it looked as if the rain might start at any minute.

LITTLE MISS HELEN McKENZIE

The original of Mr. Mulford's illustrations for "Pollyanna"

After we had made two or three tries for pictures at the big bronze doors we started for another part of the big seminary grounds.

As we walked along, I said, "You haven't told me yet how you liked being Pollyanna for a while."

"Oh, I liked it. I like it now. Sometimes I got awfully tired when Mr. Mulford was drawing and I had to sit very still, but I just love Pollyanna. Even mamma calls me that sometimes now. I don't like Helen much—for a name."

We took two or three more pictures and I wondered if we might find a Fluffy and Buffy, so I asked, "Have you a kitten over at your house?"

"No," came the rather sorrowful answer, "we haven't any kitten. Mamma says they are so hard to keep in the city." Then with a smile, "But we've got a dog; I guess he'll be there when we go back. I didn't find him like Pollyanna did Buffy. He's older than I am." There was a little pause. "Perhaps," she added reflectively, "he wouldn't look very well in a picture—but I love him just the same."

As we came up the long path a bareheaded student smiled at the little girl. I think he was "just glad" to see any one so sweet and wholesome. Presently I asked, "What did you like Pollyanna the very best of all for?"

"Oh, because she was so happy, and because she cared what big people were doing. Then the game, too; I just loved that. It wasn't hard for me to learn to play at all, for I am always sort of glad about things, anyway. I played it while I was sick and it helped a whole lot. You see, I could be glad I had my mamma instead of just an aunt that might have been like Miss Polly. Then I could be glad it wasn't legs like the other Pollyanna, and glad that I was getting better.

"I got papa to play too, and he just laughed first. Then afterward he said he thought 'that game was quite a success' and 'there might be more to it than there seemed to be at first.' I like it because it makes you feel happy all the time and sometimes it's funny, too. Do you remember about Nancy and Mondays?"

We laughed together and started back to join Mrs. McKenzie and Miss Sangster. As we went down the old stone steps that led from the terrace to the street level, Pollyanna said, "See, there are the first drops of rain."

Back once more in the house, we went up into the parlor to take some more pictures. Miss Sangster and Pollyanna and Mrs. McKenzie were talking and laughing while chairs were moved and a good place for a picture found. Dozens and dozens of letters about Mrs. Porter's story and "the game" have come into the office and many have asked if there was "a real Pollyanna." Though this little maid was the model only for the pictures, we feel that she is a very real Pollyanna indeed. Miss Sangster is going to answer all the letters on this interesting subject, and her department will tell the stories of how others are playing the game.

When the last attempt with the camera had been made, and we were wondering whether we had gotten a picture that would reproduce all right for the paper, Pollyanna sauntered over to the long French window, and with her hands on one of the crossbars and her little nose almost touching the glass, looked out on the pavements now rapidly turning from gray to black under the pattering rain. Presently she looked over her shoulder and smiled.

"Well, I am glad it didn't rain any sooner. Aren't you?"

LABOR

in luxury while the other man has naught. He needs you to help him to secure these things. You have got them yourself, now you must get to work and show him how to get them and share with him the position you have earned, the intelligence you have developed, the strength you have acquired.

The women of the working classes are in the churches to-day to a much larger extent than the men. Do not let us lose them or the children. If we have failed in the case of the men—and it is going to be up-hill work to regain what we have lost—failed to live and to teach the Gospel of Jesus Christ so as to make real to them the doctrine of the kingdom of heaven on earth, at least do not let us do the same thing with the women and the children. It is a good thing to have Girls' Friendly Societies and King's Daughters. It is a good thing to have parish houses and open them. It is a good thing to prevent the girls from getting into evil habits and evil ways through immoral dance halls and Raines Law hotels and what not; but it is much more important to get at the root of the matter with them now before we have lost them. At what age do they have to go to work? What are the hours at which they work? What are the wages for which they work? What are the surroundings in which they work? It is their working life that we want to get into and that we want to touch above everything else, and what we are touching is too often only the short play hours of their lives. Our religion has got to get into our own work life, and our expression of religion in brotherly love has got to get into the work life of those girls. We have got to secure them an opportunity to live their lives not only decently but comfortably; to earn a good wage under wholesome conditions; to have a reasonable time and opportunity for recreation and refreshment. We must secure for them such a home and such a working life that they shall not be drawn madly to plunge into any folly in the hours when they are free, simply because they are brutalized by their work and their surroundings and have no outlook but sensual indulgence or mad excitement.

Above all things, we have got to care for childhood, for the childhood of the girl and boy alike. It is not enough to bring him into the Sunday school; it is not enough to bring him into the day school. We have got to bring him to the Jesus Christ whom we have found. Do you love your own children? Do you shelter them and protect them? Do you try to give them as much education as you can, so that they shall not be compelled to start to work too early and be put at a disadvantage forever afterward? Do you try to give them room to grow up in, so that they shall not be one-room children, but shall develop properly? And is that a part of your comfortable religion, your comfort through Jesus Christ? Then, because of our relation one to another, as children of one Father in heaven, we have got to obtain the same thing for the children of these others also.

Not to take too much for ourselves, not to care only for ourselves and ours! If any one takes too much out of the common fund, then there is just so much less left for the others. If any one shirks his part of the work, then there is just so much work for some one else to do. To take our share and no more than our share; to do our full part in bearing the burden of life, and, where we are fortunate and successful, to use that good fortune and that success and all the strength and the talent that have been given to us so as to bring the same good fortune to some others: that is the simple meaning of it.

It is a very wholesome parable, this story of Dives and Lazarus, if you will take it for just what it says. It is the parable of wealth and poverty. We cannot get rid of Lazarus except as we get rid of Dives. When we begin to treat one another as brothers, we shall begin to be solving the problem.

Now surely this is fundamentally a moral problem, not merely an economic problem. It is a problem for the Church of Jesus Christ to solve.

THE BURDEN THAT DESCENDED

BY ANNE WARNER

"WHY, she may live for years!"

It was Mrs. Hyde's voice, appalled—protesting.

"Of course she may," said her husband, "but what can we do? She raised me and was always good to me, and now if this calamity has fallen on her I've got to give her a home. I can't afford to pay her board somewhere else."

"No, of course not," the wife assented quickly, "but, good gracious, what can we do with her? We use every room in the house and the girls and I have our hands just full with the work. Why did she have to go and lose her money? Old women shouldn't speculate in railway stocks, I say."

"She didn't speculate, Emily, you mustn't think that. Her money was left by Uncle Tom all invested in the 'X and Y,' and it looked safe as anything up to last week's doings. She's not the only one who was ruined in that deal in Wall Street, depend upon it."

Mrs. Hyde seemed not to hear her husband's careful explanation of the event which had been filling all the newspapers. Their private aspect of one infinitesimal part of its results was all that she could sense at the minute. "An invalid is such a care in a house. The children will be just furious at the very idea. It will spoil all our happy home life." She was close to tears. Frank Hyde looked very grave. "I shouldn't like to think that," he said slowly. "If you really feel that that will be the case, why, I must find some other place for her. That's all."

He was very fond of his house and family, albeit none of the entourage were anywhere near as ideal as he imagined. The idea of disturbing the pleasant atmosphere was intolerable to him. "Do you really believe that she would ruin everything?" he asked anxiously.

"We can talk with the children after dinner," said his wife. "We can see how they feel. Of course it's bound to alter things for every one of us, but perhaps we might try asking her for a three months' visit and then see how things go."

And that was what it came to in the end, a three months' invitation for poor old beggared Aunt Hetty, who had lost all her money and yet might live for years, a three months' respite before deciding finally whether to keep her permanently or send her off to be cared for by strangers. Mr. Hyde, who remembered her kindness to his boyishness, hoped she'd prove endurable, but his wife was less sanguine. As for the children (Tom, aged eighteen; and Ted, aged ten; Emmy, aged sixteen; and Katie, two years younger), they one and all rebelled bitterly against even the three months' visit, but yielded to persuasion in the end. It was really very hard on them. Emmy and Katie must give up their room with all its little personal wall decorations and squeeze into Tom's; and poor Tom, in his turn, must condense himself into the linen closet, while the linen moved to the lower shelves of the pantry downstairs. The Hydes were not rich people, and added to the other trials connected with the coming of Aunt Hetty was the further one of a secret disappointment over the certainty that now her money would never buy them a newer and bigger home.

However, it had to be, and they did it, albeit with much grumbling and no smallest tendency to make the best of things. "You girls take down your pretty curtains and fold them away," their mother suggested; "the faded brown ones that we used to have in my room are plenty good enough. Better take out your rocker, too. The red plush arm chair will be better for her, and the broken spring doesn't matter unless a very heavy person uses it."

"We'll take our quilt, too, shan't we?" asked Emmy; "she'll be sure to have a shawl or something which she can put on her bed if she's cold."

"I hope that she won't be fiddling round at night, making me nervous," said Tom. "That door between will let every sound right through. I hate to be woke up in the night."

The whole family were in accord and when Aunt Hetty arrived the next morning early she was perfectly conscious of her position even before she reached the house. "We've arranged for you to always have your meals in your own room," her nephew who had met her at the station said; "it will save you the stairs, you see." And his aunt was clever and understood at once.

"But won't it be a trouble?" she asked.

"Oh, no, there are four young people to carry trays. They'll make nothing of it."

At the house the welcome was more than perfunctory. Aunt Hetty and her trunk were gotten into their new quarters promptly. "You'll like to rest, I know," Mrs. Hyde said at once; "we'll call you half an hour before lunch." And then she went out, shut the door, and went downstairs.

"Except for its crowding us so with the bedroom I don't believe that it'll really matter much," she said to Emmy; "we'll keep her door closed always, and except for the meals and doing the bed, she really won't count as existing."

Emmy cheerfully adopted her mother's point of view. She was very young and active and had no slightest sympathy with the old and feeble.

It was Katie who went at noon to wake the family burden at the appointed hour. She tapped and a feeble voice cried "Come in." Katie went in and found the old lady seated just where they had left her, still with her bonnet, shawl, and gloves on. It was a little appalling when one considered the four long hours in between.

Springtime in Central Park, New York

"Hush, my child," said Aunt Hetty, looking round with a smile as her grandniece gave a little cry. "Close the door, dear—don't let any one see. I knew that you were all busy and I was quite able to wait. I wasn't a bit uncomfortable. But, you see, I can't use my fingers, they're all twisted up, and so I thought I'd just sit here till lunchtime and then ask whoever came to help me off with my gloves and bonnet."

Katie felt all the blood in her heart beating in her face. She leaned over the old lady and her own fingers seemed nearly helpless too. "I'll h—help you any time," she murmured, "any time."

Katie drew the gloves slowly from the knotty fingers. She placed them with the bonnet and shawl and then looked at the cheerless room with the two strapped pieces of baggage. "Can't I unfasten those for you?" she asked.

"I'd be very much obliged if you would, dear. My things are all nicely packed and if you'd lay them out for me I'd feel a little bit at home right off. But perhaps you're wanted downstairs? You mustn't stay here if you are. My things can wait."

"Mother doesn't need me," said Katie, her heart still heaving, as she began to unstrap the small black trunk. "Oh, what pretty covers!" she exclaimed, when she saw what lay uppermost.

"Yes, dear, I've had them in my house for ever and ever so long—just printed Indian calicos, but I thought that you could all use them for tables."

Katie looked from the old brown curtains to the ugly red plush chair as she shook out the Indian prints one after another, and her cheeks burnt afresh. "Can't you use them in here?" she asked.

"I might use one on that little table, but take all the rest with you for the others."

Katie felt utterly conquered; she thought that she had never noticed such a soft, pretty voice before in her life; it almost made her want to cry, it went through her so. Very swiftly she arranged the various toilet things on the bureau and hung the few simple wrappers on the pegs in the closet. "I think that's everything," she said finally, having regained her self-control.

"Thank you many times, dear. Now that I'm unpacked I can do very well and I never mean to be a bit of trouble. Believe that."

Somehow, at that Katie was right above her, hugging her tightly. "I'll slip in and do things for you every chance that I get," she whispered, then choked again, and rushed out abruptly.

The aunt sat still, smiling a little. "I believe that I can pay my board," she whispered to herself. "God put me here and so I mustn't seek anything but his service even if outsiders would think I ought to die sooner than be a burden. I can't be a burden," she murmured a bit louder and with an attempt to impress a truth firmly on her mind. "I can be a blessing but I can't be a burden. I'm needed on earth or I'd be dead and in heaven, and I'm needed here or I'd never have those curtains and this red plush chair inflicted on me." And then she smiled a little, being a whimsical old lady in spite of the fact that she should have been depressed over losing her money.

Downstairs Mrs. Hyde was putting the invalid's luncheon tray to rights, slicing a newspaper with a table-knife to fit the bottom and then setting the needful articles all in one corner, with the glass of water and plate in the middle. Emmy was to carry it up. "We'll be ready to sit down when you come back," the mother said, turning to lay the table in an equally careless way. "I'll help you," Katie said, getting out the knife basket. Emmy was walking off with the tray.

"Dear, dear, this is going to be a lot of trouble," Mrs. Hyde said as she put up the chairs. Katie made no comment. She wished that she might have carried up the tray. She made up her mind to be the one to fetch it down anyway, and that she did. And what a surprise she received! Aunt Hetty had managed a little further unpacking by herself and a neat piece of white enamel cloth covered the tray now. In one corner stood a bit of a red pot with a tiny artificial Dutch tulip in it. The plate was just in the center, the glass at its right, the napkin was folded into a crimson ring which matched the pot. The whole was a revelation!

"Why, Aunt Hetty!"

The old lady smiled. "I shouldn't have any appetite any other way, dearie," she said. "When life is all lived and the days are apt to begin to get gray and long and lonely, one must stick a bit of brightness in wherever one can."

Katie carried the tray downstairs in silence. Emmy was straightening the cloth on the dining table. "I'm going to stay with Aunt Hetty a while this afternoon," whispered the latter to her sister.

Katie did not dare lift her eyes. She surmised that Emmy was getting some lesson too.

Aunt Hetty went to sleep that night carefully tucked up with a smile on her lips. "I don't complain, O Lord," was the last conscious prayer which lingered in her thought, "I know that I can pay my board. Just keep leading me."

In the early morning she awoke and began coughing. She sometimes had bad coughing attacks and difficulty in smothering them. There should have been a glass of water and a cracker by her bedside, but she had forgotten to ask for it. She was quite

THE BROTHERS' FEUD DISPELLED*

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON BY DR. AND MRS. WILBUR F. CRAFTS

WE HAVE all heard much of the wrestling in prayer by which Jacob's mean nature, as well as his name, was changed; but it would seem that the angel of Jehovah must have wrestled with Esau also the same night, judging by the equally great change of character he showed the next morning, when he forgave the brother with whom he had for many years a deadly feud.

Let us recall the story briefly. Though Esau and Jacob were twins, precedence in birth gave Esau the rights of the firstborn, namely, family leadership, the larger share of the family property and a special blessing of God. But Esau, being a reckless fellow, in a moment of hunger sold all these birthrights for a dish of hot soup. Again the two sinned equally, Esau in plotting with his father to keep the blessing he had sold, and Jacob in plotting with his mother to prevent by a lie the loss of what he had unfairly bought. Esau was so angry when he found Jacob had secured the blessing from blind Isaac that Jacob had to flee for his life, finding refuge at last with his uncle Laban in the far country from which Abraham had come. There he became the father of a large household and the owner of great flocks and herds. Jealousy and envy in Laban's sons because Jacob was more prosperous caused God to direct Jacob to return to his own country. Consulting his wives as to that, they said, "Whatsoever God hath said unto thee, do." So Jacob stole away with his family and flocks. Laban and his sons and servants pursued him angrily, but God subdued Laban's anger, and when they met it was to make a covenant as "blood brothers" over a sacrifice and about a stone pillar which they called Mizpah, meaning "God watch between me and thee when we are absent from one another."

When Jacob started again, two armies of angels met him to cheer and strengthen him. (Gen. 32: 1, 2.) That may have suggested dividing his own big caravan into two bands. Now that the family feud with Laban was dissolved at the altar of prayer, Jacob's anxiety went forward to Esau, whose feud was deeper and more dangerous. About this anxiety Jacob went to God in prayer. (Gen. 32: 9-12.) He also planned to work with God in answering this prayer that Esau's hatred might be removed by sending ahead generous presents of sheep and cattle, which Esau would receive before he reached Jacob and Rachel and Joseph in the rear of the caravan. If he would not be placated by the first caravan bearing the gifts, the second caravan might escape by flight. Scouts were sent ahead and came back to report that Esau was approaching with four hundred warriors. This news drove Jacob again to midnight prayer in solitude by the brook Jabbok, over which all his company had passed and beyond which on the morrow his brother would be encountered. As Jacob prayed, a stranger seized him, and at first Jacob seems to have been taking him for an enemy, an emissary of Esau, sent to assassinate him. Jacob wrestled for life in a deeper sense than he knew; for he presently discovered that his visitor was a superhuman. "Tell me thy name," he cried. The name was not spoken but he felt it in a tide of transformation and strength and blessing, and in the morning said confidently, "I have seen God face to face." For which reason he called the spot, which he marked with a pillar for a memorial, "the face of God"—Peniel. Jacob, the tricky supplanter, was changed in that night of prayer to Israel, meaning, one who prevails with God. It was of kindred significance with what was said of Luther, "He could have what he would of God."

JACOB WRESTLING WITH THE ANGEL

From the painting by J. Doyle Penrose, A.R.H.A.

The change wrought by God in Jacob in answer to prayer is sufficiently familiar, but the chief miracle of the story is the change wrought in Esau, not by his own prayer but by his brother's prayer, reminding us that our prayers will work changes not only in us but in those we love—even in those who hate us. Faith can kill a feud. God is mightier than any grudge. God wrestled that night with Esau. We are not told so, but we see the results, just as astronomers discover an invisible planet by its influence on other planets. Esau marched on Jacob with warriors to destroy. What was it that changed his murderous purpose and made him greet his brother the next day with the kiss of reconciliation? Prevailing prayer is clearly seen in that result. To secure this reconciliation was the very object of the prayer of Jacob by the brook. Both brothers had been wrong in their quarrel, and both were wrong at heart, and the prayer of the one who, with all his faults, believed in prayer, changed them both.

Here is a story that assures us that just such changes come in answer to prayer in our day in all lands. It is a story of two bad brothers saved, told by Mr. D. L. Moody. "In Philadelphia, when we were having grand meetings, it came to a point where there seemed to be very little power. We called together all the mothers and asked them to meet and pray for their children. About fifteen hundred mothers came together and poured out their hearts to God in prayer. One mother said: 'I wish you would pray for my two boys. They have gone off on a drunken spree and it seems as if my heart would break.' She was a widowed mother. A few mothers gathered together and said: 'Let us have a prayer-meeting for these boys.' They cried to God for those two wandering boys. See how God answered their prayer. That day these two brothers had planned to meet at the corner of the street where our meetings were being held. About seven o'clock the first boy came to the appointed place; he saw the people going into the meeting. As it was a stormy night, he thought he would go in for a little while. The word of God reached him and he went into the inquiry-room, where he gave his heart to the Saviour. The other brother waited at the corner until the meeting broke up, expecting his brother to come; he did not know he had been to the meeting. There was a young men's meeting in the church near by, and this brother thought he would like to see what was going on, so he followed the crowd into the meeting. He was also impressed with what he heard and was the first one to go into

* THE INTERNATIONAL SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON for April 20, 1913. Jacob's Meeting with Esau. Gen. 32; 33: 1-17. GOLDEN TEXT: "Be ye kind one to another, tender-hearted, forgiving each other, even as God also in Christ forgave you." Eph. 4: 32, R. V.

OUR SUNDAY SCHOOL SUPERINTENDENTS' ROUND TABLE

—FROM THE very helpful letter of Mrs. A. H. Wood, of Vancouver, we quote the following practical suggestions for Sunday school teachers: "I find in a recent number of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD some questions asked which have long lain near my heart, both as a Sunday school teacher and an evangelist. I hasten to answer them from both standpoints. As a teacher, put it before your class in a bright cheery tone of voice (this is very important) that the Christian life is the only normal and really happy one; that the object of the Sunday school should be to help them find that life and really live it. Tell them how to become Christians, and lovingly press for decision. By two texts showing 'how,' I have led to Christ little children; old men who had claimed infidelity for years; business men who were going to heaven on their good deeds; young girls just coming into womanhood (a hard age to reach); in short, all classes and conditions. When I was a child, I sought long and earnestly to become a Christian. Those seeking to help me would say, 'Only believe,' but did not tell me what to believe. If they had said, 'I have two texts for you, and if you will believe and act upon them, I can assure you of finding what you desire,' how gladly would I have done so!" Our correspondent names as the two texts: "Thou shalt call his name Jesus, for he shall save his people from their sins." "Him that cometh to me I will in no wise cast out."

She tells how she met on the street a young girl of sixteen, with whom she had only a scant acquaintance, but welcoming the opportunity for service, she shook hands, inquired as to her mother's health, and then said in a cheerful, happy tone, "Have you taken your mother's Saviour to be your Saviour too?" "Not yet," said the girl. Then she talked with her of the two texts, showing her, first of all, how she could be one of "his people" whom he saves. The young girl had a book in hand, and her friend said, "How could you make that book mine?" "By just giving it to you." "When would it be mine?" "As soon as I gave it." "If you should with all your heart say, 'Lord, I give myself to thee,' whose would you be?" "I would be his." "When?" "As soon as I said it." "Won't you say it?" "Yes, I will." "Do you say it?" "Yes, I do." "Whose are you?" "I am his." "His to save from sin, his to help and bless, as long as you let him have his way with his property that you have just given him. And he will want you should pray and live much in the Word. I want to give you one more text, so you will never doubt, and it is this: 'Jesus said, Him that cometh to me, I will in no wise cast out.' You have come; has he cast you out?" "No." "What does he do?" "He takes me."

"With glad hearts we passed on. Two years went by before I again met the mother. Grasping my hand, she said, with tears, 'I can never thank you enough for leading my daughter to Christ!' 'Leading your daughter to Christ?' I said inquiringly, for the circumstance had been crowded out of my mind. 'Yes,' she said, 'don't you remember meeting her on the street, with a book in her hand? Well, she has lived an earnest Christian life from that day. Only yesterday, she had come home to lunch (she is a stenographer), and a telephone message came that a dying person wanted her to come and pray, and away she went, glad to render the service rather than enjoy her lunch.'

"As an evangelist, I applied the same teaching and methods to a Sabbath school of one hundred members. After a brief talk, giving the reasons for beginning a Christian life, all but five decided for Christ. The ninety-five that had become Christians said, 'We will not rest till the other five come.' And in less than a week the Sunday school was a unit in obedient service for their new Leader. 'Obedient service,' I say, because I never taught anything else—as I never regard any belief that does not insure obedience as being in any wise saving. Christ said, 'He that heareth these sayings of mine, and doeth them.'

"Since coming to the Pacific coast, I was asked to address a teachers' meeting for three weeks in succession in a city Sunday school. I insisted upon all teaching being directed to the one aim; that of winning pupils for Christ, then helping them to make a success of their new life. At the third meeting a teacher said in glad tears: 'I had no idea, until Mrs. Wood came among us, of my privilege as a teacher. Last Sabbath I spoke to my class of thirteen boys (ten to twelve years of age) of their need to decide for Christ, telling them of these two texts, and they all came so eagerly. And to think I might have missed all this great joy, never knowing it to be possible.'"

There is more in the letter that we hope to use later. Let every one who has a practical suggestion or a question suitable for this Round Table send it to Rev. Wilbur F. Crafts, 206 Pennsylvania Avenue, S. E., Washington, D. C.

The West Needs Our Help

IN THE frightful disaster which has overtaken Ohio and Indiana, we recognize a national calamity. We who sit in the quietude of our homes and read the despatches can form but a faint conception of the real nature of the awful tragedy that has been enacted in Dayton, and reproduced in lesser degree in some fifty towns and villages in the two great Western States. All the elemental forces were apparently let loose for the destruction of human life and the devastation of man's handiwork.

It was an event as overwhelming as it was sudden. One day a busy, bustling city; the next, a scene of flood, fire, panic and despair, with the dead and the dying by hundreds circling in the mad whirlpool of the flood, or buried in the ruins of shattered buildings. Such a transformation shows what a slender hold we have on life. It is a picture to arouse the deepest sympathies of the nation and to kindle in every American heart the desire to do something toward alleviating the sad condition of the survivors.

Dayton is to-day a city of ruins. There the resistless rush of the waters tore down and swept away hundreds of substantial business buildings and residences, in many cases carrying the helpless occupants to death in the wreck. A thousand are believed to have perished. In a number of streets the flood was on a level with the third stories of the buildings. To add to the horrors of the disaster, fires broke out in many places. Dayton to-day needs food, clothing, nurses, physicians, medicines. Still isolated by the floods, all means of communication with the outer world temporarily cut off, hospitals filled with the injured, and with the living watching and praying for the waters to subside, the situation is one that has no parallel save the Galveston and Johnstown disasters.

And the sad case of Dayton is duplicated, though in a less degree, in a score of other towns and villages in Ohio. Cincinnati and Columbus are partially under water and East St. Louis and Indianapolis are threatened. The Western rivers, streams and creeks are on the rampage in half a dozen States, railroads blockaded, bridges swept away, business at a standstill. In the whole flooded section, the loss of life is placed among the thousands, and 250,000 are homeless and at least temporarily destitute. Famine and disease menace the survivors.

This great calamity, which has overtaken a large and important section of the country, carries with it a direct appeal to the practical sympathies of the readers of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. It is not a cry for help from a land thousands of miles away, but from our own brothers and sisters here at home. In these stricken cities of the West there are many members of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD Family who in the past have generously given of their abundance at the call of distress. Now they themselves need our help, and it should be given freely and promptly. We must send to them food supplies in abundance—food for the well and delicacies for the sick. Let us not stint our benevolence to those of our own flesh and blood. Our readers have never failed to give heed to such an appeal nor will they now. Coming right from our own people, it has a tenfold-multiplied intensity, and it is more imperative on us than any other plea to which we have listened in recent years. Let us show by our gifts our gratitude to God for our own blessings, and our love for those who now stand so sorely in need of our benevolence, and let us give with promptness and liberality that life may be saved and suffering alleviated.

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD has telegraphed to a number of clergymen in Dayton, asking them to form a Relief Committee on which both laymen and clergy will be represented. We are now arranging to send food supplies for distribution and started the first car-load from New York on March 27 in anticipation of contributions, which we feel confident will come in quickly when the great need is known. Don't hesitate or delay; send your gift now, within the hour, and let it be a generous one. Address all contributions to the "Western Flood Relief Fund, The Christian Herald, Bible House, New York." Every dollar contributed will be forwarded in the shape of nourishing food and whatever else may be needed. We urge all of our readers to consider the plea of the calamity-stricken West a very personal one—a call that takes precedence over all others. May God in his mercy comfort the stricken people, and may we be the means, under divine blessing, of bringing them cheer and consolation in their time of deep affliction. Whatever you give, send it with a prayer that blessing may rest upon it.

The New Catholic Census

THERE is food for reflection in the statistics of the new Catholic Directory. If we are to accept its figures on Catholic population at their face value and unquestioningly, it would seem to bear out the claim that the Church of Rome is making greater headway here than in any other country of the globe. Following are some of the figures in the new volume:

Country	Catholic population
Austria	23,796,000
Germany	23,821,000
Spain	19,503,000
British Empire	12,968,000
Italy	30,500,000
Continental United States	15,154,158
United States and its Colonies	23,329,000

According to the government census of 1906, the Catholic population of the United States, apart from its colonies, was 12,079,142. In January, 1913, Dr. H. K. Carroll (who prepared the last official census of religions) estimated the Catholic population at 12,888,466, exclusive of our colonies. Giving 7,000,000 as the Catholic strength in the Philippines and 1,000,000 in Porto Rico, would make the 1913 total 20,888,466. The growth in continental United States during the six years from 1906 to 1912 was approximately 789,324, or 130,000 yearly. In its new directory, the Catholic Church claims during the past year an increase of only 138,000. It points out, however, that the "normal increase" has really taken place, although it is not shown by the figures, and explains that as the Catholic census is taken by the church only once in five years, in the last year of that period the reports from many of the larger dioceses are almost unchanged. This leaves the question of actual Catholic population an open one, and the general reader is at liberty to take his choice between Dr. Carroll's 130,000 average annual increase and the 138,000 average of the Catholic Directory, a distinctly diminishing ratio of growth. How it reconciles its grand total of 23,329,000 with its own figures is left unexplained.

There are other items in the new census which will interest the general reader. In 1912 the Catholics built in this country (exclusive of dependencies) 373 new churches, or over one church per day! The total number of churches is given as 14,224. There are in connection with these churches and their various missions, 17,945 priests, 6,169 seminary students, and 57,000 women belonging to church societies or orders, who devote their entire time to religious work. The Roman Church has 900 colleges and academies and 5,256 parochial schools. In New York City alone there are 51 Catholic parishes. Twenty-five States have not over 100,000 Catholics among their population.

The Fall of Adrianople

ADRIANOPLE has fallen! The accounts of the furious three-day attack ending not only in the surrender but almost in the self-destruction of the city read like hideous chapters from a distant epoch of history. It is difficult to make them fit into the facts of modern civilization. Two whole regiments reported to be blown up by mines; armies hurling themselves dauntlessly against forts from which cannon belched death, taking them one after the other, fighting foot by foot with bayonets; frightened inhabitants, worn by the horrors of the siege, running about to seek safety as the sounds of the bombardment which had been almost incessant for five months grew to a deadly fury; the firing of the city at the orders of the Turkish commander, Shukri Pasha, who had boasted that he would destroy the city rather than surrender it; and at last the surrender of his sword to the Bulgarian General Savoff as the remnants of the victorious Bulgarian and Servian troops entered—these are among the details of the great event.

What shall be the gain to balance all this terrific loss? What harvest shall be reaped from this seed of terror and fire, pain and death? It seems certain that the end of the present conflict is near and that Turkey will at last be driven from all of Europe except the site of her capital city. The Moslem inhabitants of Europe, freed from the domination of Turkey, will mingle freely and peaceably with the Christian population and the progress of the Gospel will probably be greatly accelerated. How the Balkan victories, with their renewed and startling demonstrations of tremendous military prowess, will affect European politics can only be guessed. Russia is in sympathy with the Balkans, and Germany is seriously apprehensive. What looked like a conflict between Russia and Austria over Balkan claims has just been averted, no one knows how narrowly. It was a striking coincidence that the same morning papers which described the horrors of the last chapters of the siege of Adrianople contained also the brave suggestion made by Lord Winston Churchill in the British Parliament to all the nations of the world to join with England in a pledge to build no further warships for a year. The future of Europe and Asia is an unguessed riddle, but all Christians should pray that to a greater and greater extent the difficulties that must be met shall be settled without war.

A Strange Situation

THERE is a kind of vindication which defeats itself. In their haste to "vindicate" Frank M. Ryan, whom they re-elected as president at their recent session in Indianapolis, the International Association of Bridge and Structural Iron Workers have placed themselves in the attitude of either declaring their absolute belief in Ryan's innocence or their unqualified approval of the relations he sustained to the notorious "dynamite conspiracy," for aiding and abetting which he and his associates were convicted in open court after a fair trial. He is now out on $70,000 bail, and unless granted a new trial, must face a seven years' prison sentence at hard labor. Hockin, the former secretary and treasurer of the association—another of the convicted conspirators, who is now in jail—did not receive even the compliment of a single vote for re-election, but was utterly repudiated by his former associates for the reason, as reported, that he had given aid to the detectives. By its championship of Ryan, as shown in his re-election, the association bids defiance to public opinion. It is a situation which the more sensible and law-abiding element in the labor ranks should view with regret.

Home of Cleveland Dedicated

THE little wooden house where Grover Cleveland was born attracted a distinguished company at Caldwell, N. J., on March 18 to see its dedication as a memorial. This mel is the manse of the First Presbyterian h ch, of which Mr. Cleveland's father was pastor e time of his birth. After the Cleveland Me-o l Association had turned over to the trustees e church a check for $16,610 in payment for e house, Mayor John Espy, a trustee of the h, presented a deed for the property, which a received by Richard Cleveland, a son of the t President, who in turn gave it to a representa-c nvictions of duty in public life. The memorial to a just and fearless Chief Executive of the nation

v rifies the words of the wise man:

The memory of the just is blessed. (Prov. 10: 7.)

Vengeance Visited on Himself

A MAN in New York City the other day was on his way to kill an enemy when the bomb he had prepared for the purpose exploded, seriously wounding himself. This is an illustration of the fact that the wrong which men intend and do to their neighbors has a penalty in it that falls on themselves. The old story of the Greek who was so jealous of his rival that he crept in the darkness to throw over the statue that had been erected in his honor, and in doing so was crushed to death under the falling figure, describes the ill fate that is likely to visit the one who undertakes to injure his fellows. The scandalmonger bespatters his own garments, the thief picks his own pocket, the assassin stabs himself, or blows his head off with his own bomb. In the long run there is a complete squaring up; there is value for value; there is the reaping of the thing that was sown. The good or evil we do to our fellow men comes back to us unerringly. The psalmist describes the poor wretch who means death for others and brings it to himself:

His mischief shall return upon his own head, and his violent dealing shall come down on his own pate. (Ps. 7: 16.)

Caught Cable; Saved Life

WILLIAM SNABLE, an elevator man in Newark, N. J., started on a fearful plunge to death the other day and was saved by catching hold of a cable and clinging to it till rescued by a companion. Snable ran his elevator to the seventh floor and stepped off with a package for one of the offices. He had failed to stop the car entirely, and seeing it going up, made a dash to catch it. In doing so he tripped and fell into the elevator well. As he shot through space to what seemed certain death, he managed to seize the double cable and checked his downward flight at the fourth floor. His cries for help were heard by Richard O'Connor, another elevator man, who was on the bottom floor, and who shouted to him to "hang on." O'Connor ran his car up to the fourth floor, sprang from it into the corridor, opened the door of the well, and while clinging to the door by one hand he wound the other arm around Snable's waist and lifted him to the corridor floor, where the one rescued fell unconscious. Amidst all the moral dangers and the plunges toward spiritual death, there is a Hand at the side of the well which we may seize and be saved. It is necessary for us to stretch out our hand of faith to secure it. It is the one whom the prophet saw, who said:

I that speak in righteousness, mighty to save. (Isa. 63: 1.)

A Beautiful Easter Message

THE Cathedral of St. John the Divine in New York City was profusely decorated on Easter with lilies of the valley and other white flowers and palms. The cathedral was crowded at the morning service and more than a thousand persons were unable to gain admittance. After an ideal program of music Bishop Greer preached the sermon on "Children of the Resurrection." Among other things he said: "The early Easter faith planted in the midst of human society those virtues which some of the moral teachers of Greece and Rome had taught, but which they did so little to establish and confirm. It was the resurrection faith—not in a moral teacher or faith in a moral code—which created what we call the Christian civilization. That is our inheritance; we cannot repudiate it even if we would. We can no more take its influence out of our hearts and lives than we can take the warmth and glow of the coming spring out of the opening earth. And this to-day is its Easter message to us. If you would more fully know that resurrection faith and be more fully convinced and persuaded of it, then in some true and worthy way must you go and live it. We are the children of the resurrection because we are the children of the Christian civilization which is itself the child, the heir of a resurrection faith. That is what is distinctly the Christian religion, not merely faith in One who perished on the cross, but faith in One who has risen again and lives. The song of joy that ushered in the Christian era was an Easter song of joy, singing and proclaiming its resurrection faith, and the gladdening morning brightness that then broke over the world has never gone out and has one on widening with the process of the sun." Bishop Greer's text for this inspiring Easter sermon was the assurance of the evangelist Luke:

Neither can they die any more: for they are equal unto the angels, and are the children of God, being the children of the resurrection. (Luke 20: 36.)

Mountain Top Sliding Down

THE inhabitants of a Swiss village are in terror at the destruction threatened by the falling down upon them of a mountain top. The village is Fleurier, lying near Lake Neuchatel, in the shadow of Mount Caroline, the top of which is sliding slowly downward toward the village and is likely at any time to fall upon and crush it. The mass is moving at the rate of eight or nine inches a day, and there is immediate danger of an acceleration in the speed of its descent. Most of the inhabitants have moved their belongings to the sides of neighboring hills where they remain in the open air in terror. A similar movement of Mount Caroline began in 1889, but ceased in a few hours. It is sincerely to be hoped that the destruction feared may be averted. There are Alpine mountain tops that are sliding down, threatening to destroy the plans and the structures of the social, intellectual, moral, and religious world. There are disappointments, persecutions, the assaults of enemies, the treachery of friends, the fires and fury of a wicked self, each a menace to contentment of heart, or even the existence of a life of love. Some of the sliding mountain tops of moral evil are recorded in the Good Book as being so terrible that the crushing of the body by a falling mountain was counted as a merciful relief. They

Said to the mountains and rocks, Fall on us and hide us from the face of him that sitteth on the throne. (Rev. 6: 16.)

DAILY MEDITATION

FOR EVERY DAY IN THE YEAR

BY REV. J. H. JOWETT, D.D.

SUNDAY, April 13. Psalm 121. There should be a little hill country in every life, some great up-towering peaks which dominate the common plain. There should be an upland district, where springs are born, and where rivers of inspiration have their birth. "I will lift up mine eyes unto the hills." Turn to the first and second chapters of Paul's Epistle to the Ephesians, and gaze upon the hill country which lifted itself sheer and mighty, through all his changing days, tremendous facts of divine calling and of redeeming love and grace. His soul lived in a land of mountains and rivers. "As the mountains are round about Jerusalem, so the Lord is round about his people."

The soul that knows no hills is sure to be oppressed with the monotony of the road. The inspiration to do little things comes from the presence of big things. It is amazing what dull trifles we can get through when a radiant love is near. A noble companionship glorifies the dingiest road. And what if that Companion be God? Then, surely, "the common round and daily task" have a light thrown upon them from "the beauty of his countenance."

The "heavenlies" are our salvation and our defense. "His righteousness is like the great mountains." "The mountains bring forth peace unto his people."

MONDAY, April 14. Genesis 32: 3-13. "Then Jacob was greatly afraid and distressed." We have not so far seen much of a conscience in Jacob. It does not seem to have troubled him. But here it is, intensely awake, using its goads, and filling its victims with fears. Conscience will assert itself even when we have used all sorts of opiates and narcotics to put it to sleep. In the city of Mansoul the impious rebels sought to smother Mr. Recorder; or, at any rate, so to imprison him that his voice could not be heard. But "the old gentleman" revealed unsuspected strength, and he made his awful voice boom through the wicked city. "The voice of the great Eternal spake in those mighty tones."

The guilty conscience embitters our sweetest cup. The revelry in Macbeth's banqueting hall was disastrously spoiled by his guilty fears. To Herod even the Lord's gracious ministry was discolored by his guilty remembrance of the murder of John the Baptist.

What is needed for an evil conscience? Two things: God's forgiveness and all possible reparation. There is no forgiveness while the stolen money is still in our own pocket. Repentance and reparation: these, by the grace of God, will bring the heavenly peace.

TUESDAY, April 15. Genesis 32: 24-32. What was this wrestling with the angel "till the breaking of the day"? It was the agonized search of a guilty soul seeking heavenly assurance and peace. We may find similar wrestlings in Augustine's Confessions and in Bunyan's Grace Abounding and in the earlier story of The Lord's Dealings with George Müller. Souls that have sinned as Jacob sinned will inevitably meet the wrestling angel, they will have these secret and painful strivings with the unseen. Somehow or other we must be put right with God. Sin dislocates the soul. "Your sins have separated between you and your God." And we must needs be re-established in holy and healthy relations with the Lord. The "angel of wrestling" is the sacred minister of restoration.

Jacob's experiences by the brook are veiled in the darkness. We do not know what confession Jacob made, or the matter of his supplication. We only know that in the darkness there was a fierce spiritual struggle, and that when "the sun rose upon him" he was "right with God." "And Jacob called the name of the place Peniel: for I have seen God face to face and my life is preserved."

So in the darkness there was vision, in the loneliness there was a mysterious Presence, and after the wrestling there was peace.

WEDNESDAY, April 16. Genesis 33: 1-17. "And Esau ran to meet him and embraced him." Here, I am sure, we have some of the fruits of the night spent with the wrestling angel. Esau had the dew of grace upon his spirit, and who knows but that those "night dews were distilling" in the hours when Jacob contended with his mysterious antagonist? When we agonize in intercession the softening showers are always falling somewhere.

"And he fell on his neck and kissed him." And we, who read the story to-day, are carried by these words to a later day, when the Lord Jesus told us of the welcome the soiled and bankrupt son received when he returned to his Father's house. "He ran and fell on his neck and kissed him." Through some blessed ministry of grace Esau had gained the Father's spirit, and he met the erring brother in the fulness of reconciliation.

The greatest surprises are reserved for those who prevail with the angel in the night.

THURSDAY, April 17. Matthew 18: 15-22. Peter asked for a rule: "till seven times?" The Master refused a rule and gave him a principle: "Until seventy times seven!" That is to say, forgiveness is not a mood to be measured off by any arithmetic. Forgiveness does not stretch to a certain line and then suddenly change into revenge. It is not like milk that remains sweet within a certain temperature, and beyond that point turns sour. Genuine forgiveness is not changed by any changes of temperature. Even in the fierce provocation of seventy times seven its glorious strength remains. Forgiveness which sours as soon as "the sun ariseth with a burning heat" is assuredly counterfeit. "Love never faileth."

Luke tells us that, when our Lord had given his reply to Peter, "the apostles said unto him, "Increase our faith!" It was in every way the vital response. When our Lord makes a demand upon our souls which we feel is beyond our strength, the only rightful way is to seek the reinforcement of our resources. Now faith provides the channel through which the divine energy flows into the soul. The measure of our faith is just the measure of our receptiveness. "According to thy faith be it done unto thee."

FRIDAY, April 18. I Corinthians 13. In this chapter we are permitted to gaze at the most exquisite jewel in all the shining graces of the soul. It is turned round and round in order that we may see its manifold colors, always wonderful, always lovely. Let me at this time fix my attention upon two.

"Love beareth all things." Here the word "beareth" has the significance of a roof. Love holds a roof over other people, protecting them from the pitiless heat and cold. Love receives the pitiless blast upon itself and shelters others from pain and oppression. "With His stripes we are healed." That was the supreme bearing. "He bore our sins and carried our sorrows."

"Love endureth all things." The genial light of its patience never burns out. Love has its own mystic oil which keeps the lamp aflame through the longest night. When other lights have failed, the lights of curiosity, and even of duty, love's light shines on. Nothing can put it out! It "endureth all things." Watch the patience of love in its ministry to infirmity! Watch the patience of love in its quest of the prodigal son! It goes down the long desolate road, "o'er moor, and fen, and crag, and torrent." and it never surrenders its search. Love's patience always has "her perfect work."

SATURDAY, April 19. Luke 6: 27-36. "Love your enemies." But can we love to order? If the command related to an external ordinance we could obey it. If it were some ceremonial duty we could execute it. But love is a disposition, subtle, mysterious, capricious, and it seems to be about the last thing in the world to move at the dictates of a commandment. If the Lord say to me, "Give a tenth of thy substance to benevolence," I can go and do it, but if he say, "Thou shalt love," can I answer, "I will go and do it"? Can I light that holy fire at another one's bidding?

If it could not be done it would never have been commanded. It may be that I cannot light the fire, but I can build the altar. It may be that I cannot provide the vital spark, but I can lay the train. I can make all needful preparations, and when all is ready "the Lord will send the fire!"

What can I do? Well, first of all, I can pray for my enemy. I can ask that God will visit him with spiritual grace and bounty. I shall be amazed how this will change the atmosphere of my own soul. No one ever prays for his enemy without himself receiving the gentle dews of God's grace. Then, in the second place, we can search for the lovely in our enemy. And we shall make some great discoveries. And, lastly, we can do our enemy a kindness. Do all this and "the fire of God" will fall!

These Daily Meditations will appear in each issue through 1913.

IN HONOR OF FATHER

BY MARGARET E. SANGSTER, JR.

MOTHER'S Day has been mentioned and praised for many years; poems have been written about it, stories have been dedicated to it, and songs have been made especially to thrill the stoniest heart and bring tears to the eyes. But in the dim background of the radiant picture, crowded out of his place, and breathing from afar off the sweetness of the white carnations worn in honor of mother, looms father, a patient, well-nigh forgotten figure. Shall we let him stay there in his shadowy niche?

Margaret E. Sangster, Jr.

It would seem that father is going to be brought at last into his well-deserved prominence. For years he has been left out, but now the celebrators of Mother's Day have remembered him, and added Father's Day to their list. Father's Day is going to be celebrated on the second Sunday in April. The churches will, perhaps, recognize it; the sons and daughters will, if they remember, wear a flower; and father himself may perhaps feel very proud of his day.

AND why should father be neglected? Doesn't the Bible say "Honor thy father and thy mother?" And isn't your father just as much one of your parents as your mother is? And, although he does not cut quite so romantic a figure in fiction, he is just as loving and just as true as he can be.

Although the sweet, soul-stirring ballads speak of the mother that rocks her baby and sings cradle songs; of the mother to whom the boy pours out his little troubles—the mother who listens to the secrets of her daughter; what poems speak of the father, the father who listens to the lessons, and reads the stories, who makes it all right with the angry schoolmaster, and smilingly pays the bills? Don't you think that father, too, deserves a place in the red-letter days of the people?

I was going through a crowded city street the other day, when I chanced to hear a hand-organ playing a rollicking tune, much to the delight of a dirty, half-clad throng of dancing children. The song was an old bit of ragtime. It ran something like this:

"What's the matter with father? He's all right!"

The words may not be very beautiful and inspiring, but the thought is good.

FATHERS, yes, and mothers too, are being rather ignored lately. This modern culture movement brings with it something of a shock to old-fashioned parents. Father, when he gives his opinion on politics, does not like to be informed by his son, just out of college, that his ideas are all wrong, any more than mother likes to hear, from a society daughter, that her methods of housekeeping are far from perfect. There have been many mothers mentioned in history, and in fable, and in plain everyday little "heart stories." Yet of the fathers we hear but little, although the life of every good father is marked by love and self-sacrifice.

I read some time ago about a peasant boy who had been outlawed for some misdeed. His father mourned so unceasingly for him that the young man used to make surreptitious visits back to his home. He was successful until one night the police found him out and followed him to the modest little hut. They caught him in a room with the old father, and when he tried to escape they leveled their guns at him. But the old peasant flung himself in front of his boy just as the shots were fired. The son escaped, but father died, with three bullets in his breast.

WE FREQUENTLY read some news item telling how a father was drowned trying to save his child; how a man dashed into a burning building after his baby; or how some faithful old heart ceased to beat on hearing of a loved one's death.

And over and above us all, there is another Father; the most loving of them all—the Father who paints the blue sky, plants the flowers, and sends the rain; who watches over us, loves us, and gives us our daily bread and every other good gift that we so often thoughtlessly enjoy. The Father who "gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life."

* * *

I HOPE with all my heart that Father's Day will take a hold on the public as Mother's Day did. I hope that the sun will shine clearly, and that the birds will sing their sweetest songs on the second Sunday in April. And more than anything else I hope that the sons and daughters will pause for a little moment, and think with love in their hearts as they pin father's flower on the lapel of his coat. Then perhaps the day will have a lasting good, and maybe the fathers, as well as the mothers and the children, will learn to enjoy it and be glad of it.

TRAINED NURSE

Remarks about Nourishing Food.

"A physician's wife gave me a package of Grape-Nuts one day, with the remark that she was sure I would find the food very beneficial, both for my own use and for my patients. I was particularly attracted to the food, as at that time the weather was very hot and I appreciated the fact that Grape-Nuts requires no cooking.

"The food was deliciously crisp, and most inviting to the appetite. After making use of it twice a day for three or four weeks, I discovered that it was a most wonderful invigorator. I used to suffer greatly from exhaustion, headaches and depression of spirits. My work had been very trying at times and indigestion had set in.

"Now I am always well and ready for any amount of work, have an abundance of active energy, cheerfulness and mental poise. I have proved to my entire satisfaction that this change has been brought about by Grape-Nuts food.

"The fact that it is predigested is a very desirable feature. I have had many remarkable results in feeding Grape-Nuts to my patients, and I cannot speak too highly of the food. My friends constantly comment on the change in my appearance. I have gained 9 pounds since beginning the use of this food."

"There's a Reason." Read the little book, "The Road to Wellville" in pkgs.

THE VOICE OF THE NATION ON ROME

How to Deal With Rome

I HAVE been very much interested in the position THE CHRISTIAN HERALD is taking on the question of the Church of Rome, especially the article by Mr. Alexander Robertson in a recent issue. It seems to me there is light in it and the only solution of this question, in harmony with the fundamental principles of our government. I confess that it has been a perplexing problem in my own mind and many others how Rome could be dealt with and not violate the principle of religious liberty that our government grants to all alike. But if the use of power, other than spiritual power, makes a church a political power, then there is a solid ground on which to meet and repel the advances and attacks of Rome. I am glad that this is coming to the front among our American people. It seems to me that every Protestant and every true American should be thoroughly aroused to shake off the fetters by which Rome is trying to bind our beloved country. If we oppose Rome for using political power to accomplish her aims in religious things, are not Protestants violating their own principles if they try to advance their religious measures through the means of legislation? I am deeply interested in this subject and I would like to see it worked out consistently and to the preservation of the principles that are so dear to every true American heart. I would be glad to see a free discussion of this question in your columns. E. G. FARNSWORTH.

Convent Inspection in Arkansas

A CORRESPONDENT, writing from Little Rock, Ark., under date of March 8, says that House Bill No. 58, introduced by Mr. Posey, Grant County, "to provide for the inspection of all public or private hospitals, log camps, reformatory homes, houses of detention, convents, asylums, sectarian seminaries, schools or institutions by the grand jury of the county in which such institutions or log camps are situated" was called up on Saturday, March 1, and "after a heated argument passed by 51 to 18—31 members not voting." The vote is rendered the more significant by the fact that the bill had been reported back to the House with a recommendation "that it do not pass."

An Invaluable Pamphlet

THE article of Dr. Alex. Robertson, "How Italy Fought the Papacy," in your issue of March 5, seems to me to be invaluable in the present conflict to check the political aggression of the Roman hierarchy in our country. The victory gained in Italy, a Roman Catholic country, points very clearly the way in which victory could be gained here. This article ought to be printed as a leaflet and distributed by millions all over the land, and handed to every Protestant as well as given to Catholics. I wish I had several hundreds for personal use.

H. GRENTZENBERG.

Minister M. E. Church, Westwood, Cincinnati, Ohio.

Protestantism Should Unite

SOME weeks ago I sent you a letter on the question of the "Nation's Voice on Rome." I have since read in several papers that the effort to combine churches in small communities is meeting with success. I consider this one of the greatest opportunities you have ever had to extend the kingdom, and counterbalance the growth of the Romish efforts, if you will unceasingly present this need before your readers. A sixty years' active membership in churches as an officer (and superintendent for over thirty years, during which I have been a speaker repeatedly in Sunday school conventions) has brought me in contact with many Christian workers, and I am confident if you took up this matter it would meet with hearty approval.

Brooklyn, N. Y. H. S.

the inquiry-room, where he found peace. While this was happening the younger one had gone home to cheer his mother's heart with the good news. He found her on her knees. She had been knocking at the mercy-seat. While she was doing so her boy came in and told her that her prayer had been answered; his soul was saved. It was not long before the other brother came in and told his story—how he, too, had been blessed."

Alas, there are many families and neighborhoods where this lesson on the brothers' feud dispelled by prayer is most pertinent and greatly needed. In many a home two brothers or two sisters, or a brother and sister, or a father and son, or mother and daughter, or even a husband and wife, have allowed momentary anger over some real or fancied wrong to harden into a grudge or a feud, which grows bigger and bigger as it is rolled about in the mind, until it occupies more thought than almost anything else in life. In many cases there is only a misunderstanding; in others only a momentary wrong quickly regretted that should have been quickly confessed and quickly forgiven; or, if not, the other party should forget it through a saving sense of humor, or through a consideration of human nature, or through the grace that forgave even murderers, as when Stephen said, "Lord, lay not this sin to their charge," and when Jesus said, "Father, forgive them, they know not what they do."

I would as soon keep an ash barrel in my parlor as a grudge in my heart. Hear the divine command: "If thy brother sin against thee, go and tell him his fault between him and thee alone." "If thou bring thy gift to the altar and there rememberest that thy brother hath aught against thee, leave there thy gift and first be reconciled to thy brother." (Matt. 5: 23, 24; see also Matt. 18: 23-25.) He who refuses to forgive any one bars himself from the Lord's Prayer, "Forgive as we forgive," which, in such cases, becomes a request that God will refuse to forgive us as we refuse to forgive others. There is many a home where, because love has been displaced by grudges, the soul of the home is lacking.

Not in homes alone, but in business and politics and social pleasures, a quick and frank apology for wrong done another is a sign of true nobility.

There remains one beautiful truth in this lesson that may well be added to the stories of family reconciliation, which, in many cases, should be hastened for the sake of the children. When Jacob and Esau were reconciled, Esau was willing to give Jacob's caravan first place as they should march on, but Jacob preferred Esau should go first because his company was all made up of strong men, while Jacob had children and lambs to whose weakness his march must be adapted. "You go first," he said to Esau, "and I will lead on softly, according to the pace of the children." Not in homes and schools and churches only should we move "according to the pace of the children," but in our town and city life we must ever keep in mind that the children are all about, and the streets must be made safe every way for their little feet. It would be a fitting motto for the mayor of a city: "I will lead on softly according to the pace of the children."

THE PAY OF EVANGELISTS

IN YOUR issue of March 19 you ask pastors, etc., to answer (in reference to the recent revival in Columbus, Ohio) "What Do You Think of It"? I am pastor of the Central M. E. Church, Wilkesbarre, Pa., with a membership of 1,400 and a Sunday school of 1,943. I state that simply to indicate that I look through a pastor's eyes. What do I think? Mr. Sunday, the evangelist in question, is now in this city, has been here four Sundays, and will be four Sundays more. His financial plan here is his usual plan. The collections are devoted to local expenses strictly. Mr. Sunday doesn't even see a cent of it. These expenses are very large—the building of the immense tabernacle, seating ten thousand; the local keep of the evangelistic party, of which there are fourteen, etc. We have 6,700 girls and women in factories and mills. Two of Mr. Sunday's helpers (women) work with these girls and women all the time. Four to five days a week free luncheons are served to those in different factories and meetings held during the luncheon. This costs much. But the returns here are amazing. Two of his men do the same kind of work among the twelve thousand men in our factories. That costs much. The local expenses are very large, but with ten thousand people at a service and two services a day (three on Sunday), it is nothing. We stopped taking collections at the end of the third week, had enough for all expenses, and all that was done to raise it was that the plates were passed. No pressure, no urging, no exhortation.

On the last Sunday a freewill offering will be taken for the evangelist, and in the same way as the current collections, but of the offering taken the last Sunday the evangelist doesn't by any means get it all. Out of it he pays one-half of the salaries of his army of helpers; the other half is one of the items of the local current expenses and is so stated repeatedly in the meetings, and all these receive from $3,000 to $5,000 a year each. The offering at Columbus for the evangelist was $21,000, and on that you base your bald declaration that "evangelism 'pays' one evangelist at the rate of nearly $200,000 a year, etc." Mr. Sunday stayed at Columbus eight weeks. His campaigns are eight-week campaigns. He holds five meetings a year—forty weeks. If he got $21,000 each time—he never got anything like it before—the offering for three years has averaged slightly under $9,000—but if he got $21,000, that would be a total of $105,000, and out of that one-half of his helpers' salaries are paid.

I wouldn't work as Mr. Sunday does (no man could if not literally made of steel) for ten times what he gets. I never knew another man with such a passion for men (and I was with Mr. Moody in two campaigns and Chapman and Torrey one each). People are converted by the thousands, and in Columbus—if no one gave but the converts—they averaged a trifle more than $1 each in the offering for the evangelist.

helpless and could only pull the bedclothes over her head and almost shake to bits. It lasted a long time.

Finally a voice said, "Can't I do something for you?" It was Tom, who had unfastened the door between their rooms and come to her bedside. "Isn't there anything that you can take to stop it?"

Aunt Hetty's very small face emerged to look up at him with a gasping gratitude. "A cracker—and some water—and sit me up a little," she managed to tell him faintly.

He ran for his own pillow and raised her against the two together; then lit a candle and went downstairs for the water and cracker.

"Aunt Hetty," he said, "I'll leave my door a little open nights and I can always come in when you cough and lift you up."

"I'll hope not to disturb you often," she whispered; "it would be most awfully kind, for I'm so weak when I'm lying flat, I can't get up alone. Bless you, dear."

Tom returned to his room and crawled back between his warm covers with the strangest, chokiest, happiest sensation he'd ever known. The rest of the family might feel as they pleased, but he could take care of and help the unwelcome member of the family and somehow like it. He was asleep directly, but in the morning he thought further, with a sort of secret wonder, as to what he had felt and was still feeling. He didn't intend to say a word, because of course they were all dead-set against poor old Aunt Hetty, but before he went off to town with his father he took Emmy, who was his favorite sister, aside, and said that he thought that it would be kind of a good idea if she managed to slip upstairs once in a while and see if "that old lady" was really all right. Emmy nodded wisely and promised.

Mrs. Hyde went out for an hour every morning to "do the errands," and this morning Emmy ran upstairs the instant that her mother was gone.

"Aunt Hetty, that little flower makes your tray look so bright that I do wish that I could get something like it for the dining-room table. What did you have on your dining-room table when you had a house?"

Aunt Hetty took the query quite simply. "I used to pick green shrub twigs," she said, "and tie a bright bow close in where they stuck in the vase. If you've got some old bits of silk I can show you how to do it. It does look bright these dark November days."

Emmy went away and was back soon with the ribbon. "Can't Katie see how you do it, too?" she asked, for it was Saturday morning and both were home.

Aunt Hetty looked very happy. "I'd love to have you both in here," she said, "but I'm sure there's a lot of work to do downstairs. Isn't there?"

Emmy stood still for a second or so and then said, "We're sweeping the dining-room and—and Katie sews ever so much more nicely than I do. I'll send her up to make the bows and I'll go on with the sweeping."

Her aunt looked at her with eyes that understood. "You're a nice girl," she said. That was all.

When Mrs. Hyde returned the downstairs was all fresh for Sunday, the table laid for lunch, and in its center sat a china vase with bright dashes of red silk showing through overflowing green sprays.

"Now that's really very pretty," said the mother approvingly; "who thought of it?"

"I thought of it," said Emmy. "I saw something like it and Katie made the bows."

"It's very nice indeed. I wonder that we never had some such thing before. By the way, have either of you been up to see your aunt? While I was walking down I kept thinking of that poor old woman, and we must fuss a little with her. It isn't right to just make her comfortable and then leave her to herself, you know."

"We've been up," said Emmy.

At noon Mrs. Hyde took up Aunt Hetty's tray herself. Aunt Hetty wasn't expecting her and had her little table all laid and waiting. She had a clean towel spread over the small stand, the brave little red pot on the corner and a wee pepper and salt beside it. Mrs. Hyde noticed how the tray in her hands looked in comparison. But Aunt Hetty did not look one bit confused over the situation.

"I'm sorry to give you all those stairs," she said, with her usual smile, "but my part of the universal plan is to be here now and I can't help it any more than you can."

"It isn't a bit of trouble," declared her nephew's wife. "After the dishes are washed I'm coming up to see you to the bed for your nap my own self."

When she went back downstairs she saw the changed dining-table with understanding eyes. Light was beginning to shine in many dark places.

A few days after at dinner one night Ted came rushing in late.

"Where have you been?" said his mother.

"I went way out home with Billy Cart. I told him we had a lame aunt we had to feed trays upstairs, and he said they had a lame grandmother, and they never bothered a bit with her. They had a chair with rings under it, and you stick two poles through and they carry her all over, so he took me home to see it, and I saw his grandmother too, and she was fine. She sat in the chair and made them carry her about so I could see how it worked, and then she said she'd come down here Monday in their automobile and bring it for us to try and take Aunt Hetty for a ride. She says she goes to ride alone every day because the family is all away only her and Billy, and I'm to go home with her from school and ride down with her in the automobile." All this in one breath.

Mr. Hyde looked across the pretty table at his wife. It was a glance full of meaning.

"Really, dear, I think that it would be a splendid idea," she said quickly. "When Aunt Hetty wanted to be quiet she could always have her tray, and the rest of the time I think that she'd enjoy being with us. Don't you, children?"

There was quite a chorus of assent. Somehow the whole standpoint as to Aunt Hetty had completely altered, no one knew just how or why.

A little later they went into the sitting-room, and Tom went upstairs. And then very suddenly he appeared in their midst with the family burden in his arms. "You don't need a carrier," he said. "I can take her anywhere. She's not heavy."

"But I didn't want to be taken," said Aunt Hetty. "I don't want to ever interfere in your family life."

There was a perfect outbreak of protest and from then on The Burden that had descended in their midst became the center of the household.

The pretty rosy curtains crept back to Aunt Hetty's windows and the comfortable rocker to her fireside. A new kind of love and order and consideration stole into the house. The one who had caused it all to be often smiled quietly, "Suppose I'd really been a burden," she said to herself sometimes. What an awful time I should have had! I can't understand burdens; blessings are so much nicer. The thing is to feel good inside and never forget that it was God that put you where you are." Then the funny little smile crinkled round her lips and she said, "And if I'm true to my belief I must see Him as having put my railway stock where it is, too."

Favorite Verses*

CAN you not remember, or are not some of you enjoying occasionally in the present, an evening around the home circle when, instead of listening to one passage of Scripture read by your father, you have all taken turns repeating from memory "favorite verses"? It is a beautiful thing to do, especially appropriate to the Sunday evening hour just before dark. In after life those twilights and those verses will come back to you with tenderest strength and strongest blessing.

It is an excellent idea, this memorizing and repeating of favorite passages, and it is a fine thing to have the young people's societies studying together these selections which have cheered the hearts of countless Christians. How many wonderful places there are in the Book of God upon which have fallen the tears of sorrowing people who were finding comfort and strength there; how many places that have been brightened by the smiles of happy hearts; how many that have been worn by little fingers tracing the precious words, and by trembling fingers of grandfathers and grandmothers following, with fading eyes, the "wonderful words of life!"

The Nineteenth Psalm is a cluster of "favorite verses." It consists of two distinct parts, the first (verses 1-6), telling of the revelation of God in nature, the second (7-14) telling of his revelation in the written word.

"The heavens declare the glory of God." If men will look at the stars they are likely to find God. It has been said that "the undevout astronomer is mad." The great orator, Edward Everett, closes his wonderful description of a sunrise with the words: "I am filled with amazement when I am told that in this enlightened age there are persons who can witness this daily manifestation of the power and wisdom of the Creator and yet say in their hearts, 'There is no God.'" S. H. Hadley, the beloved city mission worker, used to describe graphically how he looked up at the stars when he came out from Jerry McAuley's mission saved. For years he had not looked at them. He had not thought of them. When he found Christ he turned his eyes upward. God was there in the stars, as he had been at the altar of the mission room with his gracious salvation.

When we study the last part of the Psalm, in which David expresses his delight and confidence in God's law, we should not forget how meager were the Scriptures he had in comparison with those we possess. He had little if anything else than the first five books of our present Bible, yet he found enough in them to fill his soul and his lips with praise. How much greater cause for thanksgiving have we who may read not only this ancient law and history, but all the later history of God's chosen people, the words of his prophets, the rest of the psalms and the whole message of the New Testament, with its picture of the Saviour, its record of his words and deeds, his death and resurrection.

The law, the testimony, the precepts, the commandments, the fear, the judgments of the Lord are perfect, sure, right, pure, clean, true, and righteous altogether. They restore the soul, make wise the simple, rejoice the heart, enlighten the eyes, endure forever. They are more desirable than gold, and sweeter than honey. They warn the servant of God, and in the keeping of them there is great reward.

Verses 12-14 contain a prayer. David speaks of the inadvertent errors, which the most devout soul will occasionally make, and prays to be delivered even from "secret" faults as well as from outward sins. It is inspiring to catch this note of victory over sin so early in the spiritual

Can't Break

Your Baby Cannot Break This Bottle

Note these advantages of the Hygeia Non-Breakable Bottle over all other nursing bottles:

No glass to this bottle—the food-bag is pure gum.

You can turn the food-bag wrong side out and clean it perfectly.

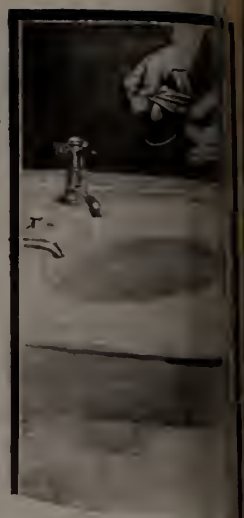
It can be reduced, or increased in size, to hold from a teaspoonful to 8 oz. (no other such bottle).



Turn Wrong Side Out To Clean

The lightest weight nursing bottle in the world. Strong enough to last indefinitely.

The HYGEIA NON-BREAKABLE Nursing Bottle

consists of four parts. There is a pure rubber food-bag into which you put your baby's food. You simply drop the food-bag into a pure aluminum cylinder. The non-collapsible, breast-shaped Hygeia nipple fits over the top of both food-bag and aluminum case. The infant nurses naturally as from mother's breast. Pressure of air collapses the food-bag. Infant cannot "nurse air." There is never any air in the food-bag; it simply flattens out as it empties.

This outfit can be completely sterilized and can be mailed anywhere in ordinary mailing tube. When you buy one of these bottles, you have a bottle that cannot wear out. It is a marvelous improvement on the old-style nursing bottle. Price is 75c complete at druggists, but in the long run is the most economical bottle, as only the rubber parts ever wear out. Sent postpaid, if your dealer cannot supply, but ask him first.

We also manufacture the New Hygeia Nursing Bottle and the Ball-C Nipple for the old-fashioned, small-neck nursing bottle. If you still use the old-fashioned, small-neck nursing bottle, ask for a sample of the Ball-C Nipple.

history of mankind. The middle of verse 13 reminds us of Paul's confident assertion in Rom. 6: 14: "Sin shall not have dominion over you." The heart of God's servant then shall be "perfect," perfect in its intention, in its desire to do God's will. The psalm closes with that "favorite verse," which has been made, in prayer and song, the petition of countless faithful hearts: "Let the words of my mouth and the meditation of my heart be acceptable in thy sight, O Lord, my strength and my Redeemer." With the New Testament in our hands we may have even greater confidence than David had to expect that this prayer will, moment by moment, be answered, after we have received the cleansing for which he longed, and which Jesus provided for by his death on the cross.

The Test of Money*

THE reality and strength of any one's convictions can be measured only by the sacrifices he is willing to make for them. Most of the sacrifices we are called upon to make for the sake of our faith in Christ are very trivial. We have small chance for martyrdom or serious persecution. But every one of us must meet the test in relation to our money. How much of it are we willing to give for the work of Christ?

Jesus demanded of the rich young ruler that he give up all. He does not make the same literal demand of every one of his followers, but he does demand that we acknowledge that all our money belongs to him. He makes us merely the stewards of what we call ours; it all belongs to him anyway, whether we recognize the fact or not. He asks us to recognize it, to consult him as to how it shall be used, to do with it as we know he would counsel us to do if he were talking with us in the flesh as he talked to this rich young man years ago.

In George Macdonald's novel, The Elect Lady, there is a pitiful and rather terrible picture of the old laird dying, with the precious cup, which he had so long hidden and almost worshiped, clutched under the bedclothes. It was all the treasure he had. He had not laid up any in the other world. He must go to that other world now, leaving his one treasure behind him.

How like a mockery that Sermon on the Mount sounds in the face of our modern civilization! If Jesus was right we are most terribly wrong. And we know he was right. Shall we not adopt for ourselves and do all we can to get others to adopt his plan of living simply and trustfully, not seeking earthly but heavenly treasure?

The next reference (Luke 10: 33-35) is part of the old story of the Good Samaritan. The thieves got earthly treasure, taking away the traveler's money; the Samaritan got heavenly treasure, the record of a kind deed done.

The words of Paul in our last reference (I Tim. 6: 10) are most striking. He speaks of people who have "pierced themselves through with many sorrows." That is strong language. Who are these people who have brought upon themselves such distress? They are people who "coveted after" money. Money led them from faith to sorrow and disaster. Yet it is not money itself that is "the root of all evil"; it is the love of money. Do not love it; it is an unworthy, a shameful thing to love. Use it for God's glory; use whatever earthly treasures you may possess in laying up eternal treasure by doing good to the souls and minds and bodies of others in the name of Jesus.

A SUMMER SCENE IN THE LITTLE MIAMI VALLEY

This photograph was taken from the old Indian lookout at Fort Ancient, Ohio, and shows the type of country that has been affected by the disastrous floods.

What Mr. Olds Won't Tell

Here, as we see it, lies the secret of Mr. Olds' success.

Here are facts which Mr. Olds don't tell, and which we think that men should know.

Mr. R. E. Olds, by birth and training, is a typical engineer.

His father was a builder of engines. And the son's first success came in building gas engines.

Olds gasoline engines were famous half the world over, long before men thought of automobiles.

Not a Salesman

Mr. Olds takes no part in selling Reo the Fifth. Nor does Mr. Olds' concern.

The whole factory organization devotes itself to building cars men should buy.

No matter how urgent the demand. No matter the time or cost. No Reo the Fifth ever goes from the factory until every inspector has passed it.

As a result, the limit is 50 cars a day. Last year's demand called for twice the production. This year's output is oversold to dealers by some 5,000 cars.

Cautious—Extreme

Mr. Olds insists on utter perfection, on exactness, on superstrength.

If the best thing costs five times as much as the next best, he always insists on the best.

And all driving parts in this 30-horsepower car are built to meet 45-horsepower requirements.

Twenty-six years have taught Mr Olds that lesser cars can't stand the strains imposed by American roads. So he builds a car that will.

This Takes Courage

He uses, for instance, 15 roller bearings where others are content with ball bearings.

He uses 190 drop forgings, because steel castings often have flaws.

He has steel made to formula and, to know it is right, he analyzes each lot twice.

He tests his gears in a 50-ton crushing machine. He tests his springs for 100,000 vibrations. He tests every engine for 48 hours, and in five radical ways.

Important parts are hand-fitted and ground over and over.

He uses a $75 magneto.

A doubly-heated carburetor—

Oversize tires—34x4.

Thus he is spending $200 per car, above what is necessary, and on parts that men rarely see. It takes courage to do that, in these days, and wait years for results to show.

MR. R. E. OLDS, Designer

But Time Has Told

Tens of thousands of users now have learned that Olds-built cars endure. Lesser cars at first seem like them, but the difference shows in time.

Mr. Olds' methods have saved millions of dollars in upkeep, repairs and troubles. And time has thus brought to his latest car a demand which he can't supply.

Men are now buying cars for keeps, and they want cars built like this.

His Efficiency

The price on Reo the Fifth, despite all these extremes, is due to Mr. Olds' efficiency. His is a model factory, splendidly equipped. Every part of the car is built there.

Every machine and tool and appliance is adapted to this one model. That fact alone saves about 20 per cent, and accounts for the price on this car.

The Ideal Control

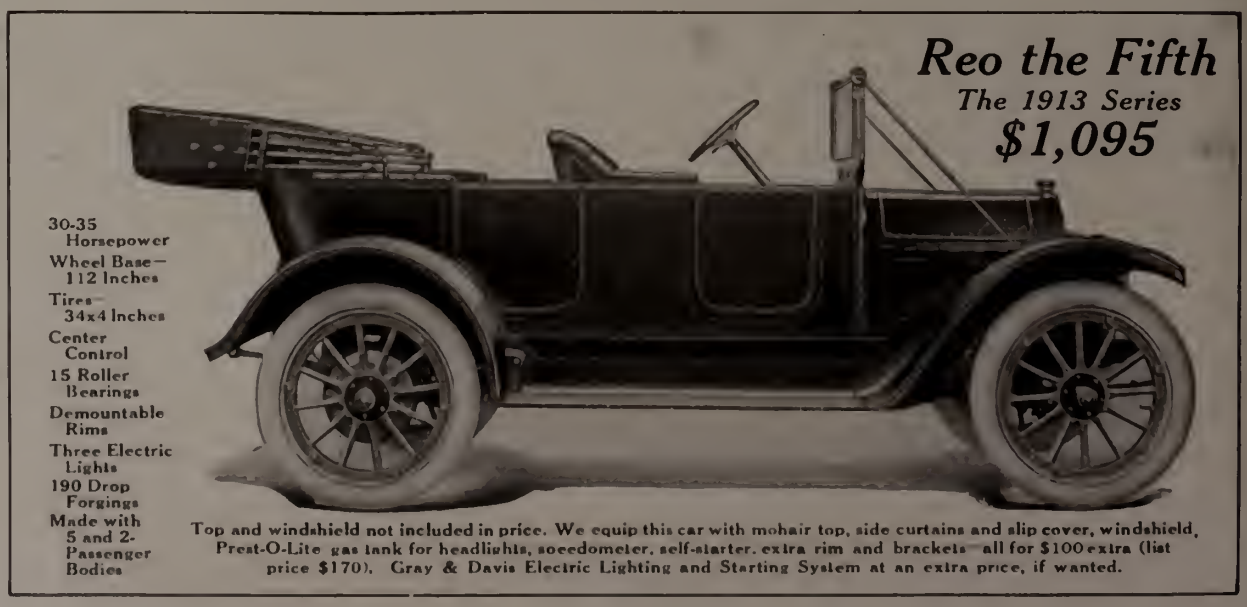
Reo the Fifth is the only car with the ideal center control. All the gear shifting is done with one small rod, entirely out of the way. It is done by moving this rod only three inches in each of four directions.

There are no side levers, no center levers, to clog the way of the driver. Both brakes are operated by foot pedals.

And this car, of course, has the left side drive, like all leading cars.

In every respect this car marks the limit in luxury, convenience and comfort.

Write for our catalog and we will tell you where to see this car.



Top and windshield not included in price. We equip this car with mohair top, side curtains and slip cover, windshield, Prest-O-Lite gas tank for headlights, speedometer, self-starter, extra rim and brackets—all for $100 extra (list price $170). Gray & Davis Electric Lighting and Starting System at an extra price, if wanted.

PREPARING FOR RESCUE WORK MID THE RUSHING WATERS OF THE FLOOD

RESCUING WOMEN AND CHILDREN BY BOAT IN COLUMBUS

Photos, copyright, International News Service

THE NEEDS OF THE FLOOD SUFFERERS

THIS is the need we must meet—the need of those who are members of our own CHRISTIAN HERALD Family and the friends of the Family. From a little town in West Virginia comes this letter: "Our family has taken the paper for years and we know how many sufferers in China, India, Bulgaria, and many other lands, as well as in our own home land, have been aided by the contributions given through THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. . . . Our little town of 2,000 people (Point Pleasant) and a little village, Henderson, W. Va., across the Kanawha River from us, have only a few houses out of water—perhaps twenty-five. Many of the houses have been swept away entirely and many more have been torn from their foundations and wrecked. Our loss is greater than we can estimate. Some of our business men have lost all and every one has been seriously crippled financially by the flood. Many have crowded in the courthouse and the schoolhouse and have no homes to go back to. Our hospital, Charleston, has supplied us with food, but we now need money to clean and repair our homes and build new ones. We know you have many calls . . . but hope you can do something for our people."

This letter is only one of many. It shows the situation in the small towns and villages and on the farms of the flooded Ohio Valley where the newspaper correspondents seldom go and whose plight is not told in the despatches from the cities. From almost every city in Ohio Valley have come reports of the highest flood stages since 1884. In many cases the reports are accompanied by appeals for laborers, for food supplies and for funds that may be used for the rehabilitation of dwelling houses. The levees along the Ohio and some of its tributaries have given way in many places and large areas are submerged from five to eighteen feet.

The Federal military authorities who are in charge of the relief work in Ohio show their fears for the future in this despatch, which was sent to the War Department: "Do not send any more government supplies unless the department's representatives on the ground request it. Any supplies available should be held for possible needs farther down the river. Major Normoyle has received the great bulk of the supplies sent to Columbus and is busily engaged in shipping them out to points where required."

Sufficient food to sustain life has been provided by the government and those relief funds that have come to hand are being carefully distributed. It is aid to the homeless and those whose dwellings have been made uninhabitable by the flood that must be provided now. Figures are available for the city of Dayton, and they may well serve as an index to the similar needs in smaller places. A reliable news despatch says: "There are 15,000 dwellings which must be plastered and papered before they can be occupied. There are 4,500 houses which will require new foundations, roofs, doors, windows, or chimneys. There are 2,000 houses which it will be necessary to raze." Dayton's business men are planning to raise a great loan from the government by pooling all the best of their local property securities as collateral. In smaller places such joint action is not possible and many thousands must face poverty and hardship unless generously aided through the days of readjustment. From Indianapolis came a despatch which read: "Hundreds of thousands of dollars are needed to relieve suffering among the flood refugees here, the relief committee reports. Three thousand families have lost all or part of their house furnishings. It was decided to-day to start popular subscriptions."

RUSHING SUPPLIES TO DAYTON, OHIO, FROM THE WAR DEPARTMENT IN WASHINGTON, D. C.

Mr. John Kadel, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD'S special representative, wrote as follows from Dayton on his arrival immediately after the waters began to abate:

"Food supplies are at present plentiful and no one need hunger or thirst. However, I do not know how this state of affairs will be in three or four days. Our streets in the flooded districts are a deplorable sight, dead horses everywhere. How the humans escaped I cannot conceive; there must have been some miraculous escape. One of the New York doctors that came down on the train with me told me that smallpox and

RESCUE MISSION WORKERS TO MEE P

SEVERAL hundred superintendents and workers in Gospel Rescue Missions are to gather in New York City next month (May) in the sixth annual convention of the National Federation of Gospel Missions. They will, in a pilgrimage to the Mecca of missions which Jerry McAuley founded, seek to attain a fresh vision of McAuley's foundation, a broader fellowship with each other, and a new grip on the Gospel message in the comparison of experiences and union of prayer forces during the sessions.

Equally important will be the establishment of a new basis of co-operation between churches and rescue missions. Many metropolitan pastors are firm friends of the rescue mission and welcome its product. Few churches of any standing are otherwise; yet it is doubtless true that the majority of the ministers have slight first-hand knowledge of the workings of the rescue missions, or of the nightly miracles there performed in the reclamation of human waste. It is planned to ask the churches of the Metropolitan District to open their pulpits to the mission workers for one or both services on Convention Sunday to tell the story of the missions, and the relation the church should bear toward them, incidentally, without an appeal for funds. This, it is believed, will cement the bond between church and mission in the love and unity of God through Jesus Christ.

The National Federation of Gospel Missions was born at the funeral of Evangelist Samuel H. Hadley, the successor of Jerry McAuley. During his life Mr. Hadley was a source of inspiration to all mission workers—a bond in himself which drew all into fellowship. One of the superintendents who gazed upon the face of the "Apostle to the Drunkard" for the last time involuntarily asked himself: "Who will draw us together now? What can be done to unite the missions?" He was so burdened with the necessity that he went to talk over the matter with the editor of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD and with others, and as a result of this conference the Federation was launched.

Conventions have been held in Manhattan, Jersey City, Poughkeepsie, Washington and Boston, and district conventions in Philadelphia, Reading, and Syracuse. Membership is open to superintendents of Gospel missions and leading workers of either sex on recommendation of the executive committee.

Some of the noted rescue missionaries besides those given in the list of officers who are members of the Federation are: P. E. Call, Dover Street Mission, Boston; Rev. George D. Hadley, son of the late Colonel H. H. Hadley, Jersey City; John G. Hallimond, Bowery Mission, New York; Mrs. John R. McConica, Norfolk, Va.; T. J. Noonan, Midnight

Such despatches as show the conditions in the smaller towns and villages tell of conditions that eclipse any that prevailed in the larger cities. One of the latest advices, dated from Evansville, Ind., reads in part as follows: "Extreme suffering was reported to-day from Uniontown, Ky., where the 1,400 inhabitants and 600 refugees from the surrounding country were huddled in the fair grounds on the only dry spot in an area of ten miles square. The people were without food. Ten thousand rations and tents were sent to Uniontown this afternoon."

RESCUING THE AGED AND HELPLESS IN DAYTON

. PIERPONT MORGAN DEAD

WORLD-WIDE interest and concern was felt at the news of the death on March 31, at Rome, Italy, of J. Pierpont Morgan, America's greatest financier. Mr. Morgan l the United States on January 7 for a pleasure t in Egypt. Rumors of his grave weakness and c asional illness reached America from time to t e and a number of the items of the itinerary p nned by the financier's party were omitted. Mr. rgan returned to Naples on March 13, going ectly to Rome. He was able to go out occasion- , and on Easter Sunday attended services at the erican Protestant Episcopal Church. He was pelled, however, to leave the church before the vices were over and grew rapidly worse from s time. It was declared by members of Mr. rgan's party that he had no organic difficulty l his collapse was said to be due simply to over- rk. Dr. M. Allen Starr of New York, who was led in consultation during Mr. Morgan's illness, ted that his breakdown was caused by the strain ich he underwent while appearing before the jo Investigating Committee at Washington in the ter part of December. This is denied from ny quarters, however, particularly by the mem- s of the committee itself, who declare that Mr. rgan showed no signs of nervousness or fatigue ring the ordeal and that at the close of his testi- ny he thanked the members of the committee, lividually, for their courteous treatment.

Mr. Morgan was prominent and influential not ly as a financier, but as a lay-worker in the Epis- pal Church, as a supporter and founder of many arities, as a patron of art and a collector of tistic, literary and historic treasures. He had r years been recognized as the dominating figure American finance. His personal fortune at the ne of his death has been variously estimated at om $75,000,000 to $200,000,000.

Mr. Morgan was born at Hartford, Conn., on pril 17, 1837. He was the son of Julius Spencer organ and Juliette Pierpont, the daughter of John ierpont, a clergyman and poet. After a course at ie English high school in Boston he studied at the niversity of Göttingen in Germany, from which e returned in 1857, at the age of twenty, to begin ork as an employee of the private banking house f Duncan, Sherman & Company in New York. In 864 he became a partner in the firm of Dabney, Morgan & Company, and in 1871 he formed a con- ection with the Drexels of Philadelphia, founding ie firm of Drexel, Morgan & Company. This ame was retained until 1895, when the house be- ame J. P. Morgan & Company. His father died n 1890, and at this time the Philadelphia house of Drexel & Company, the London house and the Paris ranch of Morgan, Harjes & Company came under he sole control of J. Pierpont Morgan, making him leading factor in international financial opera- ions.

The story of Mr. Morgan's life is a story of the ssumption and control of vast enterprises of ransportation, manufacture and exchange. He ought railroads as a farmer buys cattle. By the ear 1902 the Morgan interest controlled 55,555,000 miles of American railroads, with a united capital of $3,000,949,571, the mileage more than equaling all the railroads of Great Britain and Germany combined.

Among the most prominent achievements of Mr. Morgan in the control and manipulation of railroad stocks were his gaining control of the Albany and Susquehanna Railroad from Jay Gould and James Fisk in 1870; the purchase of $25,000,000 worth of New York Central stock from W. H. Vanderbilt at a time when his company was in need of assistance; the purchase of the West Shore Railroad and its lease to the New York Central; the salvation of the Baltimore and Ohio Company in 1886; the assistance of the Philadelphia and Reading Company in 1887; the creation of the Southern Railway from the ruins of the Richmond and West Point Terminal Company; the reorganization of the Northern Pacific, the Chesapeake and Ohio, and the Erie. The Ontario and Western, the New York, New Haven and Hartford, the Louisville and Nashville, the Atlantic Coast Line, the Hocking Valley, the Monon and other lines came to Mr. Morgan for aid and ultimately were brought under his control. Some of his big deals were spectacular in the extreme, and many of them brought him instantly almost unprecedented gains. He purchased the New York Central stock just referred to at 120 and sold it in London at 130, securing for his house a profit of $1,000,000. His purchase of 150,000 shares of Northern Pacific stock in 1901 doubtless precipitated the panic of that year, but Mr. Morgan claimed that he felt bound in honor to protect the property which he had reorganized.

In 1902 Mr. Morgan attempted to organize the Northern Securities Company, a holding company designed to unite the Northern Pacific and Great Northern Railroads, but the organization was dissolved by the United States Government as being an illegal combination in restraint of trade. In 1884 he dominated a number of conferences of railroad executives who met to devise a way out of the disastrous rate wars being waged, and in 1890 he established the "gentlemen's agreement" against rate-cutting which is still in force.

An attempt to organize a great steamship combination, in which Mr. Morgan was believed to be interested, proved unsuccessful, but in 1911 the International Mercantile Marine Company, composed of the American Line, the Red Star Line, the White Star Line, the Atlantic Transport Company, the Leyland Line, and one or two others, was formed. The organization of the United States Steel Corporation has been called the climax of Mr. Morgan's career. He builded upon the industrial foundation laid by Mr. Carnegie, and although the common stock of the new corporation went so low that many were ruined before the venture reached a solid basis, the price of the stock slowly gained until in 1906 a dividend on Steel Common was declared. This justified Mr. Morgan's boast that he always stood by the ventures to which he lent his aid.

On a number of occasions Mr. Morgan came to the rescue of the United States Government in times of threatened or actual panic. He was criticized severely for reaping what were believed to be enormous profits from this aid to the government, but the fact remains that in 1878, 1893, 1895, 1899, and again in 1907 he steadied the financial condition of the nation when it was in grave peril. It was these events which led to the recognition of Mr. Morgan's almost unlimited power.

It is certain that Mr. Morgan contributed greatly to building up the industries and the wealth of America and to making the United States recognized as a financial power among the nations. In 1899 he arranged the assumption of the entire foreign debt of Mexico, amounting to $110,000,000, and in 1901 he obtained an American subscription of $50,000,000 to the loan raised by Great Britain for the prosecution of the Boer War.

Among the most important benefactions of Mr. Morgan were a million and a quarter dollars to the Harvard Medical School, $1,350,000 for the Lying-in Hospital on Second Avenue, New York, half a million dollars to the Cathedral of St. John the Divine, another half million to the New York Trade Schools, besides large gifts to the New York Young Men's Christian Association. He had also promised $2,000,000 to the University of the South in Sewanee, Tenn., provided the university collected an equal sum, which its authorities are hoping to do.

Mr. Morgan was almost as famous as a collector of rare books and works of art as he was in the world of finance. His private museum adjoining his home at the corner of Madison Avenue and Thirty-sixth Street was stored with many treasures. Aside from the paintings the museum contains rare editions of books, among which are the Ashburnham Gospels, the Golden Gospels of Henry VIII, and manuscripts from many of the world's greatest authors. He made royal gifts to other museums. His $200,000 collection of ancient textiles was given to Cooper Institute. He presented the Pfungst Collection of bronzes to the Metropolitan Museum of Art. He paid $1,000,000 for a collection of carvings, statuary and furniture declared by experts to be the greatest assemblage in the world of objects of applied art. Most of this collection he presented to the Metropolitan Museum.

An interesting incident in Mr. Morgan's career as an art patron was his refusal to bring a collection valued at $2,500,000 to this country because of his unwillingness to pay the duty demanded by the United States Government. He considered the duty on objects of art to be unwise and unjust. When legislation was enacted to remove this duty he brought his treasures home. Among the paintings owned by Mr. Morgan were Raphael's "Madonna of St. Antonio," and works of Van Dyck, Rembrandt, Constable, Turner and other masters.

Mr. Morgan was twice married. His first wife was Amelia Sturgis, to whom he was married in 1861. She died during the following year, and in 1865 Mr. Morgan married Frances Louise Tracy. Four children were born of the second marriage, all of whom are still living. They are Louise Pierpont, wife of Herbert L. Satterlee, Julia Pierpont, wife of William Pierson Harrison, John Pierpont, Jr., and Ann Tracy Morgan.

To Mr. Morgan's personal character many high tributes are given. While, in the prosecution of his enormous undertakings, he often crushed those who stood in his way, and while mysterious rumors surround some of the episodes in the financial warfare of more than half a century which he waged and helped to wage, yet he was recognized as a man of his word, a man of inner kindness, a real philanthropist and a practical helper in the work of the Christian Church. So perfectly were the affairs of his firm and its connections organized that there was no unsettling whatever in the money markets either at home or abroad when the news of his death was received. His son, J. P. Morgan, Jr., is his successor as the head of the banking company, and with him are associated in partnership Henry P. Davidson, Edward T. Stotesbury, Charles Steele, Temple Bowdoin, Arthur E. Newbold, William Pierson Hamilton, William H. Porter, Thomas W. Lamont and Horatio G. Lloyd.

TOPICS OF INTEREST AT HOME AND ABROAD

—BRANDON, VERMONT, PROPOSES to celebrate the centennial anniversary of the birth of Stephen A. Douglas on April 23, and hopes to have his oldest son, Judge Douglas, as one of the speakers on that occasion. Hon. Robert T. Lincoln has been invited as the orator of the day, and a number of prominent men from various parts of New England will also attend. It is proposed to erect a memorial tablet to Stephen A. Douglas, similar to the one in the University of Chicago.

—MRS. ELIZABETH MILBANK ANDERSON has given $650,000 for social welfare laboratories to be conducted by the New York Association for Improving the Condition of the Poor. This will be known as the Milbank Memorial Gift. In effect, it makes possible the establishment of a department of social welfare to conduct experimental laboratories for the purpose of demonstrating the practicability of preventive and constructive measures, in order that they may be adopted by the municipality and other existing civic and social agencies.

—ACCORDING TO A RECENT special despatch from Brindisi to Paris, the provisional government of Albania has proclaimed the Duke of Montpensier king. The same despatch states that the duke arrived on the Albanian coast by yacht April 2, accompanied by his suite, and was greeted by Kemail Bey, provisional president of the country. He announced his intention of accepting the autonomous rulership of Albania, were it formally offered to him, and the provisional government immediately proclaimed him king. Plans were formulated formally to ask the great Powers to recognize the duke as Albania's king. This request will be made to the Powers through their ambassadors either at Paris or London. Prince Ferdinand François, Duke of Montpensier, is the younger brother of the Duke of Orleans and a member of the ancient royal family of France. He is twenty-seven years of age, and is considered a young man of considerable ability. So far as appearance goes, Albania's possible monarch will look every inch a king, for he is six feet three inches tall and big in proportion. He is well known in New York, where he "saw the sights" in somewhat spectacular fashion two years ago. He was a friend of the late Mr. Morgan, whose Paris house has charge of the duke's financial interest, for, like most of the Orleanist family, he is quite rich.

ENTICEMENT VERSUS COMPULSION

A SERMON
BY
Rev. C. H. Parkhurst, D.D.*

TEXT: "With lovingkindness have I drawn thee." Jer. 31: 3

THESE gentle words of the prophet suggest to us that, even when it is a matter of divine working, results, in order to be thorough and permanent, must come as the fruit of enticement rather than of compulsion.

It is rather remarkable that, in those old days when Jeremiah lived, and when everything was law and so little was Gospel, this prophet of many lamentations and tears should have been able thus to penetrate the menacing cloud of God's majesty and to detect the deeper fact of the divine lovingkindness. It is only illustrative of this, that there always have been and everywhere are rays from the innermost heart of God that shine upon eyes that are open enough to receive them, hearts tender enough to experience them; and that the Gospel was already in the air, like an unrisen sun which begins to tinge the clouds with color even before it has climbed high enough across the horizon to beat down in fulness of light upon spots that are sequestered and hidden in the valley.

Somewhat of the misapprehension that has prevailed in regard to the divine character has been due to the disposition that certain ones have had to take what we might call the sterner elements of that character and to view them apart from the spirit of gentleness with which such elements are constantly accompanied and deeply interfused.

No most careful and delicate phrasing can state this matter exactly as we would love to have it stated. The apostle John has in one instance come very near to success in the attempt he has made to picture it; as when he says, "And immediately I was in the spirit; and behold, a throne was set in heaven, and one sat on the throne. And he that sat was to look upon like a jasper and a sardine stone. and there was a rainbow round about the throne." Majesty blossoming forth into forms of tender beauty; the beauty rendering the majesty bright and gentle, the majesty solemnizing the beauty: divine and eternal, and yet fringing out into threads of genial and affectionate color, such as the eye can delight in and the face and heart grow bright and trustful under. "And righteousness and peace have kissed each other." "And there was a rainbow round about the throne."

The Tears of Christ

There are in the Gospel some very hard words that are reported to have been spoken by Christ—words that are ominous, words which, if spoken as we should be likely to speak them, would engender resentment and instantly create relations of hostility between us and the people to whom we addressed them. But I believe that as spoken by him they were among the most melting and subduing of all his utterances.

Tears lay very close to the eyes of our Lord, and they were tears that welled up from the deep springs of the heart altogether submitted to those in whose presence or in whose behalf the tears were shed. And I believe that we, if we could listen even to Christ's maledictions and his most acute words of condemnation and menace, and could hear him speak them with those accents of pity and yearning affection that formed part of his every utterance, would be softened into penitence too deep for tears and touched into a love too warm for speech.

It is related of a certain dramatist that he could pray the Lord's Prayer in a way to leave not a dry eye in his audience. If human affectation could do that what might not be expected from divine sincerity? I wish we might have heard him pray; might have heard him pray his intercessory prayer. What would not any mourner give to be able to hear him say, "Let not your heart be troubled," words that under all circumstances arrest the thought of the suffering and bereaved, but how much more when they come loaded with the melting affection of one who was human enough to weep but divine enough to redeem. It is the power that can win, and not the power that essays to drive, that is going to do the best of the world's work.

Among other gifts with which as men and women we are endowed is that which we call the will. It is a strange thing, the will is. It is a little god, the will is, and, like the great God, cannot be driven. It is the supreme faculty in our natures. It is the point at which we are vested with a kind of autonomy, a sort of sovereignty.

And it is not amenable to compulsion. You can compel my act, but you cannot compel my will. You can compel me to do what I do not want to do, but you cannot compel me to will what I am not disposed to will. We can yield our will, but cannot be forced to yield it. It is the most serious element in our being, our being's greatest but most perilous attribute. How unfortunate it seems sometimes that the best things are also the most dangerous!

By Means of Love

And so God's government is a government not of love exactly, but a government by means of love. Government by law had failed. The ten commandments did not succeed. Icicles are brilliant but are of no use for purposes of kindling and warmth. I suppose the decalogue was given in order that it might demonstrate its own futility. Even people that believed that it came directly from God and was inscribed by his hand did not care much for it. It is not held in any excess of respect even to-day.

That only shows what a rigid and inflexible thing the will can be, and how much of a god it is that it can face even the great God, and resist even what it thinks to be God's will without being disturbed by it from its superb but awful equanimity. Man never seems to me so terrifically immense as when I think of him as standing before the great white throne with covered head and trying to look the Almighty out of countenance: which is exactly what we do every time we treat with disrespect what we believe to be God's will and design.

Christ, in the prosecution of his earthly mission, did not undertake the impossible, and never attempted to crowd people to the doing of what they were not in a mood to do. He took care not to come wnere he was not wanted: did not enter without being asked in. It means more than it may have occurred to us that he is quoted as saying, "Behold, I stand at the door and knock: if any man hear my voice and open the door, I will come in." He respects the conventionalities of ordinary society and does not impose upon people an unbidden presence.

This is summed up in Christ's familiar words, "I come not to condemn the world"—I came not, that is, to drive men into the heavenly kingdom. The same thing is picturesquely represented by John in his portrayal of the heavenly city which he describes as furnished with gates set on the four sides of the city so that they would be in view to any one coming from either of the four points of the compass, and furnished with gates that were always open, standing thus again in an attitude of constant invitation, no compulsion availed of to increase the urban population but gates swung wide with enticing hospitality. All of which reminds us that there is no value in what we do unless we do it because we will to do it, that is to say, we are willing to do it, so that enticement, not compulsion, becomes the order of God's economy.

The Parable of Spring

In the middle of the spring with what exceeding gentleness all the processes of the incoming season are carried forward! It is a part of God's construction of the world that the titanic agencies that are everywhere at work around among us in the budding days move to their enterprise with so velvety a tread, and with a voice so muffled to a whisper, that we see what they do without at all realizing that they are doing it.

The way in which the warm air commences in April and May, in all gentleness, to intrude and insinuate itself seems to me a kind of parable teaching, in its way, something the same lesson that Jeremiah gives to us in our text. The cold and frozen obstinacy of winter is not forced out. The ice that a little while before had fettered the rivers and rendered the soil obdurate and unfeeling is not pounded into the beauteous plasticity of swollen rivers and freshly flowing brooks. A bit of sunbeam pleads with the frost crystal and simply by the warmth of its touch subdues it into a tear.

It sometimes seems almost strange that facts such as that are not more suggestive to us of that sentiment in the bosom of the Creator that constrained him to work a principle of that kind into the structure of things; as in this instance of the gentle entrance of summer, hiding his power, and bringing forth the captive world of barren fields, leafless trees and frozen streams by the sweet enfranchisement of soft winds graciously overspreading the land from the south—the genial air, which might almost be thought of as being the affection that the sky has for the ground, putting upon the ground its baptism of winsome influence and so leading forth from it fresh life and blossomy fragrance.

In all this we can well afford to feel that we are reading God's thought, and a thought too that is filled with much of the sentiment and impulse of Christ's Gospel—results wrought not by compulsion but by enticement.

The will is the key to the entire situation, and it is the place invariably where the work has to be put. Will has that consciousness of itself that renders it naturally ugly. Between any two wills there is a natural repulsion. Nations keep guns all along their frontiers. So do people. Obedience is distasteful. Too close a pressure upon us of some one's else will is irritating.

You see that in the simple matter of debate maintained between two men of differing opinion. It takes a great deal of grace to argue without getting angry. My will is more or less staked in my opinion. My co-disputant's will is more or less staked in his opinion, and the two wills collide. Certain animals whenever they encounter each other will growl. Each is annoyed by the other's presence. There is no particular reason for it only that it is the animal's nature. The native wills of men are related to each other in the same way.

The Divine Enticement

Between Christ and those who came near enough to him to be brought within the influence of the tenderness of his thought and life there was no friction; there could be none. He never evinces a desire to have people subscribe to his ideas because they are his ideas, nor to have them conform their behavior to the requirements he imposed because they were his requirements. It was his supreme aim to work in men the subduing of their wills to what was true in thought and pure and holy in life, but so to keep his own individual will out of the account as to avoid the friction incident to two wills standing face to face and with more or less of antagonism confronting each other.

And so of all the laws he laid down for them and rules of conduct that he marked out for them, everything was so put and arranged as to keep his own personal will in the background. That will, which was always present, of course, was so cushioned that its impact upon the will of others, and others' will upon his, was attended by no personal antagonism between the two. He dealt in a way to quiet and soothe their sense of having a will instead of arousing and exciting that sense.

And it is the same problem, if I may use that word, which God confronts in his efforts at human redemption, in his efforts not to break down and destroy our wills, but to enable us to let those wills be subdued to the spirit of the one perfect will.

That is the principle involved in the world's salvation, the same principle that is involved in the conversion of winter into summer—that there is nothing permanently beautiful and vital achieved till the season is so far advanced that the sun's beams are as full of warmth as they are of light. The advent of Christ was the incoming of summer. God has not so much brightened the world to its redemption as warmed it to its redemption, so that wherever the Gospel has gone and been received, a wave of spiritual verdure has followed in its train, hearts have been touched and, in the mellowed atmosphere of it all, the native obstinacy of men has begun a little to soften toward God's holy and loving exactions; community of spirit the means of oneness of will, and human salvation the product of divine enticement.

And now it remains only to say that Christ's way

DAILY MEDITATION

FOR EVERY DAY IN THE YEAR

BY REV. J. H. JOWETT, D.D.

SUNDAY, April 20. Psalm 34: 1-8. "He delivered me from all my fears." First of all, the Lord delivers me from the fear of yesterday. When yesterday is lived, it is not done with. Its deeds follow me into the life of to-day. The guilt of past sin pursues me like a hound. The unforgiven sin is full of menace. In our quiet moments, and sometimes even in the hour of boisterous feasting, it makes us afraid. But the grace of God's forgiveness can come between us and our yesterdays and deliver us from all our fears.

And, secondly, the Lord delivers us from the fear of to-day. The immediate circumstances are sometimes terrible and terrific. They are all about us like lions in the thicket. It may be the massing of temptations, it may be the gathering of black troubles, sorrows upon sorrows. Well, in God we shall see that all the circumstances are in firm control. We can be masters of our circumstances. "My grace is sufficient for thee."

And then, again, the Lord delivers me from the fear of to-morrow. "It can bring with it nothing but he will see me through." Even death loses its sting and its victory. Death shall be only as the porter of my Father's lodge to open the gate and let me into my Father's house.

MONDAY, April 21. Genesis 37: 1-11. Here is an atmosphere of unwise partiality, and here are latent seeds of wickedness springing to inglorious harvest. "Israel loved Joseph more than all his children." That is an atmosphere which is favorable to vicious growth. It is not clear, strong and bracing. It is sultry and morally enervating, nourishing rank conceits and the poisonous weeds of bitterness. I do not think Joseph altogether escaped the perils of the air he breathed. To be loved with partiality is to be set in perverse relations with the less loved. And is there not a suggestion of conceit in Joseph's telling his dream to his brothers? Is it not the unwisdom of the consciously superior? Has not partiality made him unduly aggrieved?

As for Joseph's brethren, their secret seeds of viciousness leaped into vigorous life. "They hated him:" "they hated him yet the more:" "they envied him." When hatred and envy are rampant a rabble of other vices will soon gather in their train. They are commanders who speedily enlist ragged and unholy regiments of allies. Hatred and envy, in any conceivable circumstances, never march abroad unattended and alone. When we begin to hate, mischiefs are at work in all directions. Hatred is a queen-bee among the vices, and is always the center of a swarm. And, therefore, when unclean hatred is born in our souls we are the very agents of the evil one, prepared to do his destructive work.

TUESDAY, April 22. Genesis 37: 12-32. Here is the working of the evil ferment in the minds and souls of these men. Hatred began to plot against the one who was hated. "They conspired against him." Hatred sets all the powers of the mind at work in wicked and mischievous action. Every faculty is enlisted in ignoble battle. All the wits, and the imagination, and the power of calculation—all are made to serve under the dark leadership of hatred. Fine discernments, that were made for heavenly ministries, are pressed into carnal service. Pruning hooks are changed into spears, and plowshares are changed into swords. The "temple of the Holy Ghost" becomes the magazine of the devil.

"Let us slay him . . . and we will say, Some evil beast hath devoured him." So is the black progeny multiplied. The first thing born of conspiracy is a falsehood. Hatred and envy cannot travel far without the accomplishment of a lie. Hatred and envy have no use for truth. When the spirit is perverted by hatred it cannot act or speak in the truth. If a bullet-mold is deformed, every bullet will be misshapen. "He speaketh a lie because there is no truth in him."

WEDNESDAY, April 23. Genesis 37: 23-36. Let me mark the useless distinction with which Joseph's brethren assuaged their consciences. To slay their brother was one degree of vice, to sell him into slavery was quite another. So by their seeming moderation they cast an air of piety upon their very sin: they felt good because they might have been worse! They looked into the moral abyss and were "content" because there were depths of degradation into which they had not yet fallen! They looked down and measured their virtues by the deepest depravity instead of looking up and measuring by the shining holiness of God. And so a lie came to appear respectable. Treachery, tricked out in apparent mercy, classed itself in the ranks of virtue.

These men lied to their father, and they acted a lie to confirm their speech. They dipped Joseph's coat in the blood of a goat, and made it illustrate their wretched falsehood. The devil always insists on speech and conduct going hand in hand. He demands that our acts enter into covenant with our words. One cannot be crooked and the other straight. Our words determine everything. They are, says the apostle James, as the rudder which determines the course of the whole life. If we tell a lie we have got to act a lie, and every look and shrug and gesture are coerced into the ministry of perversion.

THURSDAY, April 24. Prov. 16: 1-9. "The Lord directeth his steps." To believe this is to possess the secret of serenity and strength. To believe that God's finger is tracing out the way of those who trust him gives the faithful soul sacred firmness and joy. And this is the witness of the saints. They tell us that sometimes the judgment is lit up as by a mysterious lamp, and they know the way they have to go. They say that sometimes they are caught in the grip of circumstances, and they seem to have no control, and then they discover that the grip is the hand of God. They say that at other times the Lord guides by closed doors. Suddenly some opening is closed, and it is the Lord God who shuts the door, and we are compelled to pass on. In manifold ways the Lord directs our steps. We find that the way of the wilderness brings us to Canaan, and we find that the way to apparent captivity leads to a throne.

"Keep thou my feet!" "One step enough for me!" Such is the prayer of the saint. We may not be permitted just now to look upon "the distant scene," and share in the unveiled purpose of God. It may not be ours just now to have the full sunlight, and the whole panorama in view: what matters it if we have a good lamp and can see the immediate road?

FRIDAY, April 25. Prov. 27: 4-10. "Wrath is cruel:" this is sullen, sulky temper, and it has an influence like cold and dismal weather. "And anger is outrageous:" this is volcanic, explosive temper: it spits fire, and is blind to destruction and disaster. Wrath can be chilling as ice, anger can be fierce as lava. "But who is able to stand before jealousies?" Jealousy works with subterranean mines, and we never know where the charges are laid. The sullenness of wrath is open as November. The heat of anger is open as a furnace. But jealousy is hidden in courtesies: its smiles are wiles, and its affabilities are only the veils of deadly plots. Jealousy is never "above board." It does all its work in an unhallowed crypt.

When jealousy takes possession of a soul everything is seen in caricature. The truth goes out of the eye and therefore there is no truth in the sight. Everything is misshapen. Joseph's brethren never saw the real Joseph. Their own eyes brought the perverting colors, and things were not as they seemed. They wore glasses, fashioned of the evil one, and everything was distorted. Joseph could do nothing right. The most innocent thing was misinterpreted. It was not a brother they saw but a monster!

Well may this be our prayer: "Create in me a clean heart, O God, and renew a right spirit within me!"

SATURDAY, April 26. James 3: 13-18. "Where envying is there is unquietness." How could it be otherwise? Envy creates conditions which are the very opposite of peace. Peace is the harmonious working of many parts. It is the resultant smoothness of exquisite fellowship. Peace is frictionless movement. How far is all this from the spirit of envy! Envy is the aggression of one part against another. Envy is self-obtrusion at the expense of the whole, and it is therefore destructive of union. Instead of all the family and social elements working together with the ease and smoothness of ball-bearings, envy makes them jar and grind together in harsh and reluctant movement. Yes, "where envying is there is unquietness."

Now the awful thing is that envy can be rampant within the fold of the church. It wrought its disturbing, dislocating work in the Church at Corinth. "Whereas there is among you envying." It is as though one were to find a drop of poison in a sacramental cup. The evil one delights to get the destructive germ into the Redeemer's Church. He introduces it into a diaconate, into a fellowship of elders, into a body of Sunday school teachers, into a sewing meeting, into a bazaar. And when once introduced only the purging fires of God's love and grace can ever get it out again.

These Daily Meditations will appear in each issue through 1913.

ENTICEMENT VERSUS COMPULSION

f bringing the world to a juster conception of the ruth and to a finer type of life is the way that must eeds be adopted by all those of us who would be o-operative with him in the pursuit of his aims. t is much more in keeping with the impulses of the atural man to assault the errors of those whom we elieve to be more imperfectly possessed of the ruth than ourselves, than it is to draw affectionate ommunity of spirit and by that means to be able o win them to a share with us in what we may elieve to be our better knowledge.

It is far easier to seek to improve the world and o elevate it socially by chastising with sharp invec-ive such members of society as seem to us a stain pon its character and a drag upon its progress, han it is to have grace to regard them with sympa-hetic allowance, and so come into that fellowship of regard with them that shall bring them within reach of our redeeming affection.

Our scolding may be relief to ourselves and may conduce to a reputation for courage. It may operate to check to a certain extent overt manifestations of depravity, but I am not sure that it has ever resulted in any actual diminution of depravity or that it communicates either to individuals, or to society at large, impulses that conduce to ennobled methods of living. Flowers are blasted by tornadoes, not nurtured by them. Salvation, whether of men or of society, is a matter of the incoming of a more genial climate, in which there shall be the softening down of the asperities of our nature; a matter of the diffusion of a purer, sweeter atmosphere, whose respiration shall mean a fresher, holier life.

So that, however much we may do, along our several lines of service, in the way of adding to the luster of current civilization, and of augmenting its amenities, it is by the wealth and fulness of our affection that we are to make our richest conveyances to the world, and to be the means of extending to the hearts of men that influence which, in such abounding sweetness, gains first entrance into the world in the person of our loving Redeemer, and so of making available to all men the fruits of that purpose of redemption first framed in the heart of God, who so loved the world as to yield himself for the attainment of the world's recovery from sin, sickness and sorrow.

Fame and the Country Town

LOOKING over the long roll of those who, in our own day, have succeeded in climbing to a comfortable and more or less enviable altitude on "the dizzy heights of fame," we must be struck with amazement at the very large proportion who have come from the typical country town. With a single exception, every member of President Wilson's cabinet began life as a boy in some small country town. Making the best use of their early opportunities, they developed their talents by study, steadily working their way through school and in most cases through college toward that broader experience in the affairs of life which ultimately fitted them to become "cabinet timber." Their example should be an inspiration to those who, being born and raised in the small country town, are apt to consider their surroundings as unfavorable. If a youth has ambition and energy he will surely find the gate of opportunity open. In no part of the world have there been finer illustrations of the development of self-reliance, prudence, concentration and those other traits of character than in the country town or village. There is always a way, somehow, and youth, if it really so determines, can find it—a way to practical knowledge rather than theoretical, to mental breadth, to soundness of judgment, to the kind of efficiency which the world is looking for. As the keystone of the whole, it demands that unmistakable quality of personal character which is a priceless asset above all others, and without which even the highest accomplishments count for little. These are the traits that go to the making of the most virile type of American manhood, and that is precisely the kind our country wants.

The Western Floods Still Rage

WHILE with the subsidence of the waters a measure of relief has come to Dayton, there is still a large amount of suffering in many places throughout Ohio, and appeals continue to be made for outside help. Fears are entertained that the States along the Ohio and Mississippi may be confronted with conditions similar to those that prevailed in Dayton. In Cairo, Ill., a committee of citizens has invited outside aid, in hourly expectation of "the worst flood ever known in the Ohio Valley and the Mississippi."

Our readers have already begun to respond to our urgent call in behalf of our brothers and sisters in the flooded districts and are sending their contributions to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD Western Flood Fund. This is a benevolence in which no one should be unrepresented. Send your gift along; no matter how small, it will help some poor distressed family and bring comfort and consolation to those in sore need of both. Let it be a first call on your generosity to help the Western Flood Fund. Do it to-day!

The Dead "Money King"

FOR more than a generation John Pierpont Morgan, who passed away in Rome, Italy, on the last day of March, was a foremost figure in the public eye on two continents. As is always the case with men of great prominence, every step of his career has been observed with keen interest. Now that he has gone, we may estimate at leisure the character and extraordinary achievements of the man who was a product of the time when fortunes were comparatively small and when national expansion had just begun. He was probably the last typical representative of a line of Americans who forged to the front through sheer force of will and native ability. His power and influence, greater than that of a monarch, were felt in the direction of the world's finances, and in the great industrial projects of the last two decades.

There will unquestionably be two classes of critics concerning such a career and its influence upon the welfare of others. One class will express admiration of his wonderful genius as a leader in finance; the other will, with equal certainty, take the ground that one who has exercised practically unequaled control over the monetary destinies of governments and municipalities must necessarily have been a source of danger. The truth usually lies between the two extremes. Whatever Mr. Morgan's other traits of character may have been, he was in a large sense one of the most useful of public servants. Leaders of men there must be. In every line of human activity some one with larger endowments, stronger initiative and greater courage will come to the front. His genius was of the creative and progressive order and, on the whole, he employed it to good purpose. Essentially a man of wide views, capable of conceiving and carrying out far-reaching enterprises, and with rare sagacity, combined with an intimate knowledge of human character and motives, his energies were employed on constructive lines which ultimately made for the general good. Such a man naturally rose to leadership, and became in time an empire-builder and a developer of national resources. His iron will and indomitable energy were invariably allied to purposes which, while they increased his own personal power and influence, served also some good public purpose. Thus we find him simultaneously the father and promoter of trusts and the chosen financial adviser of cabinets and governments.

While the power to accumulate wealth is by no means one of the highest qualities, and while this faculty may, in certain hands, become a public evil, it must be conceded in simple justice that there are many notable exceptions. Mr. Morgan was a strong fighter in the financial struggle, but never a conscienceless one. There are many things in his career to prove this, and which attest that at various times he has used his power and his abundant means unselfishly in the service of others and for the general good. He has repeatedly reached out a helping hand to enterprises facing disaster. He has reorganized railroads that were on the verge of ruin. He smoothed the troubled waters in the North Pacific panic, and he rendered distinguished service to the whole country during the gold stringency in 1905 by supplying the government with $65,000,000 in gold in return for $62,000,000 worth of 30-year three per cent. bonds. Again and again he has come to the front as an averter of panic and a restorer of public confidence in grave financial crises. He probably did more than any of his contemporaries to make investment safe. But these matters are the common knowledge of the whole business world, which came to regard him as a rock in the midst of storm—a man who could be depended upon to render a public service at all times.

But the man had other characteristics that deserve to be remembered besides his financial skill and his strength as a director of syndicates. He poured out with a liberal hand much of his wealth in gifts to education and in widespread charities. He has probably done more than any other American for the uplift of art in this country, and his lavish expenditures in this direction have resulted in a collection of masterpieces which is the marvel of art-lovers everywhere. Thus, in a very marked degree, his life was one of public service and widespread benefit. However we may have differed with him regarding the evils of centralized wealth, it must be granted that, in his own case at least, he exemplified the truth that accumulated riches can be put to noble uses.

"Episcopal" or "Catholic"

AN EPISODE in the religious controversy between the Roman and Episcopalian Churches which may yet have important developments, is furnished by the protest of the New York rectors to Bishop Tuttle against the movement begun some time ago to change the name of the Episcopalian organization in this country to "The American Catholic Church." While it is true that the Church of Rome has no legitimate title to the name "Catholic"—which simply implies universality—the Episcopalian protest points out that it would be a perilous precedent to adopt a designation which would not only produce confusion, but would alienate the millions of Protestants of other denominations who have to-day "a fraternal regard" for the Protestant Episcopal Church. Moreover, such a radical departure would be viewed by the Roman Church as an evidence of weakness on the part of our Episcopal brethren. These are times when Protestantism needs to keep all its banners flying with the emblems of the faith so clear and unmistakable that none can misunderstand them.

Light at Last in Balkania

AFTER months of darkness beneath the overshadowing cloud of war, light is breaking on the troubled lands of the Near East. The fall of Adrianople marked the death throes of Turkish dominion in Europe. Some one cleverly said, "Turkey has once more become an Asiatic nation—with an office in Europe, Constantinople." Peace is now assured and reports of the demobilization of large parts of the vast armies of the allies come from the European news agencies. Conditions in the devastated sections are improving as the spring advances and the return of large numbers of men to their regular occupations will make wonderful changes in a very short time. Of course, as in every land that has been swept by the torch of war, there will be poverty and hardships through the years of reconstruction and readjustment. But no people has ever proved its indomitable courage and perseverance through strife and toil and exposure, through danger and death more fully than the rejuvenated races of Southeastern Europe. They are a sturdy people, and now, inspired by realization of their new national greatness, we may safely trust them for the display of their tireless ambition in the arts of peace. In the relief of the needy during the rigors of winter we have worked hand in hand with the other nations, doing all that lay within our power to alleviate distress. Now we feel that the worst is over. With spring is coming readjustment and that is a work which the victors of the war must face unaided. With the laurels of victory they must assume the price of the struggle in moral responsibility as well as in coin of the realm. That which we set out to do for the Balkans we have done. We may now conscientiously devote our energies and our generosity to the clear call that comes from within our own national household.

Life and the Man

—STEP BY STEP, the scientists have come to recognize that there is an element in the human individual which is distinct and apart from every function of life. Dr. Carrel, of the French Academy of Medicine, has demonstrated in recent experiments that, save consciousness, every function of the body may be kept up by scientific means. In other words, there can be life without that undefinable thing which is the man himself. Recently a remarkable experiment was successfully attempted in which—for the sake of a son who would in two hours attain his majority and inherit a great estate—the life of an aged nobleman was artificially maintained for 120 minutes, after all the functions had apparently ceased. The object was attained, the law was satisfied; but the man himself, though legally alive, was without consciousness during the entire interval. While the mechanism of life had been kept in automatic action, the spirit had gone beyond the reach of human recall.

Important Expedition to Amazon

ON MARCH 19 the steam yacht Pennsylvania set sail from Philadelphia on an expedition to the river Amazon under the auspices of the University of Pennsylvania. The party consisted of Dr. William C. Farabee, leader, in general charge of the ethnology part of the expedition; a distinguished anthropologist from an American university, who will join the party in June; Dr. Franklin Church of New York, physician in charge, who will be the biologist and make special study of tropical diseases; and Captain J. C. Rowen, U.S.N. (retired), who will command the yacht and act as geographer and hydrographer for the purpose of making accurate maps and charts of the Amazon basin. The expedition will study the languages, manners, customs, arts, crafts and history of the many races of Indians, concerning whom very little is known. These native tribes live in regions well nigh inaccessible, but they will be reached by steam launches. The men of the expedition expect to spend three long years in their task of exploration. The river Amazon, with its source within sight of the Pacific Ocean, and only sixty miles distant, flows 4,000 miles across the continent of South America and empties into the Atlantic. With its tributaries it drains a territory equal to that of all Europe, and furnishes inland navigation for a distance equal to that of twice the circumference of the earth. These facts give gigantic importance to the expedition sent out by the university. South America is the almost untouched treasure house of the world. The Andes have in them as much gold and silver and other metals as the Rockies, and the valley of the Amazon is as fertile as the famed Nile or our own prairies of the West. The expedition has taken an opportune time for so important a task as this exploration, a time when the railroads over the Andes are touching the head waters and tributaries of the Amazon and the Panama Canal is about to open the whole west coast of South America so easily to the commerce of the United States and of Europe. As in our blessed Christian age the explorer and geographer are the advance guard opening up the way for the Gospel, so it is hoped that the yacht up the Amazon may open up new avenues for the introduction of the Gospel of salvation for body, mind and soul. The Amazon, emptying into the Atlantic by a mouth which is 150 miles wide, and draining 2,000,000 square miles of territory, is symbolical of God's love for us. He who holds the ocean in his hand sends back its waters to the clouds, which give it back to the hills to fill the banks of rivers and feed the sea. The exploration party will realize the geographical and scientific facts stated by the wise man:

All the rivers run into the sea; yet the sea is not full; unto the place from whence the rivers come, thither they return again. (Eccles. 1: 7.)

THE EXPLORATION PARTY NOW ON ITS WAY TO THE "LOST WORLD" OF THE AMAZON

From left to right: Dr. Franklin B. Church (tropical medicine), Dr. Andres Anderson (chief surgeon), Dr. Wm. C. Farabee (of the Pennsylvania Museum), Dr. Gordon (organizer, who did not sail), Sandy MacNab and Captain J. C. Rowen, U.S.N.

THE EXPLORATION YACHT "PENNSYLVANIA"

Light Weight, Short Measure

THE strict watch kept on weights and measures in the British Isles has led to the discovery that even the standard weights and measures of the government are not absolutely to be relied upon. The only four official copies of the imperial standard yard in existence in England have shrunk. The standard yard is kept in the strong room of the Standards Department at Westminster. The copies which, like the standard itself, are made of bronze alloy, have decreased in length, according to the annual report on weights and measures issued by the Board of Trade, in the following proportions: the Royal Mint copy, 23 millionths of an inch short; Royal Society copy, 42; Greenwich Observatry copy, 43; Standard Department copy, 215 millionths of an inch short respectively. The copies of the standard pound weight also have been found to vary, but not so much as the yard measure. In the business transactions of an empire a millionth of an inch in measure or of a pound in weight will make a considerable sum. There is no nation more scrupulously honest in its business dealings than Britain; she herself has in her careful scrutiny discovered the shrinking of her official standards of weight and measure, and will have it corrected at once. It will be well for nations and individuals to remember that Divers weights are an abomination unto the Lord; and a false balance is not good. (Prov. 20: 23.)

An Angry Elephant Drowns

FOLLOWING a week's engagement in New York City the other day, John Robinson and the five elephants he used in his act took the ferry to Hoboken. The procession through the streets and across the river was uneventful, as each elephant had a trainer to look after it. As they were passing under an elevated road on the Jersey side, Lizzie, the largest elephant of the troop, hearing the roar of the train above, suddenly revolted, knocking her trainer down, and raced madly through the streets with Robinson in full pursuit. Three times he was about to get her under control when she broke away angrily and dashed toward a ferryboat tied up in the slip for the night. She broke the iron gates as though they were of straws, rushed through the boat to the other end, and into the river, where she sank like a stone. This elephant, crazed with fear and anger, and refusing to be controlled, illustrates the danger and ruin of those who give themselves over to the mastery of evil passions, and, refusing to be controlled, rush past all guards and leap into the river of death. There were irrational ones who, under the sweep of vicious impulses, rushed down to the sea and were drowned.

And the herd ran violently down a steep place into the sea, and were choked in the sea. (Mark 5: 13.)

Longevity Increasing

BY THE progress of medical science and a careful observance of the laws of health the average of human life has been materially increased in the past twenty-five years. A quarter of a century ago Dr. Elie Metchnikoff, a Russian, discovered that there were living organisms in the blood of a healthy person whose business it was to prey upon and destroy the microbes that crept into the system to break it down with disease. The doctor has had so much success in fighting these disease germs that the medical world is deeply stirred by his contentions and experiments. He insists that these enemies to the disease germs can be so fed and strengthened and fortified that the normal age should be a hundred years, and that, after this, people should fall into a painless death, as sweetly as a tired person falls to sleep. The attention of the most enlightened members of the medical profession to-day is put largely on the prevention of disease. There is a good lesson suggested here of the value of prevention of moral and spiritual disease. It is the abundance of the divine life that preys upon the microbes of moral evil that destroy the soul. It is this destruction of the microbes of sin by the tides of Christ's life in the soul that is referred to by Christ himself when he says:

I am come that they might have life, and that they might have it more abundantly. (John 10: 10.)

Proud of Champion Hen

PROFESSOR JAMES E. RICE of the poultry department of the State College of Agriculture at Cornell University, is justly proud of his prize hen, Cornell Supreme, which laid 660 eggs in three years, the highest sustained yield he knows. The 660 weighed 86.19 pounds, or 25.82 times the weight of the hen. Cornell Surprise, another crack layer, produced 562 eggs in three years. The remarkable thing about this hen is that she laid more eggs each successive year, laying 180 the first, 186 the next, and 196 the third. This proves, Professor Rice says, that a hen can sustain a high productiveness for three years, and he thinks that a race of longer-lived hens can be raised, to the great advantage of the poultry industry of the country. The splendid qualities of the hen in her motherly protection of her young are mentioned by Christ.

How often would I have gathered thy children together, even as a hen gathereth her chickens under her wings. (Matt. 23: 37.)

THE DEADLY FRUITS OF ENVY

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON BY DR. AND MRS. WILBUR F. CRAFTS

RUE is a bitter, acrid plant. Envy is to be compared with rue, because it is in every way offensive. We are now about to consider how envy grew and bore fruitage in the lives of ten men who were the brothers of Joseph, the sons of Jacob. They were grown men at the time of the story, and Joseph was seventeen years of age. Joseph was their half-brother. Being the son of Jacob's old age, Joseph occupied a tender place in his father's heart, and because of this, his father presented him with a coat of many colors. Such coats are quite common in Palestine to-day, because it is the custom to give them to good boys on their birthdays. We bought a coat of many colors in Damascus to use as an illustration when making addresses to children. On one occasion 120 boys tried it on and it fitted every one because it was so square and roomy. All were greatly pleased with it. It is still in good condition, waiting to be tried on by other boys. It might well be called a rainbow coat, because of its many colors, which, however, are arranged in patches.

Joseph possessed excellent traits of character, quite unusual for a youth, and this no doubt increased his father's love for him. Some commentators say that the bestowal of the coat of many colors upon Joseph was the declaration that Jacob had chosen him to be his successor, to have rule over his brothers and their families.

The coat of many colors was a seed which developed into the plant of envy in the hearts of the brothers. Now, in the acts of the brothers of Joseph let us discover what is the bitter fruit of envy:

Angry speech. It is said "they could not speak peaceably unto him." Joseph sometimes accompanied his brothers to the fields where they cared for their sheep, and he afterwards made a report to his father concerning the wrong things which his brothers did. We must not think of Joseph as a tale-bearer; on the contrary he was a youthful reformer. A midshipman at Annapolis warned his classmates against gambling, and when they did not desist, informed the officers of the Naval Academy, who put a stop to the evil practice. For this he was boycotted for two years by his fellow students. There is a wide difference between being an informant as this youth was, and a tale-bearer, which he was not.

Hate is another fruit of envy. It is said that Joseph's brothers "hated him for his dreams." One dream was of a wheatfield, in which he and his brothers were binding sheaves, and all of his brothers' sheaves came and bowed down to his sheaf. The other dream was of the sun, moon, and eleven stars, and they all bowed down as to a king to honor Joseph. Thereafter the brothers sarcastically called Joseph "the dreamer," and they hated him as such. But when the father heard the dreams, he hid them in his heart, and was all the more sure that Joseph was to be his successor.

Selfishness, another fruit of envy. "Shall we bow ourselves down to thee?" was the rejoinder of the brothers. Very likely they were saying in their hearts: "We think more of ourselves than we do of you; you are only an upstart, you are your father's darling!" If they had been right-minded, they would have rejoiced at what seemed to be the harbinger that there was to be a man of distinction in their family, possibly a great ruler. Socrates said: "Envy is the filthy slime of the soul, a venom, a poison, a quicksilver which consumeth the flesh drieth up the bones." Another wise saying is t "Proud men cannot endure to hear any praised themselves and think all the honor lost that goe themselves."—Matthew Henry.

Bad temper is another fruit of envy. One Jacob said to his son Joseph, "Go and see whe it be well with thy brethren, and well with flocks, and bring me word aga And he loaded him with bread cheese to carry to them. Joseph a journey of fifty miles or more fore him, and when he reached place he found his brothers had g He traced them to Dothan, tw miles farther on. But when brothers saw his form outl against the horizon they let t angry passions rise and spoke aga him one to the other. We know envy is the fire that makes the t per in us boil over. We once ask company of twenty-five child what was the greatest difficulty t had in being Christians. Nearly answered, "Temper."

Cruelty is another fruit of en The brothers did not see in Josep messenger from their loving fat Jacob, but only one whom they spised, and their first thought wa rid themselves of him. "They c spired against him to slay hi (Gen. 37: 18.)

Murder is another fruit of en The brothers did not wait for Jos to come up to them, but while he v still approaching, they said, "Let kill him." All but one joined in saying, and that was Reuben, w proposed instead that they sho put him into a cistern and so b him alive. Reuben was not quite evil as the others, for his purp was to deliver Joseph from the c tern without his brothers' kno edge, and so leave him free to retu to his father.

Lying is another fruit of en Before they put Joseph in the ciste they took off his coat of many col that they might use it to decei their father by staining it with blo so that he would think Joseph h been torn in pieces by some wild a mal. OUR SUNDAY SCHOOL SUPERINTENDENTS' ROUND TABLE

—HERE ARE SOME more helpful answers by Mrs. A. H. Wood, of Vancouver, to our questions:

"WHAT OBJECTION is there to the proposal that all work for the young be unified in a Young People's Department of the church?"

"One very serious objection. A church should be as nearly as possible a model family, each member interested in the welfare of every other member. God set the young and old in families. The young need the experience of the old, and the old need the life and enthusiasm of the young. Separated, the young people lose all sense of loyalty to the church, all interest in its regular services—a fact which many a pastor has learned to his intense sorrow."

—"WHAT IS THE WORST fault you have seen in any Sabbath school?"

"Teaching just to pass the hour, interesting and amusing the class with no direct, continued effort to win them for Christ, or, if they are already Christians, to help them to follow on to know the Lord' until their whole lives become radiant with his life and light."

—"WHAT IS THE BEST thing you have seen in any Sabbath school?"

"Years ago, in Providence, R. I., the pastor and superintendent of a Sabbath school decided on making an earnest, united effort to secure the conversion of a whole school of three hundred members. They put it before the teachers, and after a few Sabbaths' teaching to this end, the pastor said, standing in the pulpit after the opening exercises: 'If any of the pupils desire to become Christians, let them come to these vacant seats at my right.' I bowed my head to ask that some would come, but the prayer was never offered, for the sound as of an army marching was heard, and I raised my head just as the pastor said (seeing almost the entire school upon their feet), 'Remain where you are, we will come to you.' I shall never forget that afternoon. The Sabbath school convened at 2.30, and we were kept, working with each one individually, till nearly time for evening service. I believe that story could be duplicated in many a Sabbath school if only the right means were employed and officers and teachers were all brought to feel their responsibility."

—"WHAT ARE THE BEST methods for training young Christians for useful service?"

"Answering from the same experience, I would say: Really interesting them in Bible study. By this I mean, an hour in the week—more if possible—spent under the instruction of some one in love with the Word, who can from it bring its rich incentives to bear upon human lives."

—A MAN IN YORK, PA., who teaches an organized class of young ladies from sixteen to nineteen years of age, wants to know what can be done to keep up the interest in monthly week-day meetings. He remarks incidentally that he is "interested along reform lines." That reminds us that Mrs. Mary A. Livermore said: "Let our young women, as well as our young men, acquaint themselves with the great questions that engage the attention of our government, which are discussed in legislatures, in congresses and in the leading papers. Let them discuss in their clubs and societies the social and educational movements of the day, and their bearing on the future of the nation. These matters can be made as interesting as Greek literature or modern art, and as fascinating as the everlasting novel." Why not organize the class for its monthly meetings—or at least fo some of them—as the "Women's Congress," each active member being on committee of or or more on education, municipalism, immigra tion, Sunday rest, labor, marriage, pence penology, temperance, charity?

Each girl is to watch papers and magazine all the month before the meeting for somethin interesting on the topic which is assigned to he committee, and a few days before the meetin to boil it all down into a three- or five-minut talk. There will be jokes and pictures an songs that fit the topics. These talks follow ing the business with which the meeting begin and leading on to a sweet bit of devotion at th end will make a delightful evening. Ther is much solid pleasure at the time and espe cially afterwards in medal contests, debate repartee, good story-telling, extemporaneou speaking, off-hand charades, planning philan thropic battles for defense of childhood and the like.

A FAREWELL TO LABRADOR

AFTER many years of faithful service, one of the men whose name is known to every one who has ever visited or read of Labrador has been compelled to retire from his well-loved field. Rev. Christian ...nitt's days of service in the rigorous climate of the Arctic are over. He has been told by his doctors that ...gh he may yet do long years of service for the Master ...health will no more permit that service to be in Labra-

Just what this means to the little community at Nain ...est expressed in the words of Dr. Grenfell. "Do you ...w Schmitt and his work up at Nain?" he was asked. ..., yes," was the reply, "everybody knows Schmitt. He ...fhers' all that ...rt of the ...st."

From London ... Schmitt ...tes a fare-...l to Labra-...; just a little ...ry of the life ... the Labra-..., but under-...ith its words ... tells of a ...art left be-...d in the rock-...ind North as ...ncerely as ...ingstone left ... in the tropic ...ests of Af-...a. The letter ...ads as fol-...vs:

"A sense of ...ratitude ...ompts me to ...ite to you, for ...ring my stay ...nong the Es-...mos in Labra-...r I have received so many tokens of your interest and ...ve that I feel compelled to thank you and the readers of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD and to bid you all farewell.

"I do not wish to enlarge upon this, but in this letter I ...ant to tell you one more story—what I consider an im-...rtant event of my life in Labrador.

"One bitter cold November day, not many years ago, two ...skimo boats appeared at the mouth of our harbor at Nain. ... gale was sweeping over the land to the sea and the two ...oats, like nutshells, bobbed up and down on the huge waves, ...ying to face the wind and cross against it into the harbor ...f the Mission Station.

"One of these boats speedily gave up the contest. It was ...ar from new, the sails and ropes were no longer reliable on ...ccount of their age, and the senior member of the crew ...ecided that the boat should be towed into the harbor along ...he shore, one man remaining in the boat to direct her ...ourse and keep her off the rocks by means of a long pole. ...his boat reached its destination late the same day.

"The second boat was almost new, all her gear and sails ...ere reliable, she was well ballasted with rocks, the man in ...harge had weathered many a gale in his life. He had put ...ut with fearless heart and a firm hand on the tiller. The ...mall craft went right into the teeth of the storm and for ... time she gained ground, but just as success seemed as-...ured a sail broke and flapped about in the wind. Imme-...diately all sail had to be lowered in order to mend the ...defect. The work only required a few moments, but alas, ...in those moments the boat was drifting rapidly out to sea, ...and the farther it got from the land the greater the waves became. The sails were again set and the boat made some headway, but the Eskimo at the wheel was no longer confident of success, for every wave threatened to swamp the boat. And it soon came to pass that one wave greater than its fellows filled the boat to the brim, leaving no opportunity for recovery. The accident happened within sight of Nain Mission Station, and some of our Eskimos had watched the scene with their telescopes. Night followed speedily, for the days were short, and the next day the wind still blew unabated. These northwesterly gales frequently continue for several days, but on the third day, in the evening, as soon as darkness had covered land and sea, a fire was noticed on an island in the direction where the accident had happened. The few men at the station felt reluctant to go and face the storm that night. Only three men volunteered, but we needed a boat well equipped, as we were determined not to use sail but only oars. I told the men that it was their duty to go, and I could not say that without adding that I was willing to accompany them. As soon as I had made this concession there was no further lack of men. After successfully passing certain dangers in that pitch dark night, we drew near to the island, and soon perceived a dark figure on the shore. It was the only survivor out of a crew of five, and this is the story he told us, with the necessary translation into English:

A SCENE AT NAIN, WHERE MR. SCHMITT HAS LABORED FOR MANY YEARS

"'When our boat was filled with water and we knew that all was lost, we commended ourselves to God. There was no panic, and the others urged me to use my kayak (a small Eskimo canoe) and save my life. We unlashed it from the boat and I got into it, and although each wave broke completely over me and threatened to smother me I eventually reached the island shore. I was wet through, and my clothes became stiff with the frost, but I persevered and walked two miles to a deserted house, where I found fuel and some scraps of food. Only on the evening of the third day I got back to that part of the island which faces the mission station, and there I made a fire in order that you might know and fetch me.'

"That is the type of men the Gospel produces in Labrador. Their forefathers were the terror of that bleak and inhospitable coast; they killed the first missionary who went out to them, but to-day they are not deficient in those qualities our Lord so much commended, renouncing self and living for others.

"I am sure it has been a pleasure and privilege and a great encouragement to me to have come into contact with you, and my parting prayer is that the Lord out of his fulness may reward you each and every one in his own good time for the interest and love you have shown in the Moravian Mission of Labrador."

AMONG THE WORKERS

—GOOD WORK was done by Mr. C. A. Erickson and Evangelist F. A. Grisenheimer during three weeks' services at Richland, Mo., the number of professed conversions standing at thirty—"Sunday schools and general religious work and workers taking on new life."

—ON MARCH 16 a new Italian Presbyterian Church was dedicated at 340-342 East One Hundred and Sixth Street, New York, of which the Rev. Francesco Pirazzini is pastor. The church has a membership of 329, and a Sunday school of 150; its organization was started in November, 1906.

—KUMASHIRO SAN, aged seventy-five years, is probably the oldest Christian in Japan. It was her father, when harbor-master, who found the Dutch Bible in the waters of the bay at Nagasaki after the massacre of the Christians, and when Christianity was under the ban in Japan. He was converted by his study of the Bible he had found, and brought up his little daughter to be a Christian from early childhood. She is now a member of the Nagasaki Seventh-day Adventist Church.

—SEATTLE SEMINARY AND COLLEGE last year saw the conversion of nearly all its two hundred students. For thirty years it has been a center of evangelistic effort, under the presidency of the Rev. Alexander Beers. Over fifty preachers, Christian teachers and missionaries have gone out from this institution to do splendid work in China, Japan, India, Africa and other lands. At Yeotmal, India, a school has been started having this seminary as its model, and steps are being taken to establish a similar institution at Osaka, Japan.

—CHELYAN, W. VA., HAS enjoyed one of the greatest revivals ever witnessed in that vicinity. The meetings were conducted by Rev. J. L. Dotson, pastor of the Chelyan M. E. Church, assisted by Rev. Kenton H. Bird, of Wilmore, Ky., and Professor R. C. Bird, of Staunton, Va. Among those who embraced religion were boys and girls in the morning of life, young men and women and a number of old people. During the meetings, there were about one hundred and forty professions of saving faith, and eighty members were added to the church.

—BISHOP ISAIAH B. SCOTT, Methodist Episcopal Bishop for Africa, writes to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, thanking its readers for their gifts for the purpose of placing a worker in Africa. He adds that the services of Mr. Samuel McKeown, of Illinois, have been secured, and that good results are expected from his labors among the natives on the Kroo coast of Liberia. "In his field there are thousands of heathen natives who are entirely dependent upon him and his native assistants for the Gospel and for what they are to receive educationally. There have been more than two thousand of them converted within the last two years, and I am hopeful that in the near future other thousands will be led to Christ."

—THE NORTHFIELD SCHOOLS this year are facing a financial problem. They were founded for poor, self-reliant, ambitious young people. Their aggregate annual enrolment has risen to 1,500, and the cost of maintenance (which was formerly $70,000 a year in excess of all income from vested funds) has risen to a point that calls for the raising of a larger amount than heretofore for current needs. A movement is now under way to interest all friends of the work in raising a fund of $75,000 before July 31. The Founder's Day address this year was given by Dr. A. F. Schauffler, of New York City. The new Administration Building, erected at a cost of $50,000, the gift of Mrs. J. S. Kennedy, of New York, was formally opened, and Mr. Ambert G. Moody received the keys, making appropriate remarks in accepting them. In the afternoon similar services were held at Mount Hermon, and the Schauffler Memorial Library, the gift of Mrs. A. F. Schauffler, of New York, was dedicated. The building, costing $50,000, was erected in memory of the father-in-law of the donor—the Rev. Wm. G. Schauffler, D.D., LL.D., the famous missionary to Turkey.

Suppose You Had a Foreign Chef

A chef, for instance, like one of ours—from the Hotel Ritz in Paris.

You could not then serve home-baked beans anywhere near like Van Camp's.

The reason is this:

Such beans must be baked in steam-heated ovens, without the steam touching the beans.

Otherwise the heat would crisp them. Or the steam-soaked beans would become mushy and broken.

Van Camp's beans reach you nut-like, mealy and whole. None crisped, none broken.

Yet they are made digestible by baking for hours at 245 degrees.

Van Camp's BAKED WITH TOMATO SAUCE PORK AND BEANS

"The National Dish"

Nor could you get such beans as ours, for we buy the choicest crops.

And we pick out by hand just the whitest and plumpest—beans of equal size.

Nor could you get a tomato sauce such as we bake with Van Camp's.

Such sauce must be made from whole, ripe tomatoes, grown from special seed, picked just at the proper time.

Let Us Bake Them

So it's wise, Mrs. Housewife, to let us do the baking.

We bring the beans to you ready to serve, with all the fresh oven flavor.

If you see that your grocer gives you Van Camp's, you will always serve the finest beans in the world.

You will have a dish, at little cost, which we spent 51 years in creating.

Three sizes:
10, 15 and 20 cents per can

THANKS FROM THE BALKANS

PASTOR FURNAJIEFF'S last letter comes to us dated from Djumaya Balla, Macedonia. It reads in part as foliows: "For the last two days we have been distributing aid, with the full co-operation of the city authorities and the Turkish mufti. The recipients of help were chiefly Turks. We had lists of the poorest sufferers of the war in the whole city and as they were called out they came to the president of the CHRISTIAN HERALD Relief Committee to receive help. To most of the families was given a dollar's worth of Bulgarian coin. Would that you could see them bare-footed in the snow, wearing rags, and with intent gaze at the committee, eagerly listening to hear their names called out. As soon as they stand before the committee, the first word is a prayer for a blessing from God on the donors, then a triumphant declaration that they'll get bread the first thing. As they withdraw from the courtyard where the relief workers are stationed they walk sideways, constantly keeping their faces toward the committee until they are out of the gate. The double salute, before and after taking the money, is common; kissing the hand that gives and pressing the coin to the heart with a bow and benediction are frequent manifestations of their thanks which it is impossible for us to prevent.

PASTOR FURNAJIEFF DISTRIBUTING RELIEF

"The city was stirred from one end to the other. Expressions of high commendation were offered by scores of people. The leaders of all the different nationalities that are represented in the mixed population of the city as well as the foreign representatives told us that no higher humanitarian work could be done at this time. All gave the work their approval and offered us the highest encouragement.

"The mufti, the chief Turkish priest, was with us all the time. If any man received a good practical impression in favor of Christianity it was he. In appreciation of this work of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, he gave us the enclosed expression of his gratitude. As it is in Turkish I will give a free translation into English. It is as follows:

"'As the religious representative of the Mohammedan population of the city of Djumaya, I desire to express to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD of New York the deepest gratitude of the Mohammedan population as well as my personal thanks for the help which its representatives were kind enough to distribute to our population, which suffered much in consequence of the war. (Signed) AMER LUTVY.'"

From the civic authorities of Djumaya Balla the following acknowledgment has been addressed to the editor, though meant for every contributor. It was written in English, and is printed verbatim:

"Editor Christian Herald, New York City, N. Y., U. S. America.

"DEAR SIR: On behalf of our city and citizens we express our heartfelt gratitude to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD and its friends for the generous help given to us through THE CHRISTIAN HERALD Relief Committee of Sofia. Its president, Pastor Furnajieff, and treasurer, Mr. Atanasoff, visited our city the last three days, and after studying the situation perfectly they distributed aid to more than three hundred families that are in utter destitution because of the war, and left a good sum of money in the hands of a representative committee of five for further distribution. Thank you very much. GEORGI STOILOFF, Mayor of City.

T. AMOWWBY, G. D. ZAHARIEFF, Assistants.

"Djumaya Balla, 10 Mars, 1913."

These thanks and acknowledgments mark the closing phase of our work in the Balkans. The full accounting for the Sofia Relief Committee's expenditure of the fund will appear soon.

else) and try with a pencil to trace a way out. We are not told in the Bible how many lies the sons of Jacob had to tell their father about that blood on the coat of Joseph.

Money lust is another fruit of envy. After Joseph's brothers had thrown him into the cistern they sat down to eat bread, probably some that Joseph had brought to them from their father. They saw a cloud of dust rising in the distance, and there soon came in view a line of camels loaded with treasure—precious spices—which merchants were carrying down to Egypt to sell. They remembered that such merchants often bought and sold slaves, and so it occurred to them that they might make some money out of Joseph, and Judah, the fourth oldest brother, said: "It would be better for us to sell him than to kill him." And so they bargained with the merchants, who agreed to give them twenty pieces of silver—about twelve dollars—as the price they would pay for Joseph. The sum was paid, and each brother held a share in his hand; only Reuben was not there. Calloused were the hands that held it by their toil, but more calloused with envy were the hearts that had entered into the scheme. We are not told that they had any regret whatever, only that Reuben, returning by way of the pit, hoping to rescue Joseph, found it empty. He was so dismayed that he tore his clothes and sought his brothers to tell them that Joseph had disappeared. His whole action showed that he was of better stuff than his brothers, or perhaps a little less steeped in envy. Undoubtedly his brothers told him about selling Joseph. If Reuben had been the true man that we would like to think he was, he would have bravely disclosed to his father what had been done with Joseph when the bloody coat was shown. He was not moved to do the right thing even by the great grief of his father, whose sorrow would have been greatly lessened if he had known that Joseph was still alive, though a slave. No, we cannot put Reuben upon a pedestal and say he was the best of the brothers; instead, we will say he was the weakest, for, having the desire to do right, he was too much of a coward to do it.

Let us make a diligent search of our own hearts to discover whether or not we have any of the symptoms of that fatal disease, envy. Do we feel unhappy when we hear some one else praised, particularly if that person is engaged in the same lines of work in which we are? Are we made unhappy when we see some one doing better work? Do we think a good deal about being unappreciated? Are we quite generally on the outlook for slights from friends? Do we attribute unworthy motives to those who are making a success of life? Do we hesitate to congratulate those who are sucessful? If we have any of these symptoms, let us earnestly seek to get more of the Spirit of God in our hearts to crowd out the spirit of Satan that has found lodgment within us.

Words of Encouragement

Mrs. A. H. L., Townsend, Mass., a reader of this journal, writes: "If one could only take one paper, I would say, let it be THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. It contains so much of what one needs to know, of religion, songs of the poets, of the up-to-date news of the world, of missions, of stories true to life, and of Bible truths explained, helpful lessons from great lives, comfort and prayers. I always read it page by page, from cover to cover.

"Thy prayers that are answered bring comfort
To the lonesome, the sorrowing, the sad;
Their mourning is turned to rejoicing,
And hearts are made happy and glad."

THE GRAIN AND THE GRINDERS

"Two women shall be grinding at the mill"

"Good measure, pressed down, shaken together, and running over"

VISITORS to Bible lands have often pointed out that much light is thrown upon many passages of Scripture by the scenes of daily life in Palestine to-day, for many of the customs of the Jews and their neighbors have changed little. Few are more interesting than those that may be seen near the Temple Area any morning in the week. This Temple Area is walled off from the other quarters of the city, and probably has more interest than any other one place in Jerusalem. One of the entrances to the site there, of the great temples of Solomon and Herod, is called the "Bab el Kattanin"—the Gate of the Cotton Merchants, because cotton was formerly sold there. But to-day other merchants have their booths in this vicinity, and among them those who buy and sell grain. One has only to watch these men handling wheat for a very few minutes before he realizes just what the Master meant when he said, "Good measure, pressed down, shaken together, and running over." (Luke 6: 38.) The wheat is brought in from the fields and villages in large cloth sacks, usually borne by slow-moving, awkward camels. It is then spread out in great heaps on blankets or on the stone pavement. The rule is that the buyer can have all that will possibly go into the measure, by any means whatever, and it is surprising how much wheat can be packed within a small compass. After the wooden measure has been dipped into the large heap, it is then pressed and packed and shaken, and at the last, when the grain has been compressed as much as possible with the hands, more grain is poured from another measure, until every particle that can find lodgment is in it, and the golden wheat streams down the sides. This concludes the bargain—"good measure, running over."

"Very unbusinesslike," a Westerner will say. Yes, it is; but it is also very picturesque and doubtless wholly satisfactory to those who measure in this fashion, as it has been for their fathers since the time of Christ, and long before. Time has not the same value there as here, and they always have plenty of leisure for bargaining and haggling.

Another saying of the Master that is frequently called to mind as one journeys is: "Two women shall be grinding at the mill; the one shall be taken, and the other left." In street corners, beside the low doors of stone houses or mud huts, women may be seen grinding, nearly always two of them working together. The mills are heavy and crude, all made of stone, except the wooden handle that is fitted into the upper stone by which the mill is turned. To grind any considerable quantity of wheat with such an implement is a task too hard for one woman.

The scene is not so common as it was fifteen years ago, but is not at all rare even to-day. Modern mills are now being put into the larger towns, and even in the villages one is coming to hear the hum of machinery and the cough of the gasoline engine.

Paint for Odd Jobs

Unpainted Screens will rust out in a summer when they should last several seasons.

Unpainted woodwork will warp and rot, because exposed to sun and rain.

Unpainted trellises and grape arbors will fall down and become useless.

Unpainted things lose that spick-span newness and get beyond repair.

These are some of the odd jobs around your home that need to be attended to about this time of the year. A little care, a small amount of the right kind of paint or enamel will repay the cost many times. All this waste can be avoided if you use

ACME QUALITY

Paints, Enamels, Stains, Varnishes

Acme Quality Screen Enamel is a preventive of rust on window and door screens and a protection to the frame. It does not clog the meshes. Comes in green and black in cans ready to use and is easily applied. If it is a surface to be painted, enameled, stained, varnished or finished in any way, there is an Acme Quality kind to fit the purpose.

If you take pride in keeping up your home, we have some books that will tell you the possibilities and beautiful effects obtained by using Acme Quality. Send for them. They are

THE GLAD GAME

BY MARGARET E. SANGSTER, JR.

HAVE you read the Pollyanna book? The happy story of the glad little girl who brought sunshine and light and laughter into so many cloud-filled lives? The book that, from one brown-tinted cover to the other, is filled with the music of song-birds and the sweetness of flowers? Because, friends of mine, if you haven't read the story you must read it right off! And then you'll learn to play the "glad game."

Shall I tell you just a little about the "glad game"? This is the story told in just as few short words as I can possibly squeeze it down to.

Margaret E. Sangster, Jr.

Pollyanna was a poor minister's daughter. Though his little girl always had the necessaries of life, she had none of the luxuries. She really never wanted things much until one day she suddenly felt the desire strong in her to have a doll—a beautiful doll, such as other little girls had. So she went to her father and told him all about it. Now, the father wished to give his little daughter what she wanted, as all good fathers do; but every single round copper penny had to be spent for bread and shoes and other "necessary" (don't you hate the word?) things for Pollyanna. So he told his little daughter that he would ask the kind people who sent boxes to them to please send a doll the next time they made up a box. And Pollyanna was so glad that she prayed to God, asking him to be sure about the doll.

At last the box came, and, full of eagerness, the minister and his child opened it. On top of everything lay a crisp little note, and underneath the note a pair of sad little crutches. So Pollyanna's father opened the letter and read a message something like this: "We are sorry that no doll was brought for the box, but here are a pair of crutches; perhaps the little girl can use them."

That sounds like a rather gloomy beginning for a "glad game"; but it was the real, true beginning. Of course Pollyanna cried and cried; and her father took her into his arms and tried to comfort her, although he had a dull, hard ache in his heart, too. Do you know what he said?

"Why, Pollyanna, you ought to be glad that you don't need the crutches." Which statement was happily true.

And after that Pollyanna played the "game" at every opportunity. But I will not tell any more, lest I might spoil the story for you, for you must read it yourselves.

I wish every one of you would try to play the "glad game." This very morning I'm trying to play it myself. Just now my tooth is aching, oh, so badly! And my eye feels all drawn down and my cheek feels all drawn up; and I'm perfectly sure I look like a squirrel with a nut in one side of its face. Did you ever feel that way? Well, do you know what I'm doing? I am saying very, very softly under my breath: "I'm glad that only one of my teeth aches; it would be so much worse if my whole face was sore, instead of only one side." Maybe the "glad game" will do me some good too.

You did not know that there was a real little Pollyanna, did you? But there is one, the little girl who posed for the Pollyanna pictures, and who looks just like them. I went down to see her the other day, and she told me a few things about herself. Do you know what she said that delighted me more than I can tell? This is it:

"You know I just love the Pollyanna book, and" (here her voice dropped very low and her tone grew confidential) "I like the 'glad game,' too. I'm trying to play it myself!"

If you had met the little girl, you would say with me that she was not going to have a very hard time playing it. Because when you look at her big picture eyes, you can just see the gladness shining out of them.

There are lots of things to be glad about—little things that you never even think of, and great big things that you can't help seeing. There are days that seem brimful of troubles; and each trouble, no matter how large it is, can be made a good point in the "glad game." That is the nicest thing about the "game." It is so very adjustable.

When it rains and you have to wade through miles of slush on your way to school or business, be glad that it doesn't rain every day; and be very glad that you are not a "shut-in"; but that you can wade through the wettest slush. When a cake burns and you scrape all the black, horrid bottom off of it, be glad that the top isn't burned too. When a dress is too short for you and you have to let down a tuck at the last minute, be glad that there is a tuck to let down. And if your best chum gets angry at you and says a few childish things that, of course, she couldn't mean, be mighty glad that you have a chum at all. Oh! there are so many thousands of things to be glad for.

Let's make the "game" a habit, you and I. When we feel angry about something and we know that our cheeks are red, and our eyes are bright with temper, we will bite our lips, and clench our hands tight, and try to be glad of—anything! It will be mighty hard at first, for we are very far from being saints, and many times, perhaps, we will fall by the wayside of our good resolutions. But then one day it will come over us that we are glad, without any trouble or exertion. And we will probably stay glad.

Now, I am going to repeat my prescription for the "glad game." First of all, get Pollyanna and read it, and let all of the words in the book sink in deeply. Read it alone at first, cuddled down in your favorite armchair, with the light falling on the pages of the story. Then read it to your family and to your friends. And then, when all of you know it, try to play the "glad game" together. And I am sure that all at once your road in life will be smoother, and that the rainbows will come quickly after the showers.

(Oh! by the way, I want to tell you; my tooth has almost stopped aching.)

Wonderful "Cut-outs" from China

FROM one of our American missionaries in China THE CHRISTIAN HERALD has received a very remarkable native art collection, the handiwork of carefully trained Chinese women. These are what, for the want of a better name, may be designated as "cut-outs." They represent flowers, trees, vases, plants in blossom, animals, birds, insects, curious looking little Chinese children and a large variety of other objects. The work is so dainty and delicate and the art so amazingly fine that every single "cut-out" is a thing of joy and beauty to the beholder. To any one who loves to look at beautiful things of a distinctly artistic character these "cut-outs" will give great pleasure. They are on native paper and are frequently used in Chinese homes as ornaments on doors and window glass. Any one can buy them from THE CHRISTIAN HERALD at prices ranging from ten to fifty cents each as long as they last. The money resulting from their sale will be turned over to Elizabeth P. Hartwell, who sent these cut-outs from China, for use in her mission work in Shantung Province.

Here's the Truth About Dyes for Home

Our experience of over thirty years has proven that no one dy successfully color every fabric.

There are two classes of fabrics: animal fibre fabrics, and vegetable fibre fabrics.

Wool and Silk are animal fibre fabrics. Cotton and Linen are vegetable fibre fabrics. "Union" or "Mixed" goods are 60% to 80% Cotton —so must be treated as vegetable fibre fabrics.

Vegetable fibres require one class of dye, and animal fibres another and a radically different class of dye. As proof—we call attention to the fact that manufacturers of woolen goods use one class of dye, while manufacturers of cotton use an entirely different class of dye.

THE COLUMBUS, OHIO, REVIVAL

EVANGELIST SUNDAY'S campaign in Columbus, Ohio, has just closed with very remarkable results. Sixty-one churches co-operated. Rev. John W. Day, pastor of the First Presbyterian Church, 354 Wilson Avenue, was president of the evangelistic committee which represented these churches. The meetings were conducted for seven weeks, were attended by upwards of 800,000 people and resulted in a definite profession of faith by over 18,000 people, 10,000 of whom have already united with some of the churches. The meetings are being continued in a majority of the churches. There is a large organization of active personal workers. One class of working women has an enrolment of over 1,200.

Forty-two thousand women attended the revival meetings on the day when a sermon for "women only" was scheduled, the same sermon being preached four times. On the last day, at four different meetings, over 2,000 professed saving faith. Special sermons were preached by Mr. Sunday at Marysville and Delaware, Ohio, in the forenoons only. This was made possible through the use of special trains that were put at the disposal of the committee. Delegations came from cities and towns forty, fifty and seventy-five miles away to attend the revival meetings.

The Pay of Evangelists

HAS the preaching of the Gospel already become commercialized? For every phase and question concerning the "life that now is, and the life which is to come," there is a clear and definite "Thus saith the Lord" in the inspired Word. In Matt. 10: 8 we read, "Freely ye have received, freely give." Isa. 55: 1, "Ho, every one that thirsteth, come ye to the waters, and he that hath no money; come ye, buy, and eat; yea, come, buy wine and milk without money and without price." To what part of the present activities of our churches will the Scripture quoted apply? "Wherefore do ye spend money for that which is not bread? and your labor for that which satisfieth not?" Are we feeding upon the true bread and water of life, or are we feeding upon husks? How shall we know? By accepting the gift offered to us in Luke 11: 9-13 and James 1: 5-7. We do well to ponder the words of I Tim. 3: 1-7; Titus 1: 5-11; II Tim. 3: 1-7; Acts 8: 18-21; I Cor. 4; I Thess. 2: 9; II Thess. 3: 8-10; Luke 9: 58.

Nation's Voice on Rome

An Episcopalian Protest Against Change of Name—Ultra "High Church" Element Urged to Go to Rome

THE Rev. Dr. A. G. Cummins, Protestant Episcopal rector of Christ Church, Poughkeepsie, N. Y., has asked the members of the "High Church" party in that communion to betake themselves into the Roman Church without delay. This request was made in an article in his parish paper for the last week in March. This article was the more important because Christ Church is one of the most prominent parishes in the diocese of New York, and Dr. Cummins is a member of the standing committee, an authority co-ordinate with the authority of the bishopric.

The subject of the article is the recent "going over to Rome" of two Anglican religious communities, one of twenty-two men and the other of thirty-four women, whose houses were located respectively at Caldey Island, off the Welsh coast, and at Milford Haven in the same principality. These people had called themselves "Benedictines," and in February they sought admission into that Order of the Roman Church. Last year, according to the London Tablet, March 8, 1913, they applied to the Archbishop of Canterbury and then, at his suggestion, to the Bishop of Oxford for "episcopal supervision and guidance." The community, it plainly appears, had been "brought up on Roman Catholic food," and the "breviary, missal and devotional books contained doctrines not compatible with the teaching of the Anglican Church, e.g., the doctrine of papal supremacy." So Bishop Gore quite naturally told them that their faith and practice "could not be justified on any other than a strictly papal basis of authority," and they then proceeded to ask the Roman authorities to receive them into that church.

Dr. Cummins said in his paper that the Anglican Church is stronger without those "Benedictines," and that his own communion would be stronger without the Order of the Holy Cross. He mentioned the Community of the Resurrection, who preached at Trinity Church, New York City, during Lent, and objected to the title "Father" having been applied to individual members in Bishop Greer's official paper. He used the word "Catholic" to indicate the High Church men in his own church, and also to show his dislike to them, not as men, but as zealots in the wrong communion. He says:

We have come to a critical moment. A party fight has been begun by the "Catholics." The era of toleration, of complacent satisfaction over the cessation of strife, has been brought to an end. Either this church is to remain Protestant, or it is to be made "Catholic," the matter of a change of its name is only an entering wedge. Back of the wedge's point lie all manner of "Catholic" doctrines and practices.

There is and long has been less mutual sympathy between "Catholic" and Protestant elements in the Episcopal Church than between either element and its corresponding outside church—Roman Catholic on the one hand and Presbyterian on the other. These two elements, the high and the low, we may forcibly hold together, but we cannot make them mingle. Why should they be held together at all? There is no place in the Protestant Episcopal Church for "Catholics." The present situation, now that the attack has been made, is of necessity transient. It is no longer tenable.

Dr. Cummins, further on, put this request to the "Catholics" in his church:

Follow the Caldey Islanders, dear fellow Catholics. We shall grieve at the loss of numbers, but rejoice in your gain. There is an acknowledged Catholic Church. That is surely where all true Catholics should be. Will you not, O "Catholic" friends, do as Caldey has done? Resolve highly and firmly to accept with its fascinations the discipline of Rome, unpleasant though it be for those accustomed to the freedom of Protestantism. Take the bitter with the sweet. It needs only a little courage, a little consistency. Why expect to have the sweet without the bitter? Please let us Protestants alone, let us enjoy our errors in peace. We shall love you much better when you are on the other side of the gulf.

A day or two later, fifteen prominent Episcopalian clergymen of New York sent a letter to Bishop Daniel S. Tuttle of Missouri, presiding bishop of the Protestant Episcopal Church in America, making a strong protest against any change whatever in the name of the denomination. Two changes had been suggested—one to strike out the word "Protestant" and the other to change the name to "American Catholic." The signatures affixed to the letter were impressive, including Bishop Courtney, rector of St. James's Church; William T. Crocker, rector Church of the Epiphany; William M. Grosvenor, dean Cathedral of St. John the Divine; W. N. Guthrie, rector St. Marks-in-the-Bouwerie; Henry Mottet, rector Church of the Holy Communion; H. P. Nichols, rector Holy Trinity Church; Leighton Parks, rector St. Bartholomew's Church; Howard C. Robbins, rector of the Church of the Incarnation; Karl Reiland, rector of St. George's Church; Theodore Sedgwick, rector of Calvary Church; Herbert Shipman, rector Church of the Heavenly Rest; Charles Lewis Slattery, rector of Grace Church; Ernest M. Stires, rector of St. Thomas's Church; George Alexander Strong, rector of Christ Church, and George R. Van de Water, St. Andrew's, Harlem.

Perhaps the most vital paragraph of this letter is this:

We do not undertake to discuss herein the adequacy of our present name, though we insist that there is a vast difference between the question of the church's wisdom in its original selection and the proposal to drop the name which the church has honorably borne since our people became a nation. We warn our people against any step which would turn from us the important tide of immigration from Northern Europe, most definitely Protestant in its character, and many intelligent people who came to us from Southern Europe and who have a deep-seated antipathy to any name which suggests to them ecclesiastical tyranny.

They further express the apprehension that a change of name would be likely to alienate 20,000,000 Protestant Christians in this country who now have a "fraternal regard for our church."

The Vatican on "Heretics"

CARDINAL Peter Respighi, Vicar-General of Rome, died March 22. It was to Cardinal Respighi that Pope Leo XIII wrote his famous letter of August 19, 1900, condemning the religious and philanthropic work done in Rome by members of "heretical sects, the multiform progeny of Protestantism," who were "solely intent on depriving the people of that religion which has even been declared the religion of the state." The success of this propaganda was, moreover, attested by Pope Leo's describing it as "the free and progressive development of heresy in this holy city." The opening paragraph of the Bull In Coena Domini of Urban VIII shows how that Pope regarded Protestants: "On the authority of Almighty God, the Father, Son and Holy Ghost, by the authority of the blessed apostles Peter and Paul, and by our own authority, we excommunicate and anathematize all Hussites, Wickliffites, Lutherans, Zwinglians, Calvinists, Huguenots, Anabaptists, Trinitarians and apostates from the Christian faith, by whatever name they may be called. and to whatever sect they may belong."

Fifty-Six Thousand Nuns Here

Including postulants, there are in the United States to-day more than fifty-six thousand nuns. They conduct 700 academies for girls, 285 orphan asylums, 100 homes for the aged, 300 hospitals and several hundred insane and foundling asylums, protectories, reformatories, parish schools, etc., in this country.—Boston Pilot, January 11, 1913.

No-Rim-Cut Tires 10% Oversize

They Now Occupy the Throne

Goodyear tires, after fourteen years, hold top place in Tiredom. After men have used two million of them, they outsell all others. And by far.

Why don't you find out this year why so many men prefer them?

Visible Savings

No-Rim-Cut tires can't rim-cut. One glance will tell you that. With old-type tires, 23 per cent. are ruined in this way.

You can also see that these tires are 10 per cent. oversize. And that, on the average, adds 25 per cent. to the tire mileage.

These visible savings alone are sufficient to win you to these tires.

The Invisible

But there are other savings, due to years and years of research and experiment.

Scores of experts, mostly technical graduates, devote their whole time to bettering Goodyear tirés.

They have compared, by actual mileage, 240 formulas and fabrics.

On this department we are spending still $100,000 yearly, all to cut down cost of tire upkeep.

That's how Goodyears won. That's why hundreds of thousands of motorists now insist on Goodyear tires.

They mean no petty saving. The difference will amaze you. Ask any user, or go see these tires.

Write for the Goodyear Tire Book—14th-year edition. It tells all known ways to economize on tires.

31 Years Without a Dollar Lost to Investors

THIS is the record of S. W. Straus & Co. and should serve as the best introduction to the readers of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, of this House and the securities we offer.

We have maintained this record through our policy of selling none but thoroughly safeguarded securities, and of protecting the interests of our clients at all times and under all conditions.

FIRST MORTGAGE BONDS

5½ to 6%

We offer first mortgage bonds, directly secured by absolute first liens on the highest class of newly improved, income-producing, centrally-located Chicago real estate, netting the investor 5½ to 6 per cent.

It is our established custom to repurchase securities from clients, when requested, at par and accrued interest, less the handling charge of one per cent., thus giving reasonable assurance of their convertibility.

DEPARTMENT OF INVESTMENT COUNSEL

This department is maintained for the benefit of our regular readers; the service is offered entirely free of cost to them, and all correspondence is strictly personal and confidential, in so far as the identity of the inquirer is concerned. Always enclose letter postage and write name and address plainly, addressing your inquiry to Financial Editor, CHRISTIAN HERALD, Bible House, New York City.

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD does not in any way guarantee investment advertisements. It is impossible to do so, because our subscribers have far more money to invest than our total capital would permit us to refund. We do all we can, however, to make sure of the integrity of our advertisers before admitting them to our columns. Also, any advice given is an expression of our conclusions, based upon information we believe to be reliable; but we must not be held responsible, should any loss arise from its acceptance.

ANSWERS TO FINANCIAL QUERIES

MISS T., CONNECTICUT. I should most certainly sell the stock and put the proceeds into a less speculative security. I own up that the stock pays well and that the company is well managed, so far as we can judge from the company's reports, but I am afraid that, sooner or later, all the schemes floated by the interests back of this concern will become top-heavy and tumble like a house of cards. I shall be glad to advise with you further in regard to the investment of your funds, if you desire it.

A., OHIO. There is little I can do in way of aid in the matter of your investment with the realty company. If you had conferred with the writer in regard to the exchange of bonds with this concern before you had actually made the trade, you would have been advised not to do it. However, if it is possible that the company in any way misrepresented matters to you I suggest that you write to them and demand the return of your bonds.

REV. B., NEW MEXICO. I do not find, after consulting several firms in Wall Street, that there is any possibility of effecting sales for any of your stocks, with the possible exception of the International Lumber and Development Company.

I., ARIZONA. I have carefully noted the contents of your interesting letter on sub-irrigation and the Florida Everglade Land Sales Company. I should be very glad to comply with your request for the information, but the matter is beyond the province of this department. Indeed, it would be like "carrying coals to Newcastle" for a man in New York to instruct a man in Phœnix, Ariz., regarding irrigation enterprises, for there is not a city in the United States which has been more abundantly blessed with the benefits of irrigation than Phoenix. THE CHRISTIAN HERALD cannot advise on land propositions other than to caution our friends—never buy land not personally examined and not then unless you are fully competent to judge its value.

MRS. G., MARYLAND. Under no circumstances do I recommend the stock you have under consideration. There are so many ways that I believe far safer to invest your money and secure a fair rate of income. I refer to the securities that are listed and traded in on the New York Stock Exchange or through the great banking firms who offer these securities to the public and who transact business through the mails. You should write to a number of these firms. Tell them how much money you want to invest and they will send you lists of securities applicable for said amount and suitable for a woman's investment. Select tentatively several issues that look good to you and take the matter up with me again before you make a decision.

H., NEW YORK. The only reason I can assign for your not seeing Consolidated Arizona "new" stock quoted in the reports from Wall Street in the daily papers is that arrangements with the Curb authorities may not have been completed for the listing. The old stock is listed and was quoted to-day .25 bid and .37½ offered.

P., NEBRASKA. If I had $6,000 to invest and were willing to assume a slight speculative risk, I should consider expending at least a portion of my funds in railroad stocks, which may be purchased at prices to yield approximately 6 per cent. I should select:

10 Atchison,
10 Baltimore & Ohio,
10 Chesapeake & Ohio,
10 Norfolk & Western,
10 St. Paul,
10 Southern Railway Rfd.

The above schedule represents an expenditure of about $5,750 figured at closing prices to-day and the return at the present rate will be about 5.93 per cent. I should also write to the financial firms whose advertisements appear in this issue of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. These firms are believed to be honorable banking concerns.

6% For Your Savings

Two months ago we told CHRISTIAN HERALD investors about The Trend of Investment. This month we offer you at 100 and accrued interest, yielding 6%, for immediate or May investment, a prime first mortgage 6% investment bond.

This bond is a direct lien at ABOUT 50 per cent. of net CASH cost, on a thriving, prosperous public utility corporation property in one of the richest sections of the United States. First of all, it is a GOOD, SOUND security—next, it pays as HIGH A RATE as you can obtain on the best class of honds.

Learn about this unusual Investment opportunity, and ask us to send you Circular CH, fully describing it. Remember also to ask for any advice you may desire on investments you now hold. We are glad to do this gratis.

DEPARTMENT OF INVESTMENT COUNSEL and will assist any CHRISTIAN HERALD reader in investment matters if requested.

B., PENNSYLVANIA. I have taken up the matter of irrigation bonds with Farson, Son & Co. Mr. Farson recommends that you entrust your bonds with the Bondholders' Committee, and he tells me that there are no explanatory facts he can give you that are not contained in the Bondholders' Agreement.

E., MASSACHUSETTS. I do not recommend the 6 per cent. bonds you have under consideration. The interests back of the land company have floated about ten different more or less successful corporations, but there is no assured market for the securities they have sold, and the methods employed in marketing the various issues of stocks and bonds have been severely criticized. Correspond with the financial firms whose advertisements appear in this section. They offer securities which are far more attractive than the bonds you inquire about.

MRS. W., NEW YORK. St. Louis, Iron Mountain & Southern Ry. (River & Gulf Division) first mortgage 4s are considered a good investment security. I prefer, however, St. Louis, Iron Mountain and Southern Ry. General 5s. This issue is much more active and the price stays firmer. A year ago at this time these bonds were selling around 106⅛. They now may be bought for 103. Lake Shore 4s, 1931, at 90⅝ are also an exceedingly good investment. This bond is active and the range of price fluctuations is small. Railway bonds are now selling much under the prices of a year ago, and I think are now about touching bottom. I do not recommend the speculative bond issues for a woman's investment, however attractive they appear at the prevailing low prices.

H., OHIO. I see nothing attractive in the industrial stocks mentioned in your letter, and advise you to leave them alone. This advice in no ways reflects on the companies, which I believe to be perfectly solvent and successful—in a limited way, but the fact remains that the market for such securities is extremely limited and should you desire to sell your stocks you would probably not be able to do so. This would be embarrassing and to put oneself into such a position is needless. There are no less than half a dozen railway issues that may be bought at par or very near to par that yield 6 per cent. There are also a dozen attractive speculative railway bond issues that may be had at prices to net approximately 6 per cent. on the investment, and there are also as many more attractive puhlic service corporation stocks and bond issues that return 6 per cent. on the investment. Many of these securities are traded in on the New York Stock Exchange. When you can buy such investment securities, possessing, as they do, established selling market and assured capacity for earnings, what is the use of putting your money in enterprises that offer no market for the stocks, and, being competitive industrial enterprises, cannot assure investors a continuation of dividends through periods of lean years?

T., NEW YORK. The only advice I can give you is to suggest that you write to the following: Mr. R. Franksen, Consul General, 11 Broadway, New York City; Mr. M. Clarholm, Consul, 17 State Street, New York City. The first named address is the address of the German Consulate, and the second the Swedish.
